Poe Brought to Life Through Genius of Henry B. Walthall

No tragedy sears the soul of man as the loss of the woman he loves.

Edgar Allan Poe, in the death of his wife, drained to the lees the cup of sorrow. To his grief was the added sting of death by cold and starvation.

Through night's long hours he knelt by her body in a bare, wind-swept room, his spirit broken, his soul tasting the dregs of uttermost despair.

Out of heart-rending tragedy his genius spoke in "The Raven." He probed to the depths those unfathomable mysteries of life. He pictured the greatest happiness that comes to man—Love, and the greatest desolation—Death. This is why "The Raven" strikes straight to the heart.

Henry B. Walthall, the image of Poe, a man of the same mold and temperament, who thinks and feels as did Poe, interprets America's greatest poet as no other living being could.

His genius sparkles on the screen as did Poe's in literature. He gives to the world a living Poe, the Poe of Love and Song, the Poe of Hope and Happiness, the Poe of Desolation and Despair.

This great presentation is embodied in Essanay's six-act photoplay, depicting the life of Poe, as written by George C. Hazelton and directed by Charles J. Brabin. Mr. Walthall is ably supported by Warda Howard and an all star cast.

J. WARREN KERRIGAN
In The Most Novel Series Serial Ever Filmed

MOVING UNIVERSAL PICTURES

READ . .
The Moving Picture Weekly if you want the livest, snappiest comment and news of the film world that is being published today.

HERE'S the biggest attraction of the season. The great J. Warren KERRIGAN in a superb 3 weeks' series serial, being his "New Adventures of Terence O'Rourke." If ever there was a chance to "Clean up" here it is. Kerrigan in this new novelty 3 weeks' series serial is our answer to the big demand for this popular star in a serial. It will be released immediately following the last episode of "The Broken Coin." Considering the star J. Warren Kerrigan—the author of the stories, Louis Joseph Vance—the director, Otis Turner—the lavish settings and huge production expenses, this serial stands without question as the biggest money getting attraction of the year. More Big Recruits in the Triangle Regiment

Last week you learned of some of our latest enlistments—men who will cash in on their TRIANGLE faith. In addition—

Probably you've heard of B. S. Moss, of the Regent, Hamilton, Jefferson, and Eighty-sixth Street Theatres in New York City. You couldn't sell Moss a pig in a poke. You couldn't pass a counterfeit promise on him. He buys with his eyes open every time. Moss comes across with more than One Hundred Thousand Dollars a year for TRIANGLE PLAYS.

And then there's Picker and Bennett in the Bronx. They have the Burland Theatre. They know plays when they see them—and they saw the TRIANGLE product at the Knickerbocker Theatre. They came right in and signed up. They'll pay considerably more than Thirty Thousand Dollars a year into the TRIANGLE strongbox. You could pay three Cabinet Officers in Washington with that.

A lot of you know Shakman, of the Eighty-first Street Theatre in New York. Shakman is proud of his theatre, and he wants the best—so he's paying the stipend of another three Cabinet Officers—well over Thirty Thousand—to get TRIANGLE PLAYS.

Moss—Picker & Bennett—Shakman—have reasons that have led them thus far—good reasons, and every one of them is a TRIANGLE reason.

What kind of reasons have you?

An Apology to the Trade

Following the publication of numerous news items concerning the acquisition by this Company of the Augustus Thomas collection of standard two dollar plays propositions have been received by wire and letter from a large number of distributors seeking exclusive territorial rights for long periods.

Realizing a false impression has been created we hasten to assure the trade that, contrary to precedent, the Raver-Thomas productions will not be sold until fully completed and offered for review and criticism by the press.

By this method, both buyer, renter and exhibitor may determine the importance of a Raver offering without being obliged to make a blind investment as has been the custom in the past.

Fully appreciating the keen interest shown by the flattering overtures already made, we prefer, however, to abide by our original policy.

"MOTION PICTURE NEWS"

JUST so we have progressed, or, at least, we are aiming with tremendous ambition and blind extravagance to progress in other essentials to the better picture.

To attain atmosphere nothing is allowed to stand in the way. If it exists—or even is believed to exist—in Texas, Alaska, the West Indies, Martinique—an entire company is sent to get it, and the big burden of expense cheerfully assumed.

Is a single railroad scene needed? All right! It's had; and here's the bill: $558.35 for nine cars for forty-five miles.

IF the proper setting can't be found, or can't be found easily, it is built. An entire street is not an uncommon enterprise now in the way of sets. The lumber bill in the. . .

This editorial comment appeared in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week, and was based on an article appearing in the NEW YORK TIMES, Sunday, October 17th, which occupied over a column of space and told of the tremendous efforts of the Equitable to secure local color and atmosphere in order that

Facts and Comments

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD sincerely deplores the lack of harmony in the ranks of Ohio's organized exhibitors. In Ohio, above all other states, the exhibitors ought to be united. Censorship is an evil which cannot be fought successfully except by a united exhibiting body. Any question of petty personal pride ought not be allowed to interfere with the promotion of the general welfare. Ohio must purge itself of the disgrace of censorship. We feel that it is not necessary to apportion the blame. We only hope that common sense and common interests will result in reasonable concessions on both sides and in a perfect union of all interests.

AN editorial writer in one of the daily papers in this city prophesies that there will never be "a Shakespeare of the (venia sit verbo) movies." Of course not, there could not be. In the development of the photodrama, however, we hope to attain great heights in the future and we have no doubt that the world will sooner or later hear from a dramatic genius whose fame will rest on the works of the screen.

IN SEVERAL cities there have recently been special children's performances under the auspices of the superintendents of schools. Programs were selected by the school authorities, consisting in the main of educational subjects and a sprinkling of comedy. Most of these performances took place in the morning and in theaters of large seating capacity. Of course, these performances are a great aid to the pupils in their various courses of education. They have an additional value to the industry at large through the advertising they invariably get in the daily press. It is well from time to time to emphasize to the general public the educational value of the motion picture. It helps in every campaign against censorship.

OUR distinguished friend, William A. Brady, cries out in despair and urges the American people generally to "save" the drama from the motion pictures. "Who will save her"—that's the question and the circumambient air wafts back no cheering response. "What are moving pictures?" shrilly asks Brother Brady. And then he furnishes his own despairing answer. "The rehashing of every old situation the drama has ever known. If pictures go on as they have been going it will mean the death of the spoken drama." It is inconceivable that the spoken drama will ever approach the motion picture in popularity and in influence and it is equally inconceivable that man's appreciation for the spoken drama will ever die out. If moving pictures are nothing but the "rehashing of every old situation the drama has ever known," Mr. Brady is in a peculiarly happy position to find a remedy.

EXHIBITORS who take an active and intelligent interest in the civic life of their community not only benefit themselves but are a distinct gain and advantage to the whole business. We have recently met a number of such exhibitors and we have noticed that the motion picture in their towns is respected and quite exempt from political persecution either in the shape of meddling censorship or oppressive regulations. Exhibitors as a rule are busy men, but participation in the affairs of their town or city pays as an investment. Even a passive membership in the social and civic clubs of the home town will be found highly useful and profitable.

* * *

MANY exhibitors tell us that they are constantly asked by friends who have a little money to invest as to the chances of speculating in motion pictures or in other words in buying stock. Stock selling schemes with a moving picture basis are springing up in even the remotest corners of the country. These exhibitors will do well in declining to give advice. An era of speculation is not likely to do the motion picture much good.

THE ATTENTION of our readers is once more respectfully called to notices on Page 762 of our issue dated October 30 and on Page 1054 of issue dated October 30a. We believe this new arrangement will benefit all readers and subscribers.

The American Hamlet*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

HOW much of Shakespeare lives for us? Whatever his theme, whether he depicted madness, despair, jealousy, revenge, it matters little in comparison with his marvelous idealizations of human character. These great idealizations, Hamlet, Othello, Shylock and the rest are burned into the memory of many millions who know very little about the plays themselves. The people of his fancy mean something. They are types. They represent dominating or thwarting impulses, drawn from the Bard's comprehensive observation of human nature as revealed in his time and in himself. Of all these, Hamlet remains the most fascinating, possibly because he is each one of us as we do not know ourselves or, more likely, as we do not want others to know us.

Commonly, and quite naturally, we ascribe to our heroes the virtues we admire but do not possess, at least not so markedly as to attract general attention. We portray them as men of courage, decision, strength and tremendous energy. Difficulties are only placed in the hero's way to be overcome. He may even exhibit weakness at the beginning, such as the cowardice of inexperience, but he ultimately triumphs as we would like to do under similar circumstances. Thus the insistence on a happy ending often becomes the deadly enemy of truth. Just for the sake of variety it might not be out of place to lay bare the human soul as we secretly recognize it, a composite of aspiration and self-doubt.

Perhaps the reason that there has never been a great novel distinctly American is because our authors are given to the portrayal of the hero that should be and dare not let us see themselves as they really are, dare not wound their own self-respect. Dissimulation is so nearly universal, every man pretending to be what he is not, that the world's real nobleman is he who sincerely and openly admits his faults; but where is he? Diogenes has been vainly searching for him these many centuries. We are even hypocritical about the natural kindness of our hearts at times. We openly laugh at the low comedy, yet, when our sympathies are touched by a tender bit of pathos, we are ashamed to shed tears.

There are recompenses in egotism. The man who thinks he is all that he should be, disagreeable as he may prove to others, is a source of tremendous satisfaction to himself, but he is no Hamlet. "I am very proud, revengeful, ambitious," says the noble Dane, "with more offences at my beck than I have thoughts to put them in, imagination to give them shape, or time to act them in." The mind that framed Hamlet's utterance had grown to deep self-knowledge. Resenting injustice, sensitive to slights, wounded by the malicious envy of the less capable, Shakespeare may have tormented himself with futile schemes of revenge and then realized the pitiful weakness of such moments. "What should such fellows as I do, crawling between heaven and earth?"

So with the noblest minds! Ever reaching upward to the unattainable, ever conscious of that too solid flesh which refuses to "melt, thaw and resolve itself into a dew," the few great men on whom the world must depend for progress are often those most painfully conscious of their imperfections. They live in dread of their frailties, recognizing them as so many secret enemies, and they brood long before undertaking this or that tremendous enterprise, where less intellectual men would not hesitate. In the Hamlets of our own day is lying fallow some of the richest material for dramatic characterization.

Is there such a thing as an American Hamlet? An author who confuses the inheritance of physical traits with the formation of character might ask if there is such a thing as an American. One has already done so in stating that we are descendants of Europe, "we have her traditions in our blood, and are made up of the same mental ingredients." "Traditions in the blood" are unknown to science, but there is small doubt that we have much in common with our European friends so far as what is known as "human nature" is concerned. We may be as avaricious as they are, but we spend more liberally. More splendid public institutions are endowed by wealthy men in this country than in all Europe combined. Few national contributions have come to us from the old country in our acute moments of suffering, yet we have ever been the first to give generously to those in need abroad.

We are for America first, last and all the time, and may seem to be as ingenuously selfish as other nations in that respect, but the sentiment is not a surface one—there are big and sound principles underneath. Our strength as a nation lies in the maintenance of all that is just and right in those principles, it is true, but even more than that—we have become a dominant civilizing force and should exercise the native energy of which we are so proud, not for the defense of this or that government, but for the people of less advanced forms of government against the brutal cliques, with traditions that are not in our blood, who are urging kind-hearted and well-meaning "subjects" to mutilate and destroy one another. If we would destroy the greatest evil the world has ever known, we must hit straight at the root of it and HIT HARD. The reason we do not is to be found in Hamlets' character.

If it were possible to embody in one individual our national characteristics, our strong points and our weaknesses, we might therefrom evolve the American Hamlet. It is known that we are capable of tremendous energy, but that is supposed to be in chasing the almighty dollar. Wherein that is an American peculiarity any one who has traveled abroad would find it difficult to decide. Some Europeans even make war for the indemnity there is in it. Our attitude toward the foreign nations at war may give us a clearer view of ourselves than we at first realize.

In trying to be intellectually fair to all, we are showing little of the high spirit and passionate resolution of those splendid Americans of more than a century ago, who made it possible for us to enjoy peace and happiness at this moment. We talk of the war as though those men were seeking it who are giving up all they hold dear in a magnificent struggle for human liberty. We do not seem to realize that they are fighting for the principles that make our own survival possible. We have Hamlet's recoil from bloodshed, an intellectual tendency to talk about it a great deal, combined with a supreme inability to make up our own minds as to exactly what we should do. Is it possible that a tendency toward philosophy is weaning us from our heart promptings, making us a race of Hamlets?

More Harmony Needed

By W. Stephen Bush.

NO AMOUNT of discouragement will ever prevent The Moving Picture World from championing the cause of the organized exhibitor. In lending our influence to the cause of organization we only follow the traditions of the paper and the principles and policies of the founder.

It is undeniably true that the cause of organization has made slow progress. The ideal organization containing as members more than fifty per cent. of the exhibiting body in any given locality is far from realization.

The greatest obstacle in the way of an efficient and representative organization is the petty jealousy which too often characterizes the conduct of one exhibitor toward his colleague. On my recent travels through the state of New York this fact was again impressed on me with painful clearness. There are exceptions, heaven be praised. In one city at least the exhibitors work together like one man and in other cities there are exhibitors who are capable of distinguishing between fair and unfair competition.

As a rule, however, there is a deplorable lack of co-operation and in many cases a rancorous hatred of the nearest competitor or competitors. Men of good intelligence with engaging manners and an obvious sense of what is due to their neighbor lose all reasoning power when the conversation gets around to the nearest competitor. According to their description the nearest competitor is a fiend incarnate, a being deserted of God and man, guilty of daily atrocities and wholly unfit to associate with his kind. When I meet the man thus described as the embodiment of every villainy I find him just about the same as the other fellow, eager for profit, of course, but reasonable and capable of seeing more than his own side of a question. He reciprocates the horrible opinion of the man down the street and doesn't need much provocation to launch into fierce denunciation of his rival, most of which is wholly unprintable.

I can suggest no remedy except an appeal to reason. In every town with more than one exhibitor there is a community of interest embracing all the exhibitors. Whatever hurts one is bound to hurt all. It is better to make a reasonable division of patronage with a field left for competition than to exhaust one's own resources in an effort to crush the other fellow. In one town I found a small theater actually admitting people free of charge and showing quite a decent program, too. This was done to cut down the attendance of a neighboring theater with about four times the seating capacity. My readers are too intelligent to need any comment of mine on such a situation.

I knew an exchange in Philadelphia which owed no small measure of its success to its specialty of making the exhibitor see the folly of ruinous competition. A man would come into the manager's office bitterly complaining of his nearest competitor. Remember that this happened in the days when there was not one fourth of the present weekly supply of reels. The man was told to forget his troubles for the present and then the nearest competitor was sent for. He, too, was made to see the error of his ways. When reason had been restored to both men and it seemed safe to have them meet without danger of physical violence the two men were brought together and an amicable arrangement was made between them, "one being kept away from the other's program without any 'repeaters.'"

We sincerely believe it would be for the best interests of the industry as a whole if the exhibitor had a little more power and influence than he has now. It is very certain that he will never be much more than "a hewer of stone and a drawer of water" if he cannot get the petty jealousies out of his system.

Happy Ending

By W. Stephen Bush.

I AM sure every reader of The Moviing Picture World feels himself competent to contribute an interesting view on the question of how a film play ought to end. Guided by what I have heard from exhibitors everywhere I am inclined to think that they all favor the happy endings. Of course when I say this I do not mean to state the personal view and taste of the exhibitor himself. What the exhibitor personally likes or dislikes is one thing and what his audience likes or dislikes are two essentially different things. The exhibitor, of course, cannot afford to have pictures just for the gratification of his own tastes. He must sacrifice his tastes upon the altar of profit. When he hears his audience enthuse over a feature which he thinks particularly bad it is his cue to smile and agree with his audience.

The consensus of the exhibitors in favor of happy endings represents the tastes and desires of the millions who go to see the motion pictures day after day.

The demand for the happy ending is one of the distinct lines of difference between the best traditions of the speaking stage and the screen. The plays without a happy ending have endured longer on the legitimate stage than the other kind, where the wedding bells ring out in the fifth act and the villain is led in handcuffs from the stage. This is especially true of what we may term the classic plays. With one or two exceptions the comedies of Shakespeare have been seen but little on the modern stage while the fame of the great tragedies still touches every household in the English-speaking world. Who at a second's notice can recall the principal characters in the "Two Gentlemen of Verona"? It is much easier for the average person to recall the leading parts in "Macbeth," "Hamlet" and "Othello." Most of us I think still prefer "Romeo and Juliet" to the works of Laura Jean Libbey, and Laura Jean Libbey is one of the most conspicuous exponents of the happy ending.

Granting all this I must agree with the exhibitors' prevailing opinion that their audiences must have happy endings. Indeed some of the endings are altogether too happy. I saw a feature recently where a man shares the guilt of the deaths of hundreds of men, women and children and gets off with a slight wound in the arm with the finale showing him and the wife in happy seclusion on the porch of their Staten Island home. Yes, we do strain things a bit to get the happy ending. We all know that the happy ending is not always true to the life we are supposed to reflect on the screen.

Just the same the audiences will have the happy ending. Except to a negligible minority the motion picture theater is a place of amusement, first, last and all the time. "Weeps" may be part of the entertainment, there is a fine place for them toward the end of the third act, but our audiences want to see everybody happy by the time the film is getting small on the fifth reel. Why should the exhibitor quarrel with this state of affairs? We cannot end the tale of "Little Red Riding Hood" with the wolf triumphant and digesting the little heroine.

Cameras to Explore Tropical Wilds

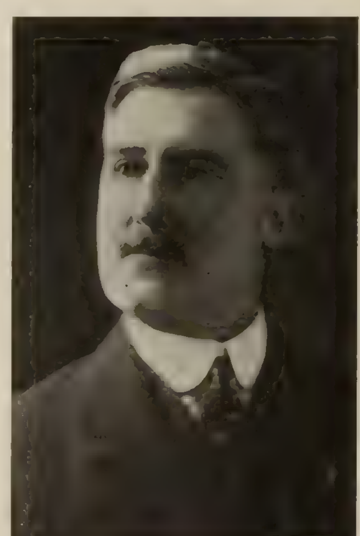
ONE of the best equipped motion picture expeditions ever organized sailed from New York last week in the yacht Wisdom. In charge of the party was Edward A. Salisbury, the man whose pictures of wild life already are known to lovers of motion pictures. Associated with him is Rex E. Beach, the famous writer of fiction, some of whose stories are already as familiar to picturegoers as all of them are to followers of current fiction. Others in the party are George Stone, microscopic camera expert and scientist; Charles E. Earle, scientist and navigator; L. B. Flintom, son of the head of the Kansas City Feature Film Exchange, and Charles C. Dahl, cameraman. Captain Thomas Fleming Day is skipper of the Wisdom. Captain Day has crossed the Atlantic in a twenty-one-footer and in a thirty-five-footer. That ought to establish his reputation as a sailor.

Rex E. Beach.

On Wednesday afternoon Mr. Salisbury and Mr. Beach were photographed by the Pathe and Hearst-Selig cameramen. Mrs. Beach, who was visiting the Wisdom, lying off Eighty-sixth street, North River, was induced to join the two explorers in facing the cameras, protesting all the while. "I'd rather go to the dentist than have my picture taken," she said. "Why not ask Mary Pickford?" Later the Wisdom took a turn up the river, that the photographer stationed at the end of a pier might get a good picture of the trim craft that will serve as the home of the explorers for the next half year.

The Wisdom is 72 feet long and 14 feet beam, with a draught of about 6 feet. She is equipped with a gasoline engine of 50 horsepower. Her normal cruising speed is 10 knots. She carries launches with independent motive power, as well as a rowboat and a canoe. There is a complete dark-room equipment and an ice-making plant. In the main cabin is a large air-tight zinc-lined box for the storage of film. Packed in its walls is lime, intended to absorb moisture. Boards projecting over the side convert the film box into a center reading table.



Edward A. Salisbury.

The itinerary of the party as at present outlined—and Mr. Salisbury said that it would, of course, be subject to such changes as circumstances might dictate—calls for visits in Florida, a tour through the Bahamas, touching at Kingston, Jamaica, and Haiti, and down the Central American and Venezuelan coasts. The course of the Wisdom then will be retraced to Colon and through the Panama Canal, south along the Mexican, Central and South American coasts and then north along shore to San Francisco. The journey as outlined will approximate a distance of ten thousand miles and will consume in time from six to ten months to accomplish.

Thirty thousand feet of negative was on board the Wisdom when she sailed from New York, and an additional twenty thousand will be shipped to Panama. As to the pictures to be taken, these will include everything of interest—wild life, scenic, hunting and fishing, natural life, and popular science, comprising microscopic studies. It was said by Mr. Salisbury that locations might suggest to Mr. Beach stories of a dramatic sort that would be enacted by the members of the party. When the novelist was asked in regard to this he was inclined to be noncommittal; he did not admit nor did he deny it. One of the points visited will be Cocos Island, the Treasure Island of famous memory; Mr. Salisbury intimated the pictures taken here would not be limited to scenic.

Yacht Wisdom Coming Out of Dry Dock.

A stop will be made at the bird rookeries of Tiburon, off the west coast of Mexico. Here also pictures will be made of the cannibal tribes, the only known remaining survivors in or near North America of this rapidly becoming extinct division of humanity. It is not the intention of the explorers to confine their activities to the water. Trips will be made inland wherever it is desired to obtain subjects of unusual interest. In this way the party will cover the old Spanish cities and the capitals, as well as obtaining pictures of the natives and of jungle life.

Mr. Salisbury, the owner of the Wisdom, will be the head of the party. Mr. Beach, as his books bear witness, is a lover of outdoor life, of hunting, of fishing and of adventure. He has traveled and hunted much in wild countries, in the north as well as in the tropics. We have a right to expect that from his experiences on the trip there will come results matching in interest for fiction readers and picturegoers "The Spoilers," just to name one subject. Like Mr. Salisbury, Mr. Beach is of powerful physique.

Mr. Stone is a graduate of the University of California. He has specialized in microcinematography. So far as known he is the only man in the United States who has achieved success in this work. He carried with him a complete equipment of cameras and lenses. Included in the photographic paraphernalia on the Wisdom are four motion picture cameras. Mr. Earle is a graduate of Harvard, and has specialized in chemistry. William Salisbury, a brother of the head of the expedition, accompanied the party to Norfolk, at which point Mr. Beach went aboard.

It is a congenial bunch the Wisdom takes with her on her long trip—as should be a group of ten men who for so long a time will be in such close contact. Talking with them just before their departure it was impossible to smother a bad case of wanderlust. Bon voyage to the good ship Wisdom and her splendid crew!

HARRY VOKES MAKING A COMEDY FOR GAUMONT

In pursuance of its policy to give the public a new star with each Gaumont production, Harry Vokes is now at work at the Flushing studio on a Casino Star Comedy to be released under the name of "Beauty in Distress." Mr. Vokes was for years a co-star with "Hap" Ward. Probably no team in America has made more people laugh than Ward & Vokes.

ALBERT MACKLIN BECOMES GAUMONT JUVENILE

Albert Macklin, well known in pictures as a juvenile actor, sailed Tuesday, October 26, with the Gaumont companies, to spend the winter in Florida. He will appear in the Rialto Star Features photodramas.

Bunch of Vitagraphs Coming

Many Good Subjects in Proposed Releases of Early Date.

THE Vitagraph Company, ever on the alert to keep abreast of the demands of the exhibitors and their growing patronage, have arranged a weekly program, beginning with the first week in November, to include a series of releases each one of which will be a representative Vitagraph picture, whether it be a one-part subject or a feature. Twenty-four of the Vitagraph stars are represented in the first week's releases, who worked under the direction of seven different directors to make the separate stories.

Scene from "Between Two Fires" (Vitagraph).

The first of the quality releases will be "Between Two Fires," in which two maiden ladies living one on each side of a bachelor, conspire individually to capture him in the matrimonial net and the ruse employed by the victim to circumvent their designs. It was directed by Courtland Van Deusen, with the assistance of Flora Finch, Kate Price and William Shea, in its enactment.

The second release of the week will be "The Sultan of Zulon," a two-part comedy by William Calvert Howard, produced by Wally Van. It tells in amusing manner the adventure of Ram Si Ko, in his search of a white wife to add to his already overstocked harem. Hughie Mack is the Sultan, while Dorothy Kelly and Donald MacBride assist him in creating the fun.

Scene from "Beautiful Thoughts" (Vitagraph).

Following "The Sultan of Zulon" will be a Frederic Chapin comedy, "A Family Picnic," in which a Great Dane proves to be a white elephant on the hands of a picnic party. Kate Price, Ethel Corcoran, Donald MacBride and Paul Kelly are the comedians responsible for the comedy's success.

A star cast of Vitagraph players selected from the Western company at Los Angeles, Cal., enacted the release for Thursday, "The Ebony Casket." It is a story in which an ebony casket containing a stuffed cat helps a pair of lovers to overcome parental objection. William Duncan, Anne Schaefer, Myrtle Gonzales, Alfred Vosburgh, George Kunkel, Otto Lederer, Carleton Weatherby and George Stanley are the principals concerned in its enactment.

Eva and Stanley Dark are the authors of the regular "Sidney Drew Day" release, "Beautiful Thoughts," in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew appear to exceptional advantage. Its theme is woven around the tenets of the "Beautiful Thoughtist" and the story develops into the means employed by a husband, a perpetual grouch, to drive the beautiful thoughts out of his wife's head. Florence Natol is the third member of the cast that presents this delightful comedy.

A Broadway Star Feature, "Anselo Lee," a stirring picture of Gypsy life, interwoven with a romance, into which a society girl is the beloved of a Gypsy Adonis, is the first Saturday release of the month. It was enacted by a cast of Vitagraph players that include Antonio Moreno, Naomi Childers, Donald Hall, Frankie Mann and Nellie Anderson, who worked under the direction of Harry Handworth.

The above series of releases for the first week in November is only a forerunner of what the Vitagraph Company promise in the succeeding weekly program, and to further establish Vitagraph as a name that spells exceptional pictures it is continuously adding well-known names to its stock membership, producing force and list of authors.

Paul Gilmore With Raver

PAUL GILMORE is another legitimate dramatic celebrity engaged to play a principal role in the Raver Film Corporation's first Augustus Thomas production, "The Other Girl," with James J. Corbett. Gilmore interprets the character of the likable minister, bubbling to the brim with personality. As the clergyman, Paul Gilmore is invested with a part that befits his dash, vim and handsome appearance. Exhibitors and the patronizing public know Mr. Gilmore from two angles, namely, the motion picture and the dramatic field. Before the camera, this matinee idol has appeared as a star only in important productions, among which "The Penitentes," a Griffith film. To be exact, Mr. Gilmore left Los Angeles this Saturday and arrives at the Staten Island studio of the Raver Film Corporation Monday, November 7.

Paul Gilmore.

Mr. Gilmore appeared on Broadway in such productions as "At Yale," "Captain Debonnaire," "The Boys of Company B," "Mistress Nell," in support of Henrietta Crosman, and in a revival of "The Three Musketeers." He also toured the United States in these plays. However, the South and West proclaim him as their own because of his success in that territory at the head of his own companies, presenting "The Mummy and the Humming Bird," "King Charles," "The Tyranny of Tears," "The Call of the North," "The Havoc" and the aforesaid, "At Yale," "Captain Debonnaire" and "The Boys of Company B." Mr. Gilmore represents that valuable class of stars roundly popular in both domains of the profession and in all sections of this country.

EQUITABLE AFTER BIG WRITERS.

In the literary sections of various New York, London and Paris daily papers, this week, appears an advertisement, placed by the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, in which important authors and playwrights are invited to submit their wares to the Equitable scenario department and stating that no price was too great for stories and plays that were adaptable to the screen.

The display advertisement in the literary sections and in the authors' trade journals was the culmination of Arthur H. Spiegel's authorizing the appropriation of one hundred thousand dollars by the Equitable to be used in procuring the greatest works of the great writers.

Following this principle, Robert W. Chambers, Richard Legallienne, Sir Gilbert Parker, Sir James M. Barrie, C. N. and A. M. Williamson, Brand Whitlock and others of note are being approached and offered substantial sums to permit their works to be screened or to write original matter.

"The Old Homestead" at Last

BY A RARE coincidence, the first scene taken in the old Durland Riding Academy which was acquired for studio purposes by the Famous Players Film Company after the burning of its Twenty-sixth street headquarters, was the opening of "The Old Homestead," the celebrated rural classic which for over thirty years served to endear itself, and its star and author, Denman Thompson, to the American public.

It is doubtful if any other play is as well known to the masses as "The Old Homestead," with the possible exception of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It is one of the few plays which the great motion picture public knows as it knows its alphabet. And for that reason it will be appreciated by the public more than any sensational adaptation which has ever been made.

Denman Thompson's old home will be used, by permission of his son, Frank Thompson, from whom the rights to the play were obtained, as the settings for the rural portion of the story. The outlying districts of the typically quaint New England town in which it is situated will also be called upon to furnish additional rustic atmosphere.

James Kirkwood, under whose direction the adaptation is being made, states that "The Old Homestead" will prove unique in the history of feature films because of the scarcity of studio sets which will be used. With the old Thompson home, the neighboring village, and old Grace Church in New York, which forms one of the important settings, all to be used as actual backgrounds, and with many scenes transpiring in the streets of New York, there are but very few scenes which will be staged in the studio.

The Famous Players are especially indebted to Frank Thompson for the personal co-operation and assistance which he has given them in their efforts to preserve to the last detail the traditions and atmosphere with which the elder Thompson's presentation of "The Old Homestead" has so long been invested. From the photographs furnished by Mr. Thompson the producers have been able to copy exactly the costumes and make-up of the original characters in the play.

Triumph Plans Big Program

Many Important Productions Scheduled by Equitable's Chief Producing Ally.

WITH the Equitable program, now practically outlined for the forthcoming half year, Equitable's chief producing ally, the Triumph Film Corporation of which Arthur H. Jacobs is the executive head and Joseph Golden, director in chief, announces, as its more important activities of the next six months, six releases, in which eight of the foremost stars and noted players of the legitimate stage will make their appearance.

Triumph's past releases on the Equitable program included Hilda Spong in "Divorced," Lenore Ulrich in "The Better Woman," Julius Steger in "The Master of the House," and Helen Ware in "The Price," all of which were supervised by Director Golden himself.

Through General Manager Jacobs arrangements were entered into last week whereby Harriet Ford, author of "The Argyle Case," "The Dummy," and other big legitimate successes, will, in the future, devote her time to constructing scenarios exclusively for Triumph. This is a tremendously big advance in scenario work, for Miss Ford is considered one of the most prolific and versatile of dramatic writers of the day, and at present has contracts for four different legitimate productions for Broadway, appearing during the forthcoming season.

Henry Kolker, who is now working in "The Warning," under the directorial auspices of Edmund Lawrence, has been engaged for three additional productions, which will characterize the Equitable releasing chart at a period of from three to four months apart. Mr. Lawrence will begin work immediately upon the production of "The Ransom," in which the estimable Julia Dean will star. Miss Dean recently began rehearsing for her latest starring vehicle, which opens at a Broadway house soon, and it will be necessary for her to divide her time between studio and stage, but as Equitable will not release the Dean picture until early in January, ample time is allowed for her legitimate work.

Marie Empress, last seen in "When We Were Twenty-one," in which she portrayed the role of the vampire woman, will be featured by Triumph in a sensational dramatic offering, based on one of Guy De Maupassant's stories, which is now in the making.

Miss Empress will begin work about November 14 upon the completion of a large wardrobe. The De Maupassant script calls for elaborate apparel.

Charles J. Ross, now playing in "The Senator," William H. Crane's former vehicle, is at work at Washington, D. C., under Director Joseph H. Golden. "The Senator" will be seen on the Equitable program about December 20th.

The Triumph scenario department is now in complete charge of Eva Unsell, formerly with Famous Players; Harriet Ford, Mr. Golden and Arthur Jacobs.

Edison's New Director General

Frank Smithson, Noted Theatrical Manager and Father of Many Successes and Stars, Is Won Over by Edison.

IN the nature of a triumph for the Edison organization is the winning over to motion pictures of Frank Smithson, the noted Broadway theatrical producer, to become its director general under Leonard W. McChesney, studio and motion picture division manager. For a bright galaxy, indeed, it would make were the players' names to be mentioned who owe to Mr. Smithson's acumen their present eminent position on the stage and screen, and, in the majority of these cases, owe their very theatrical or screen existence to his judgment and advancing of them. It may safely be said without danger of being gainsaid that there is probably no other one man who has such a string of theatrical successes and money-makers to his credit.

Frank Smithson.

A few of these, within easy memory, are "The Girl from Paris," said to be "a world-beater" among productions for the money it made; "Monte Carlo;" "Hotel Topsy Turvy;" "The Defender," in Boston when Blanche Ring first came into prominence; "The Chaperones;" "The Orchid;" "The Blue Moon;" "The Top of the World;" "The Motor Girl;" "The Beauty Spot;" "The Giddy Throng;" "King's Carnival;" "Nancy Brown;" "Queen of the Moulin Rouge;" "Louisiana Lou," and "High Jinks."

Mr. Smithson had but just returned from Chicago where he staged a big success when he jumped into the rehearsing of another in New York. When this task is finished, he will take up his new duties, about November 22, at the Edison studio.

Twenty years of a most active life have been spent in America by Mr. Smithson, who, however, was a well-known leading comedian in England before he came here. There, he was associated with Augustus Harris, William Greet and others of prominence. He has originated many parts, notably, such as Uncle Matt in "La Cigale," Larry O'Brien in "Dandy Dick," with May Yohe, who had made a sensational success at that time. Mr. Smithson also played in and staged many English plays and pantomimes. When he visited this country for pleasure, he met E. E. Rice, who prevailed upon him to remain and stage "The Girl from Paris" at the Herald Square theater. Since that time Mr. Smithson has become a loyal American citizen, declaring that he loves his adopted land the more each year he stays.

Mr. Smithson will work hand in hand with the studio manager, Mr. McChesney, but the former will enjoy more latitude and authority than has heretofore been allotted one in a similar position, in recognition of Mr. Smithson's uncommon and successful experience and ability. The Edison organization long negotiated with Mr. Smithson before he could hear the call of motion pictures, but now that they have been successful, there is a feeling that he will be a motive and energetic factor in placing Edison releases in an enviable position and that he will be no small force in the constant betterment of screen artistic and dramatic standards.

"Who Is Guilty"? New Pathe Series

Written by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow and Featuring Emmy Wehlen It Will Be Produced by the Arrow Film Corporation.

AFTER months of careful preparation Pathe announces the completion of plans for the series "Who Is Guilty?" which will follow "Neal of the Navy." The first release of the new series will be on December 11, the week after the release of the last episode of "Neal of the Navy."

Emmy Wehlen, the famous favorite of the legitimate stage and Howard Estabrook, the very best of Broadway's younger stars, will play the leads. The engagement of these "top notch" players at a very high cost is an assurance that Pathe intends to make this series its most pretentious of all the long list of successes identified with its name—a remarkable list beginning with "The Perils of Pauline" and running down through "The Exploits of Elaine," "The New Exploits of Elaine," "The Romance of Elaine," "Who Pays?" "Neal of the Navy," and "The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford."

The Arrow Film Corporation will produce "Who Is Guilty?" at its studios in Yonkers, N. Y., and the series will be under the personal direction of Howell Hansel, the well-known director, who is now director-in-chief of the Arrow Film Corporation. Miss Wehlen and Mr. Estabrook will feature throughout the series. The supporting players will doubtless be changed from time to time to meet the requirements of the scenario. At present the supporting cast includes Lila Chester, Henry West, Mrs. Balfour, Stanley Walpole, E. J. De Varny and Katherine Reichart.

Emmy Wehlen is easily one of the most prominent players of the day. She was strongly attracted to the stage when a child only six years old, and even at that early age her ambition was to one day become a theatrical star. No one can talk to her without being convinced that she is a thinker and gifted with more than the ordinary amount of brains. She says of "Who Is Guilty?" after reading the scenarios, that in it she recognized a most unusual medium for motion pictures, and that she feels sure that the series will not only amuse but instruct to a rare degree.

Howard Estabrook, who is co-star with Miss Wehlen in the Pathe series, has enjoyed an almost meteoric career upon the stage. No list of Broadway celebrities would be complete without his name. He is now appearing with Elsie Janis at the George M. Cohan theater in "Miss Information." His daily routine at the present time is enough to intimidate anyone. He rises at seven, and as soon as he has finished breakfast goes to Yonkers, works in "Who Is Guilty?" then returns to New York, takes a hasty dinner, and at seven goes to the theater from which he doesn't get back home until 12:30 a. m. Thus he may truly lay claim to the title of the "twenty-four hours a day man." Mr. Estabrook is strongly impressed with the strength of "Who Is Guilty?" and believes that it will arouse great interest, dealing as it does with vital problems of every-day life presented in a new way. He is a fine, clear-eyed chap of strong out-of-door tastes, having a pronounced partiality for tennis, golf, and other sports that demand physical exertion and skill.

Howell Hansel, who will direct "Who Is Guilty?" is one of the best known producers in the business. He promises that the production will be of the most elaborate quality, and his record insures a thoroughly artistic series of pictures. He was connected with the dramatic stage ever since he was nineteen years old up to three years ago. His last engagement on the speaking stage were with Blanche Bates in the Belasco production of "The Fighting Hope," and with Mr. Belasco in "The Woman." He went into the motion picture business immediately on the conclusion of this last engagement, and has been with Thanhouser, the World Film and Lubin. He directed "The Million Dollar Mystery" from start to finish.

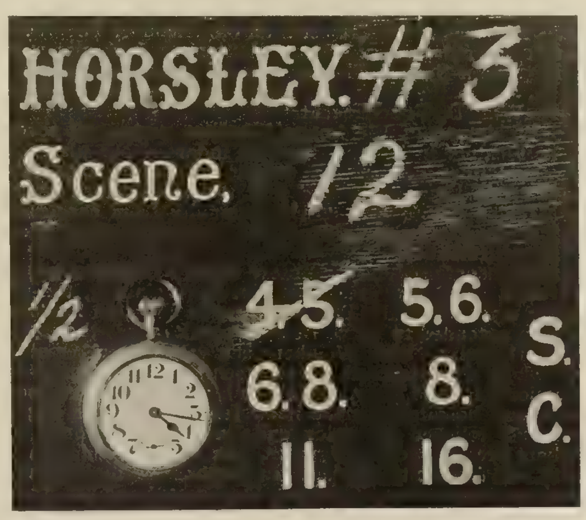
Mr. Hansel says of "Who Is Guilty?" that the scenarios are the strongest he has ever read—that all the essentials of suspense, big dramatic moments, thrills, punch, surprise, etc., are there. Being interested in the social questions of the day he feels that "Who Is Guilty?" will perform a real service in making people think and in throwing light upon various problems of life.

As for the stories of "Who Is Guilty?" they have been written for newspaper syndication by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, the famous novelist, an account of whom appeared last week in these columns. They are put into scenario form by George Brackett Seitz, who has written many Pathe successes. The series will be in fourteen chapters of two parts each, each chapter complete in itself. The theme deals with various social problems of the day, and will be treated in a thoroughly unconventional manner. The question of "Who Is Guilty?" for the various infractions of man-made laws will be left to the observer and the subject will always be handled in the most truthful manner possible consistent with good taste.

To Record Photographic Conditions

David Horsley Has Scheme to Aid Cameramen in Improving the Quality of Their Work.

THE latest innovation of David Horsley is a cameraman's guide. It consists of two pieces of blackened wood hinged together to close up for convenience, and is small enough to be carried in the side-pocket of a man's coat or in a magazine cast. It is used to identify scenes after development and is held up in front of the camera before each scene is exposed and after the scene is finished. On it is written the name of the cameraman and the director and the number of the scene being taken. A watch is inserted in the board to show at what time the negative was exposed. The value of this lies in the fact that in case the negative does not turn out perfectly under the time and conditions then in force the cameraman can be guided by the result in future operations. The watch also shows at what time the first scene in the morning was taken and all the scenes for the same day.



Cameraman's Chart, Devised by David Horsley.

Six sets of figures are also marked on the board to indicate the diaphragm openings. Whichever opening is used is chalked off in the board. Here also, if the negative is not properly exposed, the cameraman, having a record of the opening used, can use the proper opening in the future.

A letter "S" and a letter "C" appear on the board. The "S" stands for sunshine and the "C" for cloudy. A chalk-mark is put through either one, according to circumstances. If a scene is taken in the studio a chalk-mark is made between the two letters.

A record is also made of the shutter opening used. On the accompanying reproduction of the board there is marked "½," which means that in the case noted the picture was taken with half shutter.

PLAZA THEATER USED BY EQUITABLE.

The Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, last week, rented the Plaza theater at Madison avenue and Fifty-ninth street and staged several of the big scenes in "The Labyrinth" in which Gail Kane is appearing.

A thousand extra people occupied the auditorium seats, while the entire "Town Topics Company," from the Century theater, in full stage attire, presented the second act of that play before the camera, with Gail Kane taking the principal role instead of the regular leading woman.

The entire theater was wired and lights installed and the scenes staged from six in the morning until late in the evening. E. Mason Hopper directed the efforts of the multitude of extras and forty principals.

Campaigning with the Exhibitor

THE campaign of The Moving Picture World against the adoption of the new constitution after a good beginning in Yonkers was continued with equal success in Albany. All the big motion picture theaters in the capital city were visited and slides were distributed. Every exhibitor spoken to was in hearty sympathy with the plan to punish the framers of the reactionary constitution for their insolent refusal to recognize the rights of the motion picture to be classed with the press. Manager Powers of the Colonial, the big new theater on upper State street, spoke in flattering terms of the plan, as did Manager Gardner of the "Pearl," one of the oldest motion picture theaters in the city. Mr. Morris Deitches of the Majestic, an old friend of The World, asked for an extra set of slides. W. Stephen Bush also spoke in the Clinton Square Theater, one of the most popular in Albany, and in the Orpheum, which is owned and conducted by Mr. Wm. D. Frischknecht.

Mr. Weidmann of Weidmann Brothers, owners of several picture theaters in Albany, likewise indorsed our plan. All these exhibitors realize the danger of having censorship brought into New York now that the constitution makers have decided not to give us the immunity from censorship, which under the leadership of The Moving Picture World had been demanded.

Anti-Censorship Address Before Rotary Club in Troy.

Through the good offices of Mr. E. Weinberg, the progressive manager of the Plaza Theater in Troy, an invitation had been extended to W. S. Bush to speak before the Rotary Club of that city. Wm. Weinberg is a valued member of the club, which is composed of representative merchants and professional men of Troy, In the club rooms an air of cheerfulness and hospitality made itself felt. There was singing in chorus, relieved by solos and quartettes. Among the members present were clergymen, one of the candidates for mayor, and some city officials. In response to the invitation to make an address on "The Past, the Present and the Future of the Motion Picture," Mr. Bush said he had no intention of delivering a formal address, but would content himself with saying something about censorship.

"The pleasant ritual of your hospitality," said Mr. Bush, "this all-pervading genial atmosphere have made me hesitate. I said to myself: 'Is it right to reward these boys with a set speech, is it right to inflict oratory upon them?' I confess that when I heard you sing my compunction grew less and after I had listened to your quartette, all the cruelty of my normal nature returned and I felt myself entitled to a counter attack. (Laughter.) In all seriousness I cannot say much in the short time I have. As to the past and present of the motion picture I feel I can call you as my witnesses to prove the value and the power of the screen. What I want to urge upon you is the future of the motion picture. We are threatened with censorship in this state. It is proposed to strangle this great medium of expression and to subject it to whims of one or two individuals, who will attempt to regulate the amusements of the people. It is for men like you, representing a high order of intelligence and citizenship, to help us in saving the motion picture and keeping it free, but responsible, just as the press is free but responsible. The motion picture is destined to a career of supreme usefulness. It follows the splendid motto of your club, 'He profits most who serves best.' Are we going to check its development, are we going to stop its career of service and usefulness to please a group of narrow bigots? The motion picture is the people's entertainment. The people control and regulate it through the influence of public opinion. It needs no further restraint. American democracy is just as capable of taking care of the screen as it has taken care of the press and the theater. If we have a board of censors, who will censor the censors?"

Utica and Syracuse Active.

In Utica M. Dynimski, the owner of the Gem Theater, distributed the World's anti-constitution slides. In Syracuse all the exhibitors unreservedly favored the plan of the World. Manager Shafia of the Novelty, Manager Schein of the Hippodrome, Mr. F. A. Fout, owner of several suburban theaters; Mr. Lang of the Plaza, the managers of Dreamland and the Lyceum, Manager P. Doegan of the Elite and the Seymour, all went on record as favoring the campaign of the World. Among the other theaters where Mr. Bush spoke were the Happy Hour, managed by Messrs. Max and Mitchell Fitzer, and the Langan Theater, of which Mr. B. J. Hopkins is the manager. Everywhere the audiences listened with great attention and plainly manifested their approval of the speaker's shafts against censorship. Manager Weil of the Strand also declared himself a warm advocate of the plan of the Moving Picture World. The campaign will close in Rochester.

Vitagraphers Give Benefit Dance

Treasury of the Hospital and Sick Fund Richer by Substantial Sum as Result.

THE second annual ball of the Vitagraph employes for the benefit of the Hospital and Sick Fund was held at Sheepshead Bay on the evening of Wednesday, October 27. The large number of persons present by no means represented the sale of tickets. Dancing began early and it was continued until 4:30 in the morning. It was a most pleasant all-around occasion. "Vic" Smith, the president of the fund, was in charge of arrangements. He was aided by Vice-President Sam Spedon, Treasurer Jack Evans and Secretary Dick Leslie. The committee issued a souvenir containing photographs of the members of the Vitagraph executive and playing forces.

Among the exhibtors present were noted Samuel H. Trigger, Thomas Howard and Grant Anson. Of the directors and players and staff seen were George D. Baker, Tefft Johnston, who was accompanied by Mrs. Johnston and also by his mother and sister of Washington, D. C.; Wilfred North, William Humphrey, Paul Scardon, C. Jay Williams, C. Van Deusen, Charles Eldridge, James Morrison, Albert Roccardi, James Kilgour, Anders Randolph, Robert Gaillard, Garry McGarry, William Shea, E. Overton, Anita Stewart, Lillian Walker, Kate Price, Edith Storey, Eulalie Jensen, Virginia Pearson, Dorothy Kelly, Leah Baird, who was accompanied by Arthur F. Beck, manager of the Twenty-third street branch of the Mutual; Flora Finch, Frankie Mann, Edwina Robbins, Mary Maurice, Carolyn Birch, D. MacBride, John T. Kelly, A. Cozine, Jack Brawn, William Dunn, H. Forshay, Donald Hall, Hughie Mack, T. R. Mills, Alice Lake, Josephine Earle, K. Franek, E. Tully, N. Anderson, Logan Paul, Edward Elkus, S. Stark, Ed Wentworth, Charles Chapman, Walter Arthur, Harry Waldron, F. Esslinger and J. B. French. John F. Miller, of the Buffalo Times was one of the many present from outside the studio.

H. H. Van Loan

ANOTHER appointment announced from the manager's office of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company this week is that of H. H. Van Loan's promotion to be manager of the publicity department.

This is the position formerly held by Joe Brandt, prior to becoming manager of the home office. For a while he had charge of both offices, but Mr. Van Loan's ability in placing the publicity department in a most flourishing condition led the officials of the Universal to make him head of the publicity department where he has supervision over a staff of twenty men and women.

H. H. Van Loan.

Some of the big campaigns Mr. Van Loan has promoted include the Universal beauty contest in which forty-eight newspapers in all parts of the country were lined up with the Universal. The Pavlowa, Bernhardt, "Graft" and Universal City campaigns are other tributes to his fertile brain. Another campaign which is now in preparation and which bids fair to surpass even the beauty contest, is that of "Who is the handsomest man in America?"

His appointment as manager of the publicity department comes to him as a reward for his faithful endeavors in building up an efficient publicity system and he carries with his promotion the best wishes of a host of friends out of the profession.

War Scenes in Lubin Feature

WHEN some few weeks ago, Jack Pratt, Lubin director, began the production of Louis Reeves Harrison's big five-reel Lubin V-L-S-E release, "The Rights of Man," he was confronted with the usual amount of problems which are thrust before the director, but in this particular case, it seemed that just a wee bit more than the average attention was to be necessary to build the proper sets and select the real locations for the staging of those scenes of the picture which were to be replicas of the battlefields of Europe.

Grave of Three Hundred French and German Soldiers at Mondemont, France, Taken by Joe Farnham April 6, 1915.

The success or failure of his efforts rested upon his accuracy, as full well he appreciated. There were graves to be shown, real war-time graves by the roadside; there were buildings to be struck by shells and the effects shown; and there were uniforms to be accurate and critic-proof in their appearance. Accordingly Director Pratt and Publicity Director Joe Farnham, of the Lubin Company, got busy and dug for the proper information, untiringly. It was hard to secure the necessary data and the search had about been given up, when it was recalled that Farnham had been in France for four months and knew the real country conditions.

Mr. Pratt found not only the knowledge desired, but in addition a collection of seventeen hundred still pictures, which Farnham had taken himself and which gave vivid views of just what he sought—the graves, the wounded and dying and dead on the fields of battle, shell-destroyed buildings, etc. Then it was decided that "The Rights of Man" was to be at least one picture in which no man could criticize settings and locations. Carpenters and scenic artists were put to work and at Lubin's Betzwood, landscape architects constructed the ground as France really is, built houses, dug graves in replica, etc.

In all, through the five reels there are fifteen reproductions of this kind, each one of equal magnitude and each one a vivid picture of what war really brings upon a country.

"Stuffy" Davis Plays Himself

TALK about realism! The Gaumont company is going the limit. When a scenario was received recently calling for the services of a press agent named "Stuffy," John S. Martin, who books the Gaumont stars, went post haste up and down Broadway until he found "Stuffy" Davis, the press agent who made Barnum & Bailey famous. In polite society this purveyor of pertinent press paragraphs is known as Glenmore Davis, but to his friends along the Rialto he is just "Stuffy."

Glenmore Davis.

Press agents are like good generals; they will not send a man where they would not go themselves did duty call. This was a case where duty plainly called "Stuffy" to take his stand as an actor. The fact that he never had been an actor didn't matter, because the contract flashed before his eyes plainly stated that he had only to play HIMSELF in "Does It Pay to Advertise?"

Now that "Stuffy" is in for it, he finds that he didn't know what it meant to play himself in a Casino Star Comedy. Tom Waters, the comedian who has the lead, threw "Stuffy" in a rainbarrel. This is the closest a Broadway press agent has been to water since the Friars gave their last outing.

If big amusement productions owe their success in large part to their publicity men, then "Stuffy" Davis can do a great deal of "pointing with pride." For Frederic Thompson he handled the publicity for "Polly of the Circus," "Brewster's Millions," "A Fool There Was," "The Spendthrift," and "Springtime." More important than any of these was his connection with the big Thompson Amusement enterprise at Coney Island, Luna Park. He has also been with the circus.

BLANCHE SWEET TO REMAIN WITH LASKY.

Reports having reached the Lasky Feature Play Company that certain motion picture manufacturers believing that Miss Blanche Sweet's contract to appear exclusively in Lasky productions on the Paramount Programs had expired or was about to expire, had made overtures of employment to her, Messrs. Wise and Lichtenstein, attorneys for the Lasky Company this week made known generally that Miss Sweet will continue for a considerable period under the Lasky direction.

The determination to make a public announcement of the contractural relations between the noted producing firm and the star was decided only after a circular letter had been sent to various manufacturers calling attention to the existing contract between the Lasky Company and Miss Sweet. Many of the companies responded to the letter of warning and expressed pleasure that the Lasky firm had seen fit to stop senseless reports of Miss Sweet's sudden termination of her Lasky contract.

ALICE BRADY IN "THE RACK."

Alice Brady is the star in the forthcoming production of "The Rack," based upon a Brady success. In that picture, Milton Sils, who made such a success in "The Pit" and "The Arrival of Perpetua," will also be seen. The picture is in the hands of Emile Chautard, who recently completed "The Little Church Around the Corner."

LEAVING the Port of New York on the liner St. Paul, with the statement that by the time he reaches Athens, Greece will be in the war, Donald C. Thompson, expert photographer and globe trotter, has set out for the Balkans in the interest of two organizations of utmost importance in their particular fields, the Paramount Pictures Corporation and the Leslie-Judge Company.

Donald C. Thompson.

Since the advent of the motion picture, the "camera-reporter" has become more and more significant among the world's news gatherers. This twenty-six-year-old Kansan was one of the first to realize the possibility of the new branch of "the game." At the Baltimore Democratic Convention three years ago he took his first flyer into the films. The result was such that he added a motion picture camera to his photographic stock and freelanced to such good purpose that he became a charter member in the Unusual Angle Club and distinctly welcome in the offices of the editors.

A confirmed wanderer, he was in Canada at the outbreak of the war, and securing a permit from General Hughes was able to obtain exclusive photographs of the Canadian contingent. Later he went to France on a freight ship, narrowly escaping demolition when a careless German bomb just missed the tramp steamer on which he did odd jobs for his passage, since mere money meant nothing when it came to getting inside the lines.

With the English on the continent, Mr. Thompson took some of the most remarkable pictures of the entire war. For seven days and nights he was under steady fire at the retreat from Mons. When asked whether or not filming the battle was as dangerous as fighting he shrugged his shoulders and said, "Yes, I suppose it is, but if you're going to be killed you will be, so why worry?" His one idea is to get the pictures just as the born reporter thinks of nothing but his "story." He is quiet and matter of fact in speech and manner, and yet he has done things few men have more than dreamed of.

At London he acted as correspondent for the New York World, and later joined the Belgian army. Having been at one time or another with the English, French, Belgians, Germans, Turks, Russians, Serbians and Bulgarians he has had a unique opportunity to study the methods of them all.

Since exclusive rights to the films he takes have been secured by the Paramount Pictures Corporation, Mr. Thompson will be one of the many camera-correspondents of the Paramount Newspictures.

RESIGNATION OF JACOB WILK.

Leaves World Film to Become General Manager of Authors' Associated Agency, Inc.

AFTER one year and three months in the service of the World Film Corporation as publicity director, Jacob Wilk has resigned that position to devote the whole of his time and energies to the interests of the Authors' Associated Agency, Longacre Building, Forty-second street, New York City, to which address all communications for him should, in future, be sent.

Mr. Wilk is general manager of the agency which has been established to act as a medium between dramatic and photoplay authors and theatrical and motion picture producers. Mr. Wilk's long and varied experience in the theatrical and motion picture fields has convinced him of the urgent need of such an organization, which in its early stages has met with gratifying success.

The "A. A. A." will also act as a medium for booking prominent artists for theaters and motion pictures, and will arrange for the production of feature films and stage plays.

The company has obtained control of the business management of a well-known motion picture producing company; has a handsome suite of offices; a competent staff, and is thus fully equipped with financial and other resources to cope with every requirement of motion picture and theatrical business.

Mr. Wilk carries with him cordial good wishes of the directors and staff of the World Film Corporation at the home office and its branches.

Kalem Plans Big Production

Unusual Efforts Being Put Forth on Special Feature Series.

PLANS are now being completed by the Kalem Company for the winter activities of its various organizations. Several original manuscripts have been secured and work arranged far into the wniter. Foremost among the productions, of course, will be the "Stingaree" series. These episodes, based on the book of the same name by E. W. Hornung, the famous creator of "Raffles," are well under way and already the advance reports are to the effect that the Kalem Company promises exhibitors an unusual feature for their programs. The first release date on this series has been announced as Wednesday, November 24, with two-reel episodes to follow on each succeeding Wednesday. The complete series is in twelve episodes.

The "Hazards of Helen" railroad series which have received added impetus with the appearance of Miss Helen Gibson in the title role promises to become a standard. The Kalem Company plans to continue this series indefinitely, it is said, so great has been the reception of each episode. The titles of those planned for the immediate future include "The Dynamite Train," "The Girl and the Special," "The Tramp Telegrapher" and "The Girl on the Bridge."

The Kalem Company adds that the reception given to the first episodes of "The Ventures of Marguerite" promise to make that series a rival in popularity to "The Hazards of Helen." Never has Miss Marguerite Courtot been given a role more to her liking than that of the heroine of this series and her work has been widely praised. One of the big features of the series has been the gowns worn by Miss Courtot. The costumes which the star wears are creations by Russek of Fifth avenue.

Supplementing these features Kalem also has arranged a number of novelties that will be announced later.

THE PARAGON STUDIO.

The new Paragon studio now in course of construction at Fort Lee, New Jersey, will shortly be completed. It will be one of the largest motion picture studios in the Eastern part of the United States and will have every convenience and facility for making great spectacular motion pictures. Maurice Tourneur will be vice-president and general manager of the company operating the studio and Albert Capellani will be treasurer. The manager of the studio will be Henry Bayard, formerly of the Peerless studio. Paragon features will be released on the World Film program.

Paragon Studio, Fort Lee, N. J.

SPINGLER IN NEW UNIVERSAL RELEASE.

The Universal has placed in rehearsal a gripping two-part photoplay entitled "Sunlight and Shadow," from the pen of Brinsley Shaw, who will also direct the piece. Harry Spingler has been selected to portray the principal role.

Doings of the Imp-Universal Studio

THE manager of the Imp-Universal studio is a busy man these days. Julius Stern is most enthusiastic over coming Imp-Universal releases. He says the best work of his eight directors will be released shortly. The first of this is Ben Wilson's portrayal of William Addison Lathrop's "A Bachelor's Christmas." Mr. Wilson is supported by Dorothy Phillips and two children, Lois Alexander and Matty Rupert. Mr. Wilson plays Santa Claus as though he were used to it, and the picture has a beautiful story, a happy ending, and is well executed throughout.

Another production, one of Director Lucius Henderson's, is "The Strength of the Weak," a five-reel drama featuring Mary Fuller, and is a story in which she excels.

In "Juror Number Seven," adapted from Joseph H. Trant's story by M. B. Havey, Mr. Wilson has produced a strong political and jury picture.

"His Brother's Blood" is a cleverly worked out scientific problem in three reels. It was written by William H. Lippert. Lionel Adams plays the part of the doctor, Gladden James that of the brother, while little Betty Gray is the girl.

King Baggot, with the assistance of Harry McCrae Webster, has secured an excellent vehicle in which to exploit his dramatic powers, in "The Turning Point," a three-reel drama written by Mr. Lippert. The ending of this picture, the turning point, is especially well worked up. Assisting King Baggot are Edna Hunter, Harry Spingler and Ned Reardon.

"The Mystery of the Locked Room" is a clever detective story in three reels, written by William Addison Lathrop, in which Ben Wilson, Joseph Gerard, Ned Reardon, Bert Busby and Dorothy Phillips appear to good advantage.

"The Primrose Path," adapted by M. B. Havey from the play of the same name by Bayard Veiller, the author of "Within the Law," is another Universal star production which is being done in five reels, with Gladys Hanson and Hal Forde in the leading roles, supported by H. Cooper-Willis, Nina Blake and William J. Walsh.

If you enjoy a delightful sea picture with plenty of action and pep, you must see Mary Fuller in "Lil Nor'wester," a three-reeler produced by Lucius Henderson. Miss Fuller is at home as Lil Nor'wester, free as a boy, who grows up to know none of the restrictions of her sex. Miss Fuller is well supported by Paul Panzer, Ralph Belmont, Glenn White and R. E. Hill.

McCardell Objects

Old-Time Scenario Writer Kicks Most Strenuously Against Mutilation of His Screen Plays.

ROY McCARDELL has been writing plays for the screen since away back; he knows what is wanted by the picture maker and few are better qualified to write a perfectly screenable story than he is, hence his objection to the practice of certain editors and directors of manhandling his scenarios to the extent that brings a blush of shame to his cheeks and a rush of bad language to his lips. "Touchin' on and appertainin' to" this vexing practice, Mr. McCardell requests The Moving Picture World to print his observations, which read as follows:

New Rochelle, N. Y., Oct. 25, 1915.

Editor, The Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Dear Sir: In the hope this communication may aid in ending intolerable injustice to scores of trained and capable photoplay authors—all loyal readers of The Moving Picture World—kindly print this protest. By so doing you will also be performing an action that may lead to great betterment in the quality of the average moving picture, as well.

Despite the efforts of your valuable paper and others interested in this most vital factor—the story on the screen—incompetence, ignorance and flubdub continues to be the ruling motif in the scenario editing departments of many of the leading studios. A greater injustice than all this is the cursed custom of many directors when they take a capably written photoplay, garble, revamp and turn the whole effort into a slush creation on the screen that well may make the sardonic sneer and the judicious grieve.

A most recent and flagrant example of this was a three-reel feature of mine which recently excited the puzzled surprise of your reviewer. He wanted to know what I meant, what purpose the picture served, what were the relations of the leading characters to each other, etc. I do not wonder he was puzzled. I have seen the picture and I am only surprised and grateful at your reviewer's moderation. My natural and wholesome story with a strong dramatic and impressive denouement, was, in the last reel, turned and twisted from the original story and ended in slush so banal and stupid that I was thankful the audience did not jeer it. My name was on the screen as author, and I must take the blame for writing the sort of picture I have always ridiculed and fought against. A queer sidelight is, that the manufacturing company gave out in advance a synopsis of the picture to the Moving Picture World and other publications, and this synopsis was exactly the story, in outline, as I had written it! Then the picture comes out, like the dog put in the sausage machine—a totally different sort of thing!

Another intolerable condition that concerns author and producer (with results injurious to both in particular and the art industry of moving pictures in general) is the custom of "padding" one and two-reel stories into multiple reel productions. Recently a story I had written in two reels was "padded" to three reels, and made a slow and somewhat stupid story in consequence. I had suspected this might be done and had written to the company in question, six months before the picture was cast, requesting that I be permitted to augment this and other scenarios of mine bought by this company—in case they were to be made three or four-reelers. I also requested that a certain actress in their stock be not permitted to play the leading female role in any of my photoplays. She is a fairly good "rough soubrette," but would be woefully miscast in any of my photoplays if entrusted to leading roles. They "padded" my play and put in this actress! And yet this company in question is one of the best and fairest to writers. What shall we do to be saved?

Very sincerely yours,
ROY L. McCARDELL.

Joseph Byron Totten

JOSEPH BYRON TOTTEN, an Essanay director at the head of an Essanay touring company, has returned to the Chicago studios after a fifteen weeks' trip through the east, during which he filmed a dozen photoplays, three of which he wrote himself.

Mr. Totten left the studio last July with a company of twenty people, going directly to his country home and stock farm at Pendleton Hill, Conn., where a daylight studio was hastily constructed. Here he took "The Village Homestead," one of his own scripts, using his own house as the homestead. "The Call of the Sea" and "The Lighthouse by the Sea," the last picture his own, were taken respectively at Block Island, Rhode Island, and at Newport. "Hearts and Roses" was filmed at Westerly, R. I.; "A Mansion of Tragedy" was taken in Boston and "Boys Will Be Boys" was set, staged and completed in New York City. Other plays were taken in various places along the Atlantic Coast. "We had a very successful trip," Mr. Totten said. "We took several photoplays, working fairly fast, but very carefully. I am building a permanent studio at my farm which, I think, will come in very handy for Essanay photoplays that require New England atmosphere."

Joseph Byron Totten.

Mr. Totten came to Essanay for the second time a year ago, leaving David Belasco, on whose producing staff he worked and dropping the production of "Experience" to take up the offer made him by George K. Spoor, president of Essanay. Seven years ago, he was with the Essanay forces, leaving to take up Broadway productions with Belasco. Mr. Totten directed the film version of "The Blindness of Virtue," which is now having a tremendous run. He has written 52 stage plays and 15 photoplays.

ANTONIO MORENO TO APPEAR IN VITAGRAPH COMEDY.

Antonio Moreno, a prominent Vitagraph leading man, will essay his first straight comedy role in motion pictures in the forthcoming production of the two-part feature "A 'Model' Wife," by E. Lawrence Gibson, an author new to motion picture fans. While Mr. Moreno has appeared in a number of comedy productions, he has always played a serious part. In "A 'Model' Wife" he will be one of the comedians playing opposite Lillian Walker, who heads the cast, and in association with such popular Vitagraph players as Louise Beaudet, L. Rogers Lytton and Lillian Burns, under the direction of Wilfrid North. "A 'Model' Wife" is a swiftly moving comedy that, while having for its theme, the old, old story of the thorns that beset love's path, is worked out from a different angle.

Vogue Comedies.

New Neutral Brand of Pictures Well Under Way—Charles France Is Directing Them.

VOGUE comedies are on their way to Mutual exhibitors. Active taking has begun at the Vogue studios in Los Angeles. Charles France, producer, has gathered his first batch of comedians and their very names are indicative of the high brand of comedy which will be forthcoming by their efforts.

Charles H. France.

There will be "Russ" Powell, that jolly old baby giant (he tips the scales at 300) of "Chocolate Soldier" days. Everybody, in spite of an old time maxim, will love this fat man after they have witnessed his mirth provoking antics. "Russ," he scorns the "Mr.," will be remembered on Broadway where he last appeared in "The Madcap Duchess" which enjoyed a long and profitable run at the Globe.

Priscilla Dean.

Priscilla Dean has been engaged by Producer France as the comedy ingenue. Pretty? That's her given name. "Pretty Priscilla" her friends call her and they are most generally right, in such personal matters. Miss Dean has had a wealth of stage experience, beginning with child parts in the companies of Joseph Jefferson and James A. Herne. Her great beauty and charm and undeniable appreciation of the genuinely humorous will add tremendous strength to Vogue Films.

William Scott.

And Lillian Brown Leighton—she will essay the grotesque comedy parts, and well she can do it. She "has" every one as soon as she makes her entrance; just one of those irresistible laugh-getters is Miss Leighton. William Scott will play the light comedy parts. He is well known to the legitimate stage where he early appeared with those famous laugh creators, Kelcey and Shannon.

Later, he appeared with Maude Adams in "Quality Street" and other known Broadway stars, but always the comedy parts and always bringing fun into the hearts and lives of others. In character parts will be Wilton Welch and M. Morante, both known to the legitimate stage.

Producer France says he will have some more announcements to make soon, as he has out his managerial rope to corral additional fun-making people.

NEW YORK PAPERS PRAISE "CARMEN."

THERE was not a dissenting opinion among the dramatic critics of the New York daily newspapers in their estimate of the Lasky company's production of "Carmen" and the performance given by Geraldine Farrar. Both received the highest praise in extended reviews. In almost every instance they drew comparisons with the Fox production of "Carmen," which was held to be inferior in the handling of the story and the characterization provided by Theda Bara.

Heywood Broun, writing in The Tribune, said in part: "Undoubtedly Miss Farrar has never acted so well as she does in the screen version of 'Carmen' which opened yesterday at the Strand theater. Moving pictures, of course, offer histrionic opportunities unknown to the operatic stage. Nice touches which would be lost in the Metropolitan Opera House are visable to everybody in the theater when Geraldine Farrar plays close up for the camera man.

"Miss Farrar must have come before the camera with some appreciation of the possibilities of the medium in which her new work lay. She acts throughout with admirable spirit. Probably her heart was in her work. At any rate, she gives the rest of her body. Her Carmen is passionate, cruel, humorous and courageous. She loves and she fights two-handedly. For several moments we feared for the last remaining garment of the rival cigarette girl during her struggle with Carmen. Nor is it a one-sided bout. Following the struggle Miss Farrar plays a thousand feet of film with one side of her face marred by mimic scratches. But there is no marring the beauty of a Carmen who smiles as Miss Farrar does. One is quite ready to condone the folly of Don Jose.

"The 'Carmen' of the William Fox company at the Academy of Music is not as good as the Lasky picture because it is not nearly so coherent. Theda Bara, a famous and exceedingly able motion picture actress, fails in this picture to equal the work of Geraldine Farrar."

The dramatic critic of The Times writes: "As for Miss Farrar, let it be said that among movie actresses she is one of the best. The Strand may be besieged all this week simply because her name has long been one to conjure with, but it seems altogether probable that when, if ever, she appears in another picture, the movie patrons will crowd to see it because they cherish her as one of their own. There is every indication that new millions will soon be calling her 'Our Geraldine.'

This new movie star 'registers' as the film folk have it. There is no doubt at all about that. She does more than make faces at the camera; she knows that in acting for motion pictures, she must do more than go through the motions. And she does. Her familiar vigor and dash are helpful, and she can make good use of the flashing Farrar smile. But quite aside from these, she brings to the richly colorful performance a degree of vitality that animates all the picture and offers a good illustration of the difference between posing and acting for the camera.

"This second 'Carmen' is an example of excellent motion picture photography, but its scenario, which follows the opera libretto rather than the Merimee story, is loose and vague, and Miss Bara seems very mechanically seductive when compared, as she must be, with Geraldine Farrar. The Fox 'Carmen' has none of the elements which make the Lasky 'Carmen' remarkable."

BALBOA NOT TO MAKE "WHO IS GUILTY?"

The Pathe Exchange, Inc., makes the following announcement: "The Balboa Company, notwithstanding rumors and statements to the contrary, will not produce the next Pathe series, 'Who Is Guilty?'" The name of the producer, a man of nation-wide reputation, will be announced in the near future. The stories will be written by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, one of the most famous writers of the day, and the scenarios by George B. Seitz. The Balboa Company will shortly commence work on another Pathe series, the title of which will soon be announced.

PROCTOR SCENARIO EDITOR FOR GAUMONT.

The Gaumont Company has just announced that George Du Bois Proctor has been added to the staff as scenario editor. Mr. Proctor is peculiarly well fitted to pass upon manuscripts as he has had long experience as a dramatic critic, editor of motion picture magazines and writer of feature scenarios.

Big Demand for Triangle Plays

More Than 200 Exhibitors Sign Contracts for Service—Many Legitimate Houses to Be Supplied—First Program Released Nov. 7.

THAT a demand for pictures such as those being produced by Griffith, Ince and Sennett exists in all parts of the country is shown by the large number of exhibitors who had signed contracts with the Triangle Film Corporation a week before the release of the first program, Nov. 7 and 8. Both dates are given that exhibitors may suit their convenience in starting the service on a Sunday or a Monday.

The books of the Triangle Corporation on the last day of October gave evidence of more than two hundred contracts with theaters, and it was considered probable that at least fifty more houses would be added to the list during the first week in November. Also it is estimated, without undue optimism, that by the first of the year double that number of exhibitors will be supplied with Triangle plays.

The number of contracts thus far signed with so-called "service" theaters is offered as one reason for confidence in the growth of the business. Leading exhibitors, such as W. H. Kemble of Brooklyn, Jake Wells of Norfolk and Richmond and Hulsey of Dallas and Houston, except to widen out the service from their own immediate houses to allied neighboring houses catering to high-class patronage.

A striking feature of the list of the two hundred and more Triangle theaters is the unusual number of big city legitimate playhouses included. Thus the Kernan Estate interests in Baltimore, represented by Messrs. Renton & Schanberger, have remodeled the Auditorium theater and will give an exact duplicate of the performance at the Knickerbocker in New York. It is rumored that one of the most important of the downtown houses in Pittsburgh will present the program as soon as the run of a successful play has been completed. Poli's theater in New Haven will show Triangle pictures, as will the Mishler and Scherer houses in Johnstown and Altoona, the Liberty in Cleveland, the Gaiety in Springfield, Ill.; the New Isis in Denver, the Minneapolis in Minneapolis, the Liberty theaters in Seattle and Spokane, the Majestic in Des Moines, the Proctor houses in towns near New York, the Trent in Trenton, the Jake Wells theaters in the Eastern South, the Crescent (now the Triangle) in Brooklyn, the Powers in Grand Rapids, the Southern in Columbus, and many others.

Among the picture magnates who have signed contracts with Triangle for their photoplay theaters are B. S. Moss, A. L. Shakmann, Picker & Bennett in Manhattan and the Bronx, Nathan Ascher, A. M. Andrews, and A. Bartelson in Chicago, Simpson & Gordon in Rochester, W. A. True in Hartford, C. J. Gross in Dayton, S. M. Baxter in Denver, J. G. Evins in Atlanta, T. S. Abernethy in Birmingham, and E. H. Hulsey for Dallas, Houston, Galveston and Waco. These are names picked almost at random from the list.

Small towns as well as medium sized ones and nearly all the large cities are included. The exhibitor at Plainfield or Watertown or Moline or Massillon or Gadsden will, of course, give only a sixty or ninety minute entertainment and the musical features will necessarily be less pretentious than those in larger theaters, but the films will be identical. The programs for the first four weeks read:

November 7.—Douglas Fairbanks in "The Lamb," Dustin Farnum in "The Iron Strain," Raymond Hitchcock in "My Valet," and Charles Murray in "A Game Old Knight."

November 21.—William S. Hart in "The Disciple," Griffith Players in "Martyrs of the Alamo," Hale Hamilton in "Her Painted Hero," and Keystone's "Saved by Wireless."

November 28.—Julia Dean in "Matrimony," Tully Marshall and Thomas Jefferson in "The Sable Lorcha," Raymond Hitchcock in "Stolen Magic," and Ford Sterling in "His Father's Footsteps."

Henry M. Marcus Dead

Last rites for Henry M. Marcus, manager and musical director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo's leading moving picture theater, one of the best known musical directors in the United States, was held at 2:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon at the family home, 110 Cottage street. Rabbi Louis J. Kopald of Temple Beth Zion officiated. Burial was at Forest Lawn cemetery. Mr. Marcus was 45 years old and a brother of Justice Marcus of this city.

Mr. Marcus was associated for twenty years with Michael Shea of this city, and prominent in vaudeville and moving pictures the world over. About four years ago Mr. Marcus left Shea's as orchestra leader to take charge of the Academy theater. He was afterward transferred to the Lyric and other theaters, and later became manager of the Hippodrome.

Cherished by every worker in vaudeville, as associate and helpmate, Mr. Marcus could boast no end of friends. One of his best was Elsie Janis, who always ascribed to Mr. Marcus the lion's share of the credit of her success, because of his encouragement and aid when she was a tot. When Miss Janis and her mother were in Buffalo several weeks ago they heard Mr. Marcus was ill and went to see him at his home.

Mr. Marcus was born in Buffalo and educated here and in Berlin. He was a member of Ancient Landmarks Lodge 441, F. & A. M., Buffalo Consistory and Ismailia Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

At the hour set for the funeral of Mr. Marcus, the orchestra at Shea's theater played "Lead, Kindly Light," while the musicians stood. At Shea's Hippodrome, the symphony orchestra paid a similar tribute to Mr. Marcus.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

WASHINGTON EXHIBITORS WIN.

Gain Legal Decision That Factory Inspection Law Does Not Apply to Theaters.

B. W. COPELAND, manager of the Rex moving picture theater, Spokane, Wash., and second vice-president of the Washington Theater Managers' Association, has just been advised, by E. J. Fisher, of Seattle, secretary of the association, of the success of the association in a case against the state in which the managers opposed an inspection fee of $5, claiming that the moving picture houses came under the factory inspection law.

The matter was first taken up in a friendly manner with State Labor Commissioner Olson, who treated the matter in the same manner and a friendly suit was brought to determine the matter. Members of the association experienced little difficulty with the inspectors after first declining to pay the inspection fee assessed pending the decision of the case. The technical point on which the law was contested was that it did not mention theaters or places of amusement. The attempt to collect was based on the law covering the number of employes that constituted a factory. The point trying to make a theater a factory was lost.

Mr. Copeland said: "The winning of this case alone shows the advantage of our organization, for otherwise we would have had to pay the fine, which would have been cheaper for individual theaters, while by organization we successfully contested the case and saved the $5 fee once or twice a year.

The annual election of officers of the association will take place in Seattle, Wash., Friday, December 31.

WANTS TO HEAR FROM INDIANA.

President Herrington Thinks the Hoosier Exhibitors Should Get Busy.

WHEN interviewed by our Smoky City correspondent, Fred J. Herrington, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, stated he wished to make a special and urgent plea to the exhibitors of Indiana through the Moving Picture World, which is the best medium he knew of to reach them. He said, "I want those boys from Indiana to get together and let me hear from them. The war tax is staring them in the face and it is high time for action. Don't wait until it is too late, but get together now and get on your toes and do something. Let me hear from you at once and let us get together and accomplish something.

"The state of Virginia was heard from this week and they expressed their desire of organizing and asked my help. I answered their communication by saying that I would do everything in my power to help them and that I would call a convention in that state either the last week in November or the first week in December. In the meantime I will get in touch with every exhibitor and solicit their help and cooperation."

Mr. Herrington said: "I wish to make it understood through this paper that I do not intend to go over the exhibitors' heads in any way, whatsoever, and that I never had the intentions to do so in the past, as was hinted at the Ohio convention."

The following is the letter which Mr. Herrington received from Benjamin Caplon, associate editor of The Screen Weekly, Richmond, Va., and he hopes that it is read by every reader of this paper as evidence to the way some of the states are waking up:

Mr. Fred. J. Herrington, President, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Dear Sir: We have been noticing since your election to the presidency of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, your intention of strengthening the various state organizations throughout the country.

As publishers of the above weekly dealing with the motion picture industry in this city, and coming in contact with the exhibitors here, we greatly feel the need of an organization here. Several attempts have been made here in recent years to found one, but all have been unsuccessful.

Conditions here now are in the worst stages possible. Deadly competition is rife, and therefore business is at low ebb. We understand that the same conditions prevail throughout the state.

Realizing the tremendous advantages that would result from an organization here, we ask your co-operation in helping us to form one. Although we ourselves are not exhibitors, yet we are dependent upon them and their success means ours.

Our idea is to form a branch here, using our publication as an organ not only for this city but for the whole state.

Exhibitors here would welcome this affiliation with you, but there is no one here to take the initiative. We are positive that your cooperation would aid us greatly, and if you could honor us with your presence it would be acceptable, indeed.

We trust that you will consider this matter at once, as it is a matter of grave importance that something shall be done at once.

Yours very truly,

THE SCREEN WEEKLY,
Benj. Caplon

ST. LOUIS LEAGUE ELECTS NEW OFFICERS.

The Theater Managers and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of St. Louis, at the regular meeting on Friday, October 22, held the semi-annual election of officers, reelecting nearly all the present office holders. Edward Pohlman, of the Mutascope theater, on Olive street, was reelected president; Fred Wehrenberg, of the Best theater, on Jefferson and Cherokee, vice-president; E. L. Root, of the Eagle theater, 1700 S. Broadway, secretary, and Miss Tillie Schwartz, of the Famous theater, 615 Franklin avenue, financial secretary. This is Miss Schwartz' third term in that capacity. A new officer is J. W. Price, of the Manchester theater, who is treasurer for the new term. The members are just now expending all their efforts in the fight against censorship, and at a public hearing of the Board of Aldermen in the City Hall on October 27, a committee composed of several theater managers and exchange managers were present to defend their cause.

BIOGRAPH SPECIAL OFF FOR COAST.

THE Biograph Special left Hoboken at 10:15 o'clock on the morning of Saturday, Oct. 30. On board were all the players from the big studio in the Bronx. They were due to arrive in Los Angeles at 11:30 on the morning of the following Wednesday. The train goes all the way without change.

The Biograph officials are departing from precedent in sending the company's playing forces to the west at this time. January 1 is the usual date. It was desired, however, to get the various companies settled down to work before the breaking of the rainy season, which last year seriously interfered with the production of their initial subjects.

PEARL WHITE SIGNS FOR ANOTHER YEAR WITH PATHE.

Pearl White, world famous as the heroine of the Pathe serials, "The Perils of Pauline" and the "Elaine" trio, has just signed a contract for another year with Pathe. She will first star in the famous theatrical success, "Hazel Kirke," which will be put into pictures by the Whartons, and then will probably be featured in a new serial. The series will be under the personal management of M. Ramirez-Torres, assistant managing director of Pathe.

Miss White has for several years been one of the three or four of the best known stars in the business, practically all of which time she has been identified with Pathe pictures. In fact, "The Perils of Pauline" may be said to have been her first great chance and the starting point of her fame.

Schools of Motion Picture Art

An Appreciative Study of Modern Dramatic Kinematography Both Here and Abroad.

By W. Stephen Bush.

ARTICLE IV.

The Lasky School.

DO WE agree that it is the mission of the motion picture to rescue our souls from the commonplace, to carry off the waste and the dullness which the daily grind accumulates, to stimulate and to capture our imagination, to appeal to our love for beauty and to stir those nobler and deeper emotions lying just beneath the surface of the convention and the routine of our daily lives? If such is the object of the screen, the Lasky school is a school of glorious achievement.

One Distinguishing Characteristic.

From the very beginning the Lasky school has specialized in beauty. I surely do not mean to say that there had been no specially beautiful pictures before the coming of Lasky. What I want to say is this: Lasky has developed the "beauty" possibilities of the screen to an extraordinary degree; it is evident to the most casual of observers that the creators of this school have spent lavishly of their time, their talent and their money to give us a "film beautiful." They have however been guided by the dramatic necessities above all other things, and they have never specialized in beauty just for the sake of beauty. The painter may indulge such passionate worship of the beautiful and love color and perspective for their own sakes; the man who is engaged in putting the drama on the screen must subordinate beauty to the dramatic values. The Lasky school has made beauty a new element of strength in the photoplay. All Lasky plays are not of even excellence, but a touch of this perfection in settings, a glimpse of this winning beauty, you will find in everyone of them. These are some of the things that help to distinguish a feature from its counterfeit.

Lasky Helped to Define the Word "Feature."

By this time the vast majority of motion picture patrons are quite able to tell a feature from a mere multiple-reel. A conception of a "feature standard" has more or less unconsciously crept into the public mind, and for this conception I think the Lasky school is chiefly responsible. Definitions are hard to arrive at even in logic, and in the world of amusement a definition at its best will always be more or less elastic. A "feature" lives longer in our memories; we feel more as if we had seen a play or finished a good novel; we feel as if we had enjoyed a complete entertainment, not merely an appetizer. The "feature" on its very surface must show something unusual, something more elaborate, something with a deeper purpose and a stronger plot than the old-fashioned single reel. The acting, too, must be on a higher plane; we expect a cast of artists; we must be convinced of much preparation; there must be evidence, and unmistakable evidence, of capable direction. There must be the larger scale and the higher quality. Judged by these standards, indefinite though they may be, the Lasky productions have been "features" from the very beginning.

The Lasky school refused to lean on the past. The men who are responsible for it—young men without motion picture experience—perceived the essentials of the new art and at once applied themselves to start a development of their own. I have watched this development at first with wonder, and then with increasing admiration. I do not think they ever made a false step. The history of the Lasky school is quite unique; it shows how finely this motion picture art responds to men who are resourceful, who aim high and who are not afraid to have ideals.

Often Impressive and Sublime.

I shall not attempt to say what the public likes best about a dramatic feature, but there is one quality in the Lasky plays which always scores heavily. In speaking of the sublime, an old writer of the schools says: "The sublime is attained when the salient and essential details are picked out from any incident or object to be described and are GROUPED TOGETHER SWIFTLY, TERSELY AND WITH ENERGY." In many Lasky plays these requirements have been fully attained, with the element of beauty added. The sound public taste, the taste which outlasts generations, is exceedingly fond of this style. It characterizes many of the most popular ballads. As a fine example of it I might cite the well-known old poem, "The Twa Corbies." There are strong touches of this in "The Goose Girl" and in other similarly grateful themes.

Look over your audience just before the curtain rises or the film play begins. All are engrossed with their own petty thoughts; in the big cities they are nervous and restless and unreceptive, in the country the mental outlook is often narrow and provincial. The audience, to be genuinely entertained, must be conquered and fascinated. To accomplish this in a motion picture theater much more is needed today than in the early days. Nothing will do it consistently and regularly but the feature of high merit.

Not Blinded by "Shooting Stars."

In the rush to transfer more or less famous "stars" to the screen, the Lasky school has kept its power of selection and discrimination. Its own company stands unrivaled, a fact which is all the more remarkable when one remembers that it is wholly self-created. They keep a moving picture test working in the Lasky studio and no "star" may pass into the light before the camera unless upon proper Missouri reaction. Glittering names alone count for nothing. The Lasky school wisely anticipates the day when the stars of the speaking stage have all passed into films and when the photoplay must demonstrate its rights to popular favor upon no adventitious aid and upon no basis except the basis of screen merit. This day is coming. Now is the time for "preparedness."

The American Screen Classic.

I feel tempted to call the Lasky feature the American screen classic. It is thoroughly American, whether in the theme or in the treatment of the theme. The school has scored heavily with a number of plays that brought the old European civilization into vivid and often amusing contrast with the heartier and breezier ways of our native heath. Its mastery of such subjects has been our marvel and our delight. "The Man from Home" and "Chimmie Fadden" are types of the play in which the Lasky school has specialized with obvious success. There is in every Lasky feature a delicacy of touch, a subtle power of suggestion, a turn of humor, an ever recurring note of sweetness and pathos which are peculiarly American.

A Wide Range of Subjects.

We cannot help wondering at the wide range of subjects which this youngest and most ambitious of schools has pressed into its program. Great ethical questions, the lights and shadows of our own American civilization, the dramatic elements in our industrial and political system, stories that have all the daintiness of a fairy tale, tragic themes, lively narratives—all have been told on the screen with about equal mastery. It all seems so easy and much like a trip to fairyland. Even the experienced eye is often deceived into believing that there has been but little toil and little sweat. The fact is that no company, or rather no school, works harder and with a greater variety of instruments. There are a score or more of collaborators, everyone of them a specialist. Perfection in details is an article of faith with the Lasky school. For the sake of correctness, absolute and ideal correctness of detail, this school will spare no effort. Perhaps one in five patrons will see this perfection in apparent trifles, but the conscience of the director requires it.

The School Has Much in Reserve.

There is a strong suggestion of reserve power and of coming triumphs in the very atmosphere of this school. The men who are responsible for its existence plan for tomorrow no less than for today. The material foundations are very firm and very deep. Success has inspired unbounded confidence in the ruling and guiding spirits. There is no school with higher aspirations, with loftier purposes. We have begun to conquer the prejudice of the highest class of theatergoers; we have begun to win golden opinions and to build up a faith in the higher destiny of the motion picture. None have contributed more toward raising the artistic and the ethical standard of the screen than the school of Lasky.

Art has been defined as an idealized imitation of nature, plus rhythm and symmetry. Lasky embodies the definition in the concrete, not always, but mostly.

AMID ETERNAL ICE.

"WITH the Camera Amid Eternal Ice," is a German film released by the Variety Films Corporation. Without doubt this is one of the best Arctic films yet issued; it is truly a wonderful series. As an educational picture it is of the first order and will be equally welcomed in scientific as well as scholastic circles.

The German relief expedition Leruer goes to Spitzbergen to find the seven members of the perished Schroder-Strauz Expedition. The personnel of this relief expedition is of the highest order, and, as is usual in these days, included an expert with the film camera. No disjointed haphazard pictures are taken, but from beginning to end the series is a most intelligent one. A map is repeatedly shown so that the course of the journey may be readily comprehended and intelligently followed.

While the interesting details of the expedition and its purpose cannot be discussed in this review, it is worth while to say, however, that they deserve the close attention of all educational students and authorities. Of the pictures themselves praise need not be stinted. Photography of the highest class bespeaks capable workmanship, while the thrilling events with which the whole journey is filled maintain an unabated interest which holds the attention to the value of even minor details.

Journeys over ice fields are without doubt of the most difficult character and present almost unsurmountable obstacles, the overcoming of which demands men of undaunted natures and capable of resisting unkindly climatic opposition. The most thrilling incident without doubt is the sinking of the relief ship under pressure of the great ice fields. To give realism to this scene the photographer is also shown hazarding his life to secure pictures of the sinking ship, a difficulty he most successfully accomplished.

Never before has such a scene been witnessed by an audience. Under the pressure of the ice as if in sinking sand, the good ship sinks slowly down before their eyes and produces one of the most peculiar sensations ever felt by a student of the pictures.

Ship Sinking in the Ice (Variety).

The dog-sled expeditions are a very distinct feature, and while similar to many former pictures are perforce of their special nature of new interest; one scene in particular is that in which the dogs are seen in a state of great fear because of the foreboding cracking of the ice beneath them.

Living alone in a hut, with only fields and mountains of ice, amid snow-storms and common Arctic dangers are given in detail; indeed, it would seem that for many long days the only work to be done was to take pictures of such conditions for the enlightenment of the waiting millions at home, and in all parts of the world.

That hunting expeditions were necessary is an accepted fact. Stale dried food cannot satisfy the average human appetite, to say nothing of the valuable dogs to whom some fresh meat is as much a necessity as a luxury. A bear hunt for the time being satisfies these desires.

Fresh Meat in the Arctic (Variety).

The film is a most unusual one, containing scenes hitherto supposed impossible, and is a valuable acquisition to the scientific and educational world, besides being of fullest interest to every lover of the pictures and deserving a place in every program.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

From all parts of the country reports come in of the activity of the churches in the use of moving pictures. The causes of this activity are manifold. The primary fact is found in the acceptance by the clergy that the moving picture is a permanent thing, that it has passed through experiment, trial, tribulation and persecution, and comes forth as one of the greatest aids to social and educational life the world has yet received. In some cases the attractive power of the picture houses has caused a breach in the ranks of the church services, and, in a spirit of self defense, ministers have come to realize that "the attractive power of a new experience" is applicable to themselves.

In another way credit must be given to the churches for recognizing the true value of the various powers of the picture in its new life-portraying successes.

"Still" pictures were in themselves an evidence of inactivity, but the living, moving, thrilling pictures are the most effective powers of inspiration within the grasp of man.

Already wherever trials have been made, the results have exceeded anticipations, and, so far as the writer knows, not one instance of failure in the use of church pictures has been chronicled.

In Brooklyn, N. Y., there is what is probably the largest Y. M. C. A. building in the world, erected at a cost of nearly two million dollars; so vast are its equipments that it has been designated as a "manhood factory." Here the moving picture is being given the largest possible scope in a proportion perhaps greater than the largest picture house known.

In Illinois the matter is spoken of as being state-wide, we read:

"The Methodists of Illinois are deeply interested in the subject of the church use of the moving picture. It is prob-

Spokes From the Hub

By Marion Howard.

WELL, the Hub had its first chance to see "Carmen" in pictures and "our Jerry" Farrar in the flesh simultaneously. It was a great night in Symphony Hall where Miss Farrar made her first appearance as a full-fledged opera star. The press has told you about it, and of the all-night ticket line, of itself a tribute to the star. To my mind the occasion was a splendid advertisement for the moving pictures and it made thousands of converts to the films in general.

The Film Club is booming and interesting local men engaged in the business of booking, etc. Its president took "the floor" at the last meeting and offered as a candidate for honorary membership David W. Griffith, whose work she extolled amid applause. J. Arthur Eslow, of the Universal Exchange, is a member of the executive board, and Samuel Grant, of the Exhibitors League and chairman for the big ball to be held here at the Arena in December is one of the delegates to the City Federation of Women's Club of Greater Boston, the Film Club being the latest to join. Thus the films will have a clear-headed champion if self-appointed censors hold forth. Miss Brazier read a convincing paper on "Censorship Opposed to American Principles," it having been sent her by this publication. Among those joining at this meeting was Stanley W. Hand, of the World Film Corporation. Miss Caroline G. Brown, of the Hotel Touraine, was elected treasurer and Francis Ferguson, manager of the Boston theater, to chairmanship of the finance committee. On Sunday, November 7, the charter membership will close.

John (formerly "Jack") Mason is seen at last on the screen and all fans went to see his "Jim the Penman" given by the Famous Players. Those of us familiar with the play feel it is well done and all the salient points brought out, but I wish Marguerite Leslie could have seen the late Agnes Booth Schoeffel do the letter act, for she did not emphasize her discovery sufficiently; furthermore she did not look five years older as the mother after all those years had elapsed. Mason made up as befitted the lapse of time but Harold Lockwood, one of the best of the young leads, made up too old, and was scarcely recognizable with too whitened hair. Russell Bassett as usual was finished in a thankless part as in "Sold."

I would suggest that the Famous Players producers or directors have some one to direct the English of their subtitles, as "Brings him home" is far from correct when in transit toward that home. It should be "carries" or "takes." This was seen in the pretentious film "The Fatal Card" with John Mason, and at the Exeter theater, patronized by those quick to notice an error. The man he was bringing (?) home was that veteran actor W. J. Ferguson, and if I mistake not I caught a glimpse of Grace Atwell in an early scene. She is a Boston product, once a member of the oldtime Museum Company, and is the wife of Edward Mordant, who is doing such good work in picture plays.

"The Soul of a Woman" is certainly gripping and Emily Stevens has done nothing finer in her film career. Then the plot is good and as for that baby in the first scene we have rarely if ever seen a better behaved one, especially when posing with his mother as the Madonna and child. Despite the great contrast in the scenes changing from the religious atmosphere of the monastery so reverently done, to the House of the Lost Souls, with its licentiousness, all was in keeping with the spirit and motive of the play and nothing really offended—rather a good lesson was there. It, however, required an actor of the type of George LeGuere to portray the difficult part of the boy and look it. There was scarcely a dry eye in that vast audience when he returned to those splendid Christian priests who took him in when a baby and taught his soul to grow, and who made it possible for the lad to return clean and none the worse for his look at the outside world where sin reigned. It had a tragic end for the mother who was more sinned against than sinning. A new feature accompanying this film was the writing of the subtitles, plainly seen through the moving pen and what an expert he is at handwriting! Certainly the Metro folks have a big card in all this. The tempest scene was the best seen here.

Through the courtesy of manager J. Arthur Eslow I am seeing some of the run offs of the Broadway Features at the Universal headquarters and rather like the novelty. Julia Dean, that sterling actress, has a goor part in "Judge Not," but more melodramatic than any undertaken on the speaking stage. I recall her work in "The Lily" under Belasco and with Nance O'Neil, but it was "namby pamby" compared with her stunts in the film. She has to run the gamut of emotions starting in with a gambling hell in Montana, ending with a trial for murder and subsequent freedom with a lover to her credit. The ornate scenes (interior and garden) are exceptionally well done, and the night ones in the drawing room were perfect. I note a more careful attention to detail in furnishings, especially of the desks and accompanying accessories. An able company supported the star.

* * *

"Out of Darkness" ought to be a good one for the general public to see because it is all about capital and labor and teaches a mighty good lesson for the indifferent idle rich. Charlotte Walker is the heroine who sees the error of her ways, when not too late. What a splendid piece of work Thomas Meighan does all through. Little Marjory Daw does a pathetic bit, and the fire scene is a thriller sure. Miss Walker is some weight, but is handled easily by Mr. Meighan, who rescues her from the flames when badly burned himself. Tom Forman is in the cast but "lost to sight to memory dear" when a boat sinks with the heroine early in the story, the latter, of course, rescued.

* * *

So our old friend Charles J. Ross is entering the field to further delight us. It seems a far cry from "Mme. Sherry" and "The Love Cure" to "The Senator" but he will make good, because of his personality. Well do we recall how he put his songs over with a near voice, regardless of the score, for he simply recited them, his magnetism aiding greatly. He is one of the several actors entertained here by the Professional Women's Club, when he shared the honors with Mme. Simone and Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Arden and told a pathetic little story in verse.

* * *

Just now we are having a treat in "Neal of the Navy," and wherever shown there is great applause over scenes depicting life in the navy. Young Courtleigh is very popular with feminine filmgoers. There is some betting over the identity of the brute man, with the Christlike face.

* * *

Three days in the week the Boston theater resounds with laughter over the World Film clever series called "You Know Me, Al," the marked feature of which is the wrong spelling in the sub-titles which concern heroes of the bat (base ball). An austere woman sat next me and declared that such spelling ought not to be seen by young folks after all the trouble taken to teach them how to spell. I undertook to explain the "why," but she had no sense of humor and declared that a woman of my age ought not to laugh at it. These skits are extremely funny and appeal to all lovers of the national game.

* * *

Believe me Francis Bushman in "The Silent Voice" made a big hit, and removed the unpleasant memory of him in "The Second in Command" (through no fault of his, however). The press agent of the house booking this attraction had an elaborate story in local papers about his loss of sight, recovery of same, etc., so there were many criticisms of such inexcusable inaccuracy. Our hero lost his hearing, an affliction met heroically at first and afterward rebelliously. The plot is cleverly worked out, the scenes are a delight to the eye, especially the two kinds of views of the park as shown to his servant, who was optimistic and whose acting was a gem in every way. Miss Snow did her best, but is too much of the ingenue type for a big man like Bushman. Film fans here are "delighted" that Beverly Bayne is to reappear with him. We like finished acting such as experience gives. Directors should pay more attention to the gait of the youthful heroines and stop the lop-sided tango walk which offends, to say nothing of its being a bit out of date. Another thing: look carefully to the spelling of your sub-titles. "Betrothes" jars some. Change it. We did not like the snake in this film and claim it to be an unnecessary and offensive bit of business. A snake is the vilest thing that crawls and even Francis X.'s plea for its life is ineffective. It has no place in such peaceful scenes where they are usually inflicted upon us unexpectedly.

* * *

Can anything be finer than "The Bigger Man," an excellent adaptation put forth by the Metro Company? Henry Kolker has done nothing more convincing. We liked especially the manner in which capital and labor is treated, and isn't the scene thrilling where the militia and strikers are at bay? I hope many capitalists will see this, as it is not a sermon but a story of the survival of the fittest—in this case the title is appropriate.

* * *

We have had some delightful Lubin films here of late like "The Great Ruby," with Peter Lang, an old Boston actor; Beatrice Morgan and other equally good players. The balloon scene was startling and unique. The Drews are always satisfactory, and there are several stunning releases on the way. It is a pleasure to meet the manager of the "Big Four," George Balsdon, in his cosy office. Just around the corner I saw the sign post locating the early home of Edgar Allen Poe, where they say that Henry Walthall will portray some scenes for "The Raven."

* * *

It was my pleasure to see "The Man Trail," a splendid Essanay offering, full of vigor and capitally acted by Richard Travers, Thomas McLarnie, who played an incorrigible villain, June Keith and others. It is a play of the wilds and full of incident. More and more I note that when citybred college men go West, as in the plays, they find their study and activity in athletics quite necessary as shown in this film where intelligence and sobriety direct the well-aimed blows with effectiveness. Ever notice it? Quite an excuse for the athletic side of college life.

* * *

What a pathetic little gem "His Last Word" is, showing the kindly thought of a band of telegraph operators toward the old veteran who had been dismissed on account of age and whom the boys pensioned. Such films should be shown everywhere. Walter Belasco, who bears such a resemblance to David, led in the good cause. That same evening at the Boston theater I saw the MacQuarrie brothers in "His Beloved Violin" and "The Finest Gold." The Universal films make a big hit here on Sunday evenings, when 50 per cent. of the spectators are men.

* * *

Some of us are taking up a study of lip reading in order to more readily understand part of the dialogue in the pictures. This reminds me. It was in the play "The One She Loved" with "Little Mary" and "The Little Colonel," otherwise known as Pickford and Walthall. The naughty young woman desiring an embrace by the hero feigned to sprain her ankle, and as she stumbled he grabbed her, but not affectionately. She thereupon said as clearly shown to us all: "Thank you, Mr. Walthall," and she said it twice, too. Where was the director?

* * *

Delightful in every way is "The Fascination of the Fleur de Lis," with handsome Cleo Madison and Arthur Shirley as seen at the Universal studio. The settings are sumptuous, and in keeping with the spirit of the play. Most realistic is the scene where a patient is removed from his private apartment to an adjoining one for an operation, performed by a self-made young surgeon involved in the thread of the story. It did not seem necessary, however, that the reconciliation of the heroine and her to-be third husband should be in a cemetery, where only "grave" subjects are discussed.

* * *

Well "The Whirlpool" is some film, quite gripping and admirably arranged by Fred Wright. It, too, has a good lesson for husbands who are so wrapped up in business that they unconsciously drive their wives to indiscreet if not worse ends. Nell Craig was excellent and the trial scene was a thriller all through.

SCREEN CLUB HOLDS ANNUAL MEETING.

THE annual meeting of the Screen Club was held on the evening of Saturday, Oct. 30. It was one of the most interesting occasions in the history of the organization. Following submission of the reports of officers and speeches devoted to the good and welfare of the club the new officers were formally installed.

Outgoing President James Kirkwood, in the absence of Vice-President Ben Wilson, asked Sam Spedon to install Billy Quirk as president, which he did in a few extemporaneous remarks that were heartily applauded. It was the second time during the evening that Mr. Spedon in his inimitable, philosophical style had entertained the members. Mr. Quirk in turn installed Ad Kessel as second vice-president, John Race as treasurer, Harry Ennis and Robert E. Welsh as secretaries, and A. C. Willat, Hop Hadley and Arthur Leslie as members of the board of governors.

These new officers were unable to be present: Harry Myers, first vice-president; Robert Edeson, third vice-president, and George De Carleton, member of board of governors.

King Baggot, chairman of the committee of arrangements for the coming ball, which will be held at the Astor ballroom on Nov. 20, told what had been done to date to insure the success of this annual function. Jule Burnstein, in charge of the sale of boxes, reported that sixteen already had been sold. The members were enthusiastic over the prospects of the club generally and of its reception and ball.

Gloria Fonda

GLORIA FONDA is lucky and handsome. She was adjudged the most beautiful girl in the state of Washington, where she won the Universal contest from a large field. Besides her good looks, Miss Fonda is a fortunate girl. Good fortune has followed her through her life—she has seen nineteen summers.

After the festivities in connection with the visit of the sixty-one beauties to Universal City were over, Miss Fonda was one of the several girls who were decided upon by the Universal officials for picture work. She was given a small part in a production, and showed talent. Later she was given a more important role in the Carter De Haven comedy-drama, "The College Orphan," and did it so well that Director-General McRae had Miss Fonda cast for the leading part in "The Masked Substitute," a one-reel drama which William C. Dowlan is directing and playing lead as well.

Gloria Fonda.

Miss Fonda possesses personal charm, and in her work before the camera is clever and graceful. Director Dowlan had been casting about for a woman to play leads opposite him, and when he saw in Miss Fonda's work, crude though it was at first, he asked Mr. McRae to make her his leading woman.

"I can scarcely believe my good luck," said Miss Fonda a day or two ago; "only here a few months, and the company gives me a leading role to play. I love the work, and you can rest assured that I intend to give the Universal the very best that's in me."

DEATH OF DAVID MILES.

David Miles, well-known director of motion picture companies, died suddenly at the New York Hospital, Thursday night, October 28. Miles was stricken with hemorrhages while walking on Fifth Avenue and hurried to the hospital where he quickly succumbed. The deceased had been in poor health for several years and made a brave fight against the inevitable. He leaves a widow, known professionably as Anita Hendrie.

The funeral was held Sunday afternoon, October 31, at All Angels church, Rev. Dr. Townsend pronouncing the Episcopal burial service. Present at the services were his widow and a sister, Mrs. M. E. Stanley, together with other relatives and many professional friends. The remains were taken to Milford, Conn., the birthplace of the deceased, for burial, and accompanied by Mrs. Miles.

David Miles was an actor of considerable ability before coming into the motion picture field. His first notable work as a director was performed for the Majestic Company when that concern was organized in 1910. Later he became director of productions for the Kinemacolor Company. After leaving the Kinemacolor he formed the David Miles, Inc., at Los Angeles, but the venture was not a financial success and he sold his interests and returned to New York and was arranging to produce a subject at the time of his death.

At a meeting of the Screen Club, held Saturday night, October 30, resolutions of condolence were adopted and forwarded to the family of the deceased.

able that many congregations will soon be provided with apparatus for employing this means of instructing and entertaining the young and old."

It is said that one church which has already adopted the plan as an adjunct to Sabbath worship, experiences difficulty in seating all who come, although the church is one of the largest in the state.

In Dallas, Texas, the "Woman's Forum" has gone on record in seeking "to broaden the scope of church activities by use of the moving pictures." Good pictures, they contend, are sermons in themselves, and, because there is a class of people who, on account of a sensitive inferiority in the way of dress, cannot go to the usual services of the church, but do find it possible to overcome their scruples when there is an exhibition. In New York at clerical conference for the discussion of "Church Efficiency," a plan was unanimously endorsed for the use of moving pictures in churches or church buildings, in conjunction with other legitimate means for causing the churches to meet the requirements of the times. Probably the latest innovation is the fact that in many places ministers are attending "operating schools" for the purpose of learning to operate or supervise the operation of the picture machine. One result of this increased and growing activity in the church use of the pictures will be the solution of the Sunday picture question. Like many former difficulties, this is one that time and developments will solve, causing contentions to cease, for everyone now recognizes that the good of the picture is the good of the people.

Grace Elliston

GRACE ELLISTON, one of the foremost actresses in the country, who achieved a personal triumph in "The Lion and the Mouse," will make her bow on the screen in a big five-part feature picture now in production at the Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc., studio, for release on the Metro program. The Elliston picture is yet unnamed, but it is said to be a distinctive surprise in both theme and construction.

Grace Elliston.

Miss Elliston was born in West Virginia, and made her first appearance on the stage in 1899 at the Lyceum theater, New York. She received her early training under the personal direction of Charles and Daniel Frohman, and was afterward the leading woman for Richard Mansfield, Nat C. Goodwin, Henry Millier and other big stars. Most of her time was spent in Broadway productions, but her long run in "The Lion and the Mouse" brought her fame throughout the country, and carried her to nearly every state in the Union.

As "Kathie" in "Old Heidelberg," in which Mr. Mansfield starred, Miss Elliston scored heavily. She proved her versatility by a delightful interpretation of "Olivia" in an all-star cast that appeared in "Twelfth Night." Her clever work with Henry Miller in "The Taming of Helen" is well remembered by playgoers. During the season of 1913 Miss Elliston caused blasé New York to "sit up and take notice" with the daring character "Molly" in "Ourselves," a startling human document. She also made a pronounced and favorable impression in "Damaged Goods" on its first presentation.

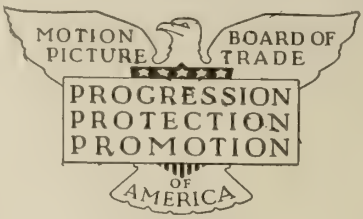
Edward Brennan, the noted dramatic actor, will be featured with Miss Elliston in her debut on the screen.

BILLY SHERWOOD JOINS KALEM FORCES.

Billy Sherwood, the well-known university student juvenile, has joined the Kalem forces. This versatile young actor had no sooner finished work as the young lover in George Kleine's five-reel feature picture, "Canavan, the Man Who Had His Way," than he was signed up to play heavy opposite Marguerite Courtot in the sixth release of the "Ventures of Marguerite" series.

BOARD OF TRADE HAS "TRADE-MARK."

Below is a reproduction of the official trade-mark of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, adopted and copyrighted by the publicity committee of the board. The spread-eagle with its shield and message of "Progression, Protection, Promotion," the organization's slogan, will hereafter appear on all stationery, circulars and printed matter issuing from the office of the board. It will be a distinguishing mark and evidence of standing in the trade for the users. The trade-mark will become a permanent part of the trade journals, and will also appear on the letterheads, films, lithographs, advertising matter and in the house organs of many of the manufacturers. Cuts of it will be made in a number of sizes, to accommodate the needs of those who wish to use it. Present plans are to have membership buttons made of the same design also.



Trade-Mark.

Some of the exhibitor-members have secured permission to use it in their programs and advertising matter and on their slides and lobby display. The trade-mark, designed by Lambert Guenther, art director of the New York Tribune and one of the best artists in America, is easily handled for embossing, stamping or printing, and is a distinct sign of stability and permanency in the motion picture industry.

MRS. WILSON WOODROW TO WRITE NEW PATHE SERIES.

Pathe has secured the services of the famous novelist and short-story writer, Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, to write the stories of the next Pathe series. The widely recognized talents of Mrs. Woodrow assure the literary excellence of the stories and the value of the pictures from the story standpoint.

Mrs. Woodrow has been so much in the public eye that a brief account of her life and activities should be of interest. Of distinguished colonial ancestry she has also the distinction of being the cousin of the President by marriage, her husband being Mr. Wilson's first counsin. She was born in Chillicothe, Ohio, her ancestors having been among the original settlers of that place.

After her marriage, with her husband, who was a mining, civil and bridge engineer, she lived in the remote mining camps of Colorado and Arizona, obtaining there much literary material of which she made later use. Her first story was of a woman in the mining camps and it had the unusual experience of being received by McClure's on a Friday, being accepted the next day, and the check in payment for it being in the author's hands the following Monday. The story was responsible for her being requested to write a series for McClure's, which series ran for three years. For five or six years Mrs. Woodrow enjoyed the distinction of being the only woman featured among the contributors of "Life." Recently she has been a steady contributor to Hearst's Magazine, which has featured her work.

PRETTY EDITH JOHNSON WRITES OF ART.

Miss Edith Johnson, pronounced by many film critics, as the prettiest girl in motion pictures, has written a very interesting story of her conception of motion picture acting as an art. Miss Johnson assumes the title role in "Sweet Alyssum," released November 15 as a Selig Red Seal play through V-L-S-E, Inc. Miss Johnson's story will be released early in November as Selig Filmland Experiences No. 7 free to newspapers in plate or mattrix form. The article will be two columns in length, embellished with a late portrait of Miss Johnson. Edith Johnson, before she became a Selig star actress, was known as "the girl on the cover," her sweet face adorning the outside covers of many popular magazines. Within the past two years her work as a movie actress has shown marked improvement, and she now enacts many important parts in Director Colin Campbell's stock company. In her own story she gives some sage advice to "movie-stricken" girls who have written her telling of their longing to become motion picture stars. She also discusses the art of dressing in motion pictures in a most interesting way.

Alan Hale, Biograph

By Thornton Fisher.

IF ALAN HALE had not been overcome at the first operation he witnessed at the Pennsylvania Hospital in Philadelphia as a student of osteopathy, he might today be rubbing the kinks out of human bodies instead of working at the hero business, and this story would not have been written.

He was born to be an actor, however, and during his youth some one told him he looked just like a doctor. Then a gentle neighbor eased the information that he typified a lawyer. Still others thought he resembled a minister. Young Hale listened to so much of this that he began to believe that if he resembled these types he could play the parts as well and thus came the first serious hunch that he would be an actor. Hale was born in Washington, D. C. His parents were not stage people, but they never tried to deter Alan from entering the theatrical profession.

From the old gallery of the Academy of Music at Washington the present writer has gazed with boyish credulity at the old Davis thrillers. In the same gallery, too, Alan Hale, also a lad, but quite unknown to me, gripped the railing with pent-up excitement as the villain still pursued her. While he was still young he was taken to Philadelphia where he began his real career. He spent much time as a youngster in Philly visiting the zoo—in fact, almost daily—and knew all the animals by their front names. It did not require a very long time for Mamma Hale to discover how young Alan's handkerchiefs came home in ribbons after a playful session around the cages and young Hale was the recipient of many a ringing tatto administered by Papa Hale on certain tender parts of his anatomy.

When he grew into youth he tackled the real estate business and then the newspaper game called him, but he relinquished it in order to study osteopathy. But on that memorable day when he fainted the ambition to become an osteopath beat a quick retreat and not long after he got his first job with the Orpheum Stock Company. The hardest thing he had to do in that organization was to keep from laughing as he carried a spear with the other supers.

Soon after, he became one of the principals in the company and received his first experience as a real actor in "A Message from Mars."

Cast for one of the important roles in "The Merchant of Venice," he assiduously plugged until he regarded himself letter perfect. After the first performance of the play the stage manager verbally indicated his displeasure with Hale's delivery: "Why," said the indignant young Hale, "I know those lines backward." "Yes," replied the director. "That's just the way you said them!"

YOUR GEE-WHACK MUSCLE IS TANGLED UP WITH YOUR WISH BONE!

OH, DOC! OH, DOC!

ALAN NEARLY BECAME AN OSTEOPATH
FISHER

Possessing a rich tenor voice, Mr. Hale aspired to operatic heights, but at the moment when hopes burned brightest and success seemed near, his voice failed and he was compelled to relinquish a musical career.

Several years ago he made his debut in the pictures. Prior to his picture work he wrote scenario after scenario which were sent to one of the New York companies. They were regularly returned—that is, all but one, and when Mr. Hale called to see the scenario editor he was asked, "Are you the man who has been sending me all those scenarios?" "Yes," said the actor, "are you the man who has been sending them all back?" But he landed his first picture job with that company, the old Champion Company. From there he went with Lubin and then came an engagement with K. & E., for whom he played the heavy things. Now when Alan Hale's name is mentioned one instinctively thinks of Biograph. He has made good in the pictures.

This fine looking chap and I spent an evening recently at his favorite Italian restaurant in New York, where interesting people are wont to gather, and there he modestly told me of his ambitions and what he hopes to achieve. He likes farce-comedy, and apparently this is his natural forte, for it is in such plays that Hale is at his best. Three farces in which he recently appeared are among his favorites, "Winning the Widow," "Heart Trouble" and "Bob's Love Affairs."

When Hale goes to his books, he prefers Dickens and historical fiction, from which he can glean something applicable in his screen work. For indoor sports the actor resorts to pool and billiards, but the real recreation and joy of his leisure hours is a low rakish gray roadster which he owns and pilots with considerable skill.

Alan Hale is one of the most popular members of the Screen Club in New York, as well as one of the club's comedians, and he has labored indefatigably in its behalf. His engagement with Biograph has been a delightful one and the actor with a loyalty born of faith in the company for which he plays is quick to establish this fact.

The last I saw of Alan Hale that night as we parted was a figure wrapped in a haze of smoke from his auto's exhaust pipe as it sped down the avenue for home.

STRAND TO SHOW WOMEN'S FASHIONS.

The daily matinees at the Strand theater are in the future to have added attractions of interest to women. It will no longer be necessary for them to visit the shops in order to view the latest styles in dress and thus wear themselves out. The management of the Strand has arranged to show moving pictures in colors of the latest styles for women. These pictures were taken in Paris and in this country and will embrace street and evening dresses for women of all ages; cloaks, riding and other sporting habits—in short, everything pertaining to women's wear. These fashion shows will be presented every afternoon, in connection with the regular program, and will be changed every week.

STRAND AT PIQUA OPENED.

Fred L. Adams has opened the Strand theater at Piqua, Ohio. This is a handsome new fireproof structure seating 500, and is equipped with all conveniences for the patrons. Mr. Adams was formerly the manager and proprietor of the Favorite theater in Piqua.

BRITISH NOTES

A COMPANY incorporated in the provinces will shortly set to work upon an ambitious representation of Marie Corelli's novel, "The Sorrows of Satan."

* * *

The one topic of the week for digestion by the entire industry has been the provisions of the Budget in respect of imported stock. Different views, discreet and otherwise, have been propounded by the dozen, embracing every conceivable aspect of the new situation. The American contingent in London regards the impending taxation with marked indifference, an indifference the staunchest patriot must admit is engendered only from a sound conviction that they are still on "terra firma" and that the imposed duty will, in comparison to the increasing turnover, prove to be a mere peppercorn. Others hold stronger opinions, and two at least, overestimating the strength of the measure, appear to have been discoursing to all and sundry in tones of injudicious elation. Will. Barker suggests a tax of six cents per foot on positives and four times as much on negatives in order to prevent evasion of the law, but the tax, which came into force September 29, definitely levies the duties mentioned in a former letter, namely eight pence per foot on negatives, one penny on positives and one halfpenny on raw stock. Mr. Barker's fears of evasion are somewhat premature; yet, assuming this to be under discussion, would it not be possible to flout even Mr. Barker's suggested remedy by importing a very carefully printed positive and making a negative from it at this end? This notwithstanding, he is credulous enough to imagine, and foolish enough to think, the trade and public will believe that foreign firms now upon the British market will risk the punitive consequences to their pocket, reputation and integrity the discovery of any such evasion would entail.

* * *

The trading of copyrights and negotiation, sale and purchase, and sub-contracting of screen rights of notable stage or literary successes, bids fair to develop into a profession of its own. Two companies for the sole purpose of acting as intermediaries between author and producer have come into being lately, while another about to be formed asserts in its prospectus that it will "procure, free of cost, from famous English authors and playwrights absolute assignments to visualize their masterpieces, 'simply' reserving for the authors a ten per cent. royalty upon the net sales of the films. When these have been duly and legally acquired," the prospective investor is informed, "they will be disposed of in America at exceptional prices, in addition to which we shall reserve a royalty of thirty per cent. upon the net sales of all copies of the films." Sounds simple, does it not, but not half so simple as the manufacturer would be who purchased rights from anyone beyond the author himself or his accredited agent.

* * *

The Foreign Office at last has declared a general embargo upon all exports to Siam and China, films of course being included. Since the beginning of the year, the governmental policy of restricting as far as possible the export of articles which might possibly in these critical times prove of use at home has been carried to extremities, but surely the prohibition against shipping kinematograph films to the Orient will require an unusual explanation; particularly so in view of the fact that these film exports generally consist principally of second-hand European and American prints which have already done duty in this country, to say nothing of the extensive traffic between London and China in junk. Exporters in a small way of business are bound to suffer incalculable monetary loss upon contracts that cannot now be fulfilled, while not a few of the manufacturers themselves will feel the effects of the new order.

Percy Nash, who left the Neptune Film Company a few weeks ago to take up a studio directorship with the British producing force of the Universal Company, has almost completed his initial effort with that enterprise. It is a three-part historical drama, entitled "A Royal Love," and apart from a strong story of court intrigue, embraces a few fine spectacular and costume groupings. From the former company he was associated with, Mr. Nash has brought with him to the Trans-Atlantic Company Miss Joan Rity, and she figures in the lead of "A Royal Love" as successfully as she appeared in the adaptation of Sir J. M. Barrie's novel, "The Little Minister."

It is generally admitted that the importer of raw film stock will feel the pressure of the amended Budget propositions fixing a specific rate per foot more now than was originally intended when the "ad valorem" duty was announced. A cent per foot tax upon all undeveloped and unexposed film base imported here grows into a considerable item when one reflects upon the statistics of importation and realizes that in future each of these thousands of feet of raw material has to pay ten dollars. One obvious outcome will be a substantial increase in the cost of film stock usually imported from abroad. The best-known brand here is the product of the Eastman Kodak Company, handled on this side by Kodak, Ltd., and has hitherto been sold at three cents, and less, per foot, according to quantity taken. A small proportion of film is manufactured near London by this company, but not sufficient to meet the vastly growing demands of the British trade, and rumor has it that Kodak, Ltd., contemplates manufacturing stock on this side upon similar lines to their plant at Rochester.

Incidentally it is interesting to note what resources the country has for supplying itself with raw material in the shape of kinematograph film. "Brifeo" stock is manufactured for a London company at Ashstead in Surrey; the Rajah Company manufactures a brand of its own in Cheshire, and the Birmingham Photographic Company prepares "Criterion" stock. The firm of Austin Edwards, with a large factory near London, manufactures several brands of film in ordinary photography and also a proportion of motion picture base. Yet, much of the celluloid base used in home manufacture is imported. It can also be truthfully said that fifty per cent. of the raw film used in this country either for duplicating or negatives bears the familiar edge-mark, "Eastman."

* * *

An application somewhat novel to licensing authorities has been made at Manchester. The owners of a number of billiard saloons in that city have petitioned the authorities to permit them to be converted into moving picture theaters. "The workingman," they said, "does not want billiards if there is a kinema in the district."

* * *

A Rheims inventor is seeking to patent a combined camera and projector, designed to use glass plates instead of the familiar band of film. Apparently its limitations will make it of special appeal to amateur kinematographers, of whom there is now an increasing number in the country. The idea of the camera is to record the exposures in a spiral form upon a sensitive circular glass plate. The exposures are naturally of a much smaller than standard size. From this a positive is made and, in conjunction with a fresh combination of lenses fitted in the back of the camera, converting it at the same time into a projector, it is exhibited by means of an illuminant contained in a supplementary lantern.

* * *

The Societe Anonyme Cellophane are the patentees of an improved chemical process of manufacturing celluloid film base. The main advantage claimed is an arrangement for coating the base with the emulsion in such a manner as to render affectation by atmospheric dust impossible. To attain this end the product is kept perfectly clear of contact with anything during manufacture and in the finished article emerges as an ordinary film with the emulsion side also coated with a protective transparent covering. This side is stated to be permeable to the developing and fixing agents and to offer no resistance to chemical treatment.

London Trade Topics.

A firm of patent agents, acting on behalf of the Melies Manufacturing Company, of Lexington avenue, New York, have registered the enigma "MinA" as the symbolic trade-mark for that company's films in Great Britain. MinA films are not as well known in Europe as they might be, but probably this is the first step to extended activities.

* * *

The Trans-Atlantic Company's third English production will be a morality drama, "The Woman Who Dared." Work has already been begun under the direction of Thomas Bentley, the producer, of the first subject, "Hard Times," which has just been disposed of as an exclusive at an encouraging figure. The T.-A. company will also get to work any day now upon a series of British comedies revolving around the adventures or misadventures of one "Poor Clem."

* * *

R. S. Edmondson, of American Film Releases, Ltd., has left these shores for New York on what is expected to be a short business tour.

* * *

The Billy Merson comedies of Homeland Productions, Ltd., marketed through the Globe Film Company, promise to be the most successful British "comics" of the season. The second of the series, "The Man in Possession," was unspooled the other day and received a positive ovation—not a common reception—with an audience of seasoned viewers. Also with Merson appear Lupino Lane and the well-known music hall duo, Bella and Bijou.

* * *

The Phillips Film Company, of Upper St. Martin's Lane, London, has purchased world's rights for the much-discussed play, "Wake Up," and has foreign rights for disposal.

* * *

The new subsidiary company of Mr. Spoor's undertakings, the Essanay Film Service, Ltd., has appointed H. W. Drain as publicity manager.

* * *

The game of touch and go with "Five Nights" continues unabated. The inexplicable law of contrariness which decrees "do as I say, not as I do" demands that if Madville tolerates its exhibition Blankhampton must raise its voice in pious horror. Belfast has banned it and Birmingham is trying hard to secure its withdrawal. Meanwhile in London and other cities it is being extensively rebooked.

* * *

"My Old Dutch," the Turner Film Company's feature, has established something of a record for a British production by being booked for upwards of six hundred theaters in a month.

* * *

Captain Vernon, a former member of the London staff of the Edison Company, has been killed in action in Flanders, and Lieutenant W. G. Pearce, of the same company is at home convalescent from shrapnel wounds received in Gallipoli.

* * *

The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Reginald McKenna) will have visitors from Wardour street during the next day or two. Deputations from two, possibly three, of the main factions of the industry are to wait upon the Chancellor for a first-hand enunciation of his new import duty and also, no doubt, to make a few suggestions. The manufacturers and exhibitors have each decided upon the approach but the renters have not yet made up their minds.

* * *

The first Billy Reeves film of the Lubin Company, "The Substitute," is not being released yet for a week, and already its sale, as reported by J. Frank Brockliss, closely approaches one hundred copies. Taking the cue from their contemporaries, the Lubin Company's agents are putting out some exceptionally good publicity.

* * *

A subject well off the beaten track of the usual style of "interest" film is being reissued next month by the Kinematograph Trading Company. The film is not new but is an exceptionally topical reissue and illustrates the performance of a torpedo-boat destroyer in a storm. The views were taken from the bow of another destroyer immediately in front.

* * *

The British Actors' Film Company is the newest productive unit to be registered at Somerset House for the purpose of exploiting the home-made article.

* * *

A growing practice among exhibitors in the metropolis and the few other cities which permit Sunday opening of moving picture theaters is to exhibit the successive installments of serials, such as "The Black Box" and "The Million Dollar Mystery," each on Sunday only. This is apart from the ordinary weekday program. Sunday programs, made up entirely of three or four installments of a serial, are also proving in popular demand.

* * *

Another idea which takes well at seaside or inland resorts of holidaymakers is the wet-day matinee. By discreet advertising, the managers of these theaters make it well known to the visitors beforehand that each day Jupiter Pluvius is out their operator, so to speak, is in. The fashionable nine a. m. motion picture session only applies to wet days.

* * *

A meeting of motion picture theater managers is being convened in London to discuss the advisability or otherwise of increasing the admission charges to exhibitors, in view of the probable increases in the cost of film hire.

* * *

The Clarendon Film Company has just marketed an adaptation of Max Pemberton's successful comedy, "In Search of a Husband."

* * *

A very popular novel of two decades ago both in Europe and America was "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab" and one that has been translated into many languages. Its translation to the Esperanto of the eye has recently been accomplished by the British & Colonial Company and will provide an excellent single feature mystery picture.

* * *

Another time-honored evergreen of Victorian fiction in "The Coal King" is at present receiving the studious attentions of the Neptune Film Company at its Boreham Wood studios.

* * *

Pathe Freres' London establishment is undergoing extensive alterations structurally. The private projection theater is being completely renovated and one of its new additions will be a refreshment bar.

* * *

A meeting is to be held in London of American manufacturers and their agents in this country to discuss the effects and probable effects of the new Budget provisions in respect of imported film. It is more than likely that the different American concerns represented here will jointly agree to a small all-around increase in the price of all films, whether features or split-reel subjects, that do not come under the category of exclusives. The opinion is prevalent among most foreign agencies in London that the renter and exhibitor must each be prepared to contribute a portion of the new tax.

"ZABLITZKY'S WATERLOO."

A one-act Casino Star Comedy by the Gaumont Company, released Oct. 31 on the Mutual program, features Jean Pierre Pierard, the European champion wrestler known as "Le Colosse." Also featured in this is Cissy Fitzgerald.

Jean Pierre Pierard.

No matter what the scenario may be, the Gaumont Company successfully picks types that make the story true to life. Its policy is to have a new star in each production, and thus it can always get the right player. Its release of Oct. 31 is characteristic of the excellent work being done on the Mutual program by its Casino Star Comedy company. The one-act photoplay is called "Zablitzky's Waterloo." Zablitzky is a champion wrestler who thinks he is a lady-killer. In all America there is just one man to play the part—and Gaumont got him. He is the European wrestling champion, known to all lovers of the mat game as "Le Colosse."

The Casino Star Comedy players make this a farce that combines speedy and laughable action with the refinement that is so characteristic of all the laugh-provokers that Gaumont turns out.

LIBERTY IS MAKING "JEAN" FOR ASSOCIATED.

Sadie Lindblom is taking the lead in a very pretty photoplay, entitled "Jean," at the Liberty studios at San Mateo this week, which will be released on the Associated program in the near future. It is a southern story and her part shows Miss Lindblom as a barefoot girl, almost in rags, and carries her through to scenes in society.

Among the Picture Theaters

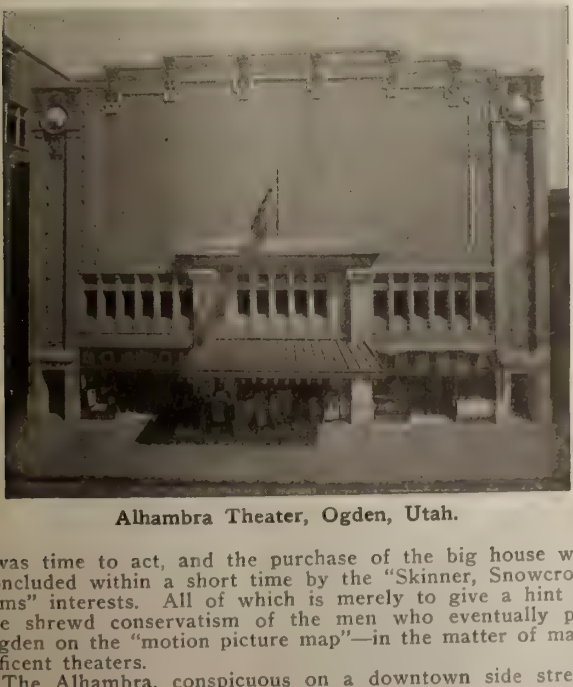
News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

ALHAMBRA THEATER, OGDEN, UTAH.

Under Management of H. E. Skinner This 3,000 Seating Capacity House Doing Wonderful Business—Musical Program Directed by Organist of Ogden Tabernacle.

THE ALHAMBRA THEATER, Ogden, is the "sister" house to the big American theater in Salt Lake, though not built by the same concern. For some time, however, until the recent purchase of the American and affiliated theaters in Salt Lake by the W. H. Swanson interests, the houses in the neighboring cities were under the same management. With its building, the Alhambra became the oasis of the large district of which Ogden is the commercial capital. Years before Ogden had progressed much beyond the empty-storeroom stage of motion pictures, the Liberty theater, in Salt Lake, was opening the eyes of the patrons of the larger city. Ogden progressed but slowly, though the real motion picture wizards of the state were sitting quietly back, counting the moderate donation of nickels and dimes and watching closely the "experiment" in Salt Lake. The watching eyes grew a little wider with the opening of the American theater by the audacious Midgelys, and after the American had continued many months without a sheriff's sign on the front door, the little company of Ogden men decided 'twas time to act, and the purchase of the big house was concluded within a short time by the "Skinner, Snowcroft, Sims" interests. All of which is merely to give a hint of the shrewd conservatism of the men who eventually put Ogden on the "motion picture map"—in the matter of magnificent theaters.

H. E. Skinner.



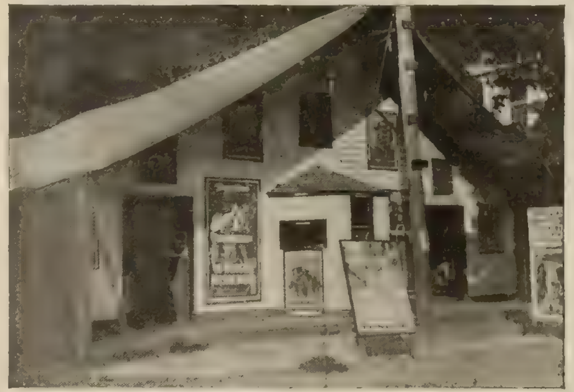
Alhambra Theater, Ogden, Utah.

The Alhambra, conspicuous on a downtown side street, was opened to the public something like a year ago. It seats nearly three thousand persons and is beautifully decorated and furnished, with restful foyers and retiring rooms. The musical accompaniments to the pictures and the concert numbers are furnished by a symphony orchestra and an immense pipe organ, under direction of the organist of the Ogden tabernacle. The financing and building of the Alhambra called for more than $200,000, and improvements have been made since the opening of the house.

IMPERIAL AIRDOME, HOT SPRINGS, VA.

Profits Made in Operating Open Air Theater to Be Used in Building Modern Photoplay House.

ONE year ago last Spring the Hot Springs Amusement Company of Hot Springs, Va., opened its Imperial airdome in that city. As can be seen from the accompanying illustration, the airdome is constructed of canvas stretched across wooden frame work. The place is operated from April to November, inclusive, and during these months it plays to a profitable business at a ten-cent admission price. All kinds of pictures are used, and the Imperial not only entertains the white and the colored race, but caters to the wealthy as well as the poor class of people.



Imperial Airdome, Hot Springs, Va.

The Imperial accommodates 300 persons, and has become a favored place for amusement seekers. A Power's 6A machine is used, and the size of picture projected is 9 x 12 feet. The length of the throw is 60 feet. The Hot Springs Amusement Company has been so successful in the operation of its airdome during the last two summer seasons that the officers have decided to expend a certain amount of the surplus capital in the erection of a modern picture theater of the closed type. No specific date has been set aside when the company will begin the building of this structure, but those responsible say that it will be in the very near future. H. T. Moore is the manager of the Imperial.

SIOUX CITY GETS A PLAZA THEATER.

The Plaza Theater Company, of Waterloo, Iowa, has taken a ten-year lease on a site in Pierce street, Sioux City, Iowa, upon which it will build a moving picture theater with a seating capacity of 1,200. The exterior dimensions of the new theater are to be 50 by 150 feet. It is estimated that $40,000 will be expended, and the name of the structure will be the Plaza. The entrance will be composed of a half dozen arched doorways, built of terra cotta. The front of the building will be of enameled brick. There will be a large lobby, and all the conveniences of the modern motion picture theater will be installed. A big pipe organ will be used. Work will be begun in a few months, and the theater is expected to be opened by March of next year. J. E. Bryant, assisted by St. Elmo Bateman, will be in charge of the projected Plaza.

COLUMBIA THEATER, PORTLAND, ORE.

Exclusive of Furnishings, This Photoplay House Cost $125,000—Has Kimball Organ and Charges Fifteen Cents Admission.

THE Columbia theater, Portland, Ore., of which a photograph of the facade is shown here, is one of Portland's large downtown moving picture theaters. Its location is on Sixth street, a hundred feet off Washington, and central to the fashionable downtown shopping district. Constructed two years ago, the building was erected in record time for theater construction and was completed within three months from the time the site was razed. It was built entirely by days' labor, the cost, exclusive of the furnishings, being $125,000. The seating capacity is one thousand, there being one balcony and four boxes. It was the aim of the owners, Foster & Kleiser, Inc., to use as soft-toned a decorative scheme as possible in the theater, and an absence of loud mural paintings is noted in the interior. To create the desired soft-toned effect, the murals are all set in panels placed close to the ceiling. The proscenium arch is of concrete, and the stage is equipped with a drop curtain of Neapolitan plush, costing $1,600. A matter specially worthy of mention is the balcony support. This is a single steel girder, weighing 23 tons, faced with concrete and so trussed as to obviate the use of any pillars whatever. A commodious women's rest room is provided off the balcony. The projection room is fitted with three Powers 6A machines and is well ventilated and fitted with automatic fire shutters.

Columbia Theater, Portland, Ore.

The exterior is finished with terra cotta and white plastic brick and outlined with hundreds of electric lights peeping through the terra cotta. The architectural style is French Renaissance. The lobby is finished in marble. The air for ventilating and heating is taken 11 feet above the roof and ducted into the basement, after which it is passed through a water screen and over heating tubes in cold weather. It is blown into the auditorium by a fan system which provides for an entire change of air every four minutes. The organ, a divided Kimball, is especially worthy of note. Besides the customary reeds, which are concealed over the proscenium, there is an echo organ with reeds and chimes set in a dome well in the center of the suspended ceiling, from which the echo sounds are thrown. A duct also leads from the organ loft to the front of the building, and when desired the duct can be opened and the music from the theater organ carried to the street.

The Columbia theater was opened by Foster & Kleiser, Inc., as a first-class picture house, under the direct management of O. T. Bergner. Mr. Bergner's forte was music, and accordingly the theater became known for the excellence of its musical programs. Karp's orchestra occupied the pit shortly after the opening of the house but was replaced by the Kimball organ; and the Organists' Guild held Saturday morning recitals in the house, to which advanced music pupils were invited. Film versions of the operas were shown whenever obtainable, and Mayor Albee of Portland recently remarked that the film version of "Mignon," together with the organ accompaniment presented at the Columbia, was one of the most delightful entertainments he had ever attended.

In July, this year, Foster & Kleiser, Inc., discontinued active control of theatrical ventures, and the Columbia was leased to Jensen & Von Herberg, owners of the Alhambra, Liberty and Mission theaters in Seattle. Mr. Jensen immediately took over the management of the house and outlined a policy for its operation similar to that successfully followed in the management of the firm's Seattle theaters. E. J. Myrick, formerly manager of the Alhambra in Seattle, took Mr. Jensen's place as manager in August, and Jensen & Von Herberg now class the Columbia as one of their most successful theaters. The Columbia uses the best film service to be obtained, and joined the other downtown houses in the raise to fifteen cents which went into effect October 10.

PRINCESS THEATER, WHITE HALL, ILL.

On August 28, last, the White Hall Theater Company, Inc., of White Hall, Ill., opened its Princess theater. The initial picture to be played at the house was the feature entitled "The Christian," and the ticket office registered 1,037 paid admissions for the first day of business.

Princess Theater, White Hall, Ill.

The outside dimensions of the structure are 40 x 138 feet. It has a seating capacity of 500 and cost $19,000 to erect. It has been equipped with a 25-foot stage. The manager of the Princess is Carl Lowenstein.

PERCY WINTER WITH RAVER FILM.

THE newly Raver Film Corporation has secured the services of Percy Winter as its director of productions. If experience in matters dramatic and a long connection with the legitimate stage as actor, producer and writer counts for anything, then Mr. Winter comes to his new position fully equipped to perform the duties imposed upon him.

Percy Winter.

The son of William Winter, long the dean of American critics, Percy Winter has almost lived upon the stage since the completion of his college career. Even before that he interpreted children's parts in well-known plays of the day.

From call-boy at the old Booth theater at Sixth avenue and 23rd street, New York, he steadily climbed the ladder, being associated with such stars as Joseph Jefferson, Edwin booth, Mary Anderson, Mme. Mojeska and John McCullough. He became stage director for Steele Mackaye in the first production of "Hazel Kirke" and later staged Bronson Howard's success "One of Our Girls." The next six years was spent with A. M. Palmer and was concerned in the production of a number of plays under that peerless manager's direction.

Among other notable connections should be noted Mr. Winter's association with David Belasco during the years of 1905 to 1908. Since then he has managed various stock companies and during his career has produced and revived more than six hundred plays and interpreted five hundred and sixty-three different parts.

The record is an unusual one and would indicate that Mr. Winter was more than well equipped to undertake the direction of the production department of the Raver Film Corporation.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Unprofessional.

"UNPROFESSIONAL" is surely a mild word to be applied to an exhibitor who clips from this department comment on the advertisement of a competitor, garbles the same and uses it for publicity, and unprofessional is an exceedingly mild word for the estimation in which we hold the management of the Irving theater, Brooklyn. Not long ago we commented upon some programs sent in by Mr. Wunderle, of the Wyckoff. We did not like the frequent use of the country store idea and said so. The comment has been garbled and reprinted by the Irving, with this comment:

> ### Our Business Methods Have Always Been Neutral.
> A little over 8 months ago, War was declared against the Irving Theater, and some of our regulars knew it, since the Battle, rotten tomatoes and other dangerous combustibles have been flying around, and not a single patron in camp was killed or wounded. Continue to be a patron; your manager served on board the U. S. Battleship Texas during the War with Spain and carries a medal awarded to him, by Congress, for excellent service and bravery, which will be displayed at the ticket box. I am ever ready to go to war with any one that dabbles in any way with this business. Continue to be a patron, you are safe. I have the best ammunition, the V-L-S-E and General Film Program.

Mr. Wunderle's explanation that there was a reason for the gift stuff and his program has been distorted into a confession that his program was poor where, to the contrary, Mr. Wunderle sought to forestall the criticism that he was giving too much show for the price.

We fail to see that the usual service medal for enlistment on a battleship in action makes the management of a house any better, and it does not seem to. The circular will doubtless react in Mr. Wunderle's favor; we most assuredly hope that it does. There is no place in this or any other business for foul fighting and we can understand even three country stores a week when Mr. Wunderle is up against such a competitor.

This department is conducted to help exhibitors better their advertising and not to aid men who cannot fight fairly. This is the first time that such dirty use of constructive criticism has been made and in future a similar happening will be guarded against by the elimination of the exhibitor's name in such a case.

Incidentally Mr. Wunderle has changed his program style to match a change to four and five-part features and so gets a more open program. If we had the Wyckoff we would take about half a page of the space for a weekly chat on business decency, managerial courtesy and the difference between good films and many commercials. It might have some effect.

Ruffner and Bagley on Lobby Work.

Ralph R. Ruffner of the Liberty, Spokane, sends in two photographs so good that we are not only going to use both but to let the big one rise to show the detail of the lobby construction. Mr. Ruffner writes:

> That little editorial under "Facts and Comments" in Sept. 11th issue concerning sensational posters as a means of enticing business into a theater caused me to dig up two photographs of the Liberty's lobby showing how we display our wares before the passerby.
>
> They may be called expensive, but the cost is not so great when apportioned among the number of days of the picture's engagement. Take "The Face in the Moonlight." The three sheets were really beautiful, but they look rather flat in the photos. The name "Robert Warwick" stood out from the boards about an inch and a half; the photos at the top were illuminated from the backs. The color scheme on one of the threes was red and gold, and on the other green and gold. The balance of the display speaks for itself.
>
> The display on "When a Woman Loves" represents the most novel three sheets I have ever seen or heard of. The drapes are of old rose velvet, dark green background; the title, "When a Woman Loves," being cut out of the board with red tissue paper pasted on the back through which the light from a 40-watt lamp shone. Emmy's face was cut out of the one-sheet posters which accompanied the picture, and were mounted and placed on the board so that she had the appearance of peeking from behind the curtains or drapes. A regular stock three-sheet frame with illuminated title and velvet portiers represents a new wrinkle in the advertising line, I believe. The cost of the display was $10 per board; picture ran three days; cost per day per board, $3.35 approx.
>
> Very seldom do we use any paper in our lobby, and then when we do, it is off to one side—for the sharp-shooters to find (and they find it, believe me). To the exhibitor who cannot afford to pay for high-class card work, but who is dependent upon the posters furnished, I believe there is great room for improvement in the eastern field where experts select the scenes from the plays for their paper subjects. Every exhibitor of any experience knows when paper can be counted upon to "pull" and when it can't, but how often have we all seen examples of short-sightedness on the part of men (or were they children) who selected the poster designs for everything and everybody but the actual, direful needs of the exhibitors?
>
> One of the most flagrant examples of carelessness in selecting a scene—one where a golden opportunity was lost—is to be found in the Metro release, "Cora." Imagine yourself an exhibitor with a picture on your hands by that name; the paper poorly gotten up, with nothing but slack business in sight, and the only claim advanced for the picture is that it is "A Potent Tale of Love and Gratitude." What are you going to do to help get it over? Why, when you sit down and see that studio setting, where the girl is posing for the artist, you are going to promptly fall dead, for had that scene been carried on the six sheets, it would have meant a great deal to every man showing "Cora." And so it is with productions being turned out right to-day. Put some live-wire showmen on the job selecting poster subjects, men who know the value of good judgment and the crying need of the game from the box office standpoint, and right away the barometer of good times will rise with all of us.

> Again returning to the enclosed photographs, it is too bad they cannot be reproduced in the actual colors, for they do not do justice to the beauty and artistic work of our Mr. Ray Bagley, formerly of the Empress, Missoula, who originates and executes all our card work.

We might write eleven pages on posters and still do little good. Sometimes a poster is made before the story is started. The artist can get no "stills" or photographs of scenes, because none have been made. He must fake as best he can. Perhaps, too, the director is one of those haughty cusses who rises superior to poster needs and does not consider the value to his firm of a few well-made photographs of the most important scenes. Most manufacturers do their best to get spirited scenes, but cannot get the material. You cannot fire an otherwise good director because he will not turn in the proper stills—and he knows it.

The Original?

Having erected a bomb proof, we present for your notice the vest pocket program of the Sampson, Penn Yan, Pa., which L. E. Barger says is the original V. P. Now shoot, but remember that you must beat ten years, for that is the age of the Barger program. He used to put out 200 and get some off the floor. Now the edition mostly goes out of the house and the number is larger. He carries five one-quarter inch spaces of advertising. These pay the cost of printing. Think of that, some of you who sell half your program space for about the same money these minute ads bring. One and one-quarter inches of space pays for the printing of five hundred 2½ by 4½ four page programs on red stock done in black, good stock, good display and good press work.

It seems to be the concensus of opinion that the vest pocket is the most valuable form of advertising used. In the order of their mention, the verdict seems to be the vest pocket, the door knob, the book program and the railroad folder. The vest pocket works the hardest, as a rule, because it may be so easily carried, but it must be remembered that the real vest pocket really is small enough to go into a vest pocket or a pocket book. The intermediate size that is neither V. P. or folder is a waste of money.

Changes Suggested.

The Palace, South Bethlehem, Pa., sends in its house program for suggestion. It is a four pager, 8½ by 11 inches. The type page is 6¾ inches wide and the lines run clear across, unless a cut is used. This is too wide a line for eight point. It tires the eye to travel clear across the page. It would be better to set three columns to the page, letting the cuts come as they will. It would also be a glood plan not to tell the full synopsis of the features. Tell about the story rather than the story itself and interest will be left aroused and unsatisfied, but if the patron comes to the house knowing the ending before he sees the title flashed, he cannot enjoy the story as much as he would did he not know the ending. The three column page will also permit the insertion of some gossip and house talk. This last is to be provided for by a rearrangement of the back page, but more should be run inside. The front page should carry the list of releases for the week in compact form and then a reader about each title should be run somewhere in the paper and the date of showing again given. The stock used for the issue sent is too good. A lighter paper can be used to as good effect, and a news will give better cut printing than the calendered paper since most cuts supplied are coarse screen for quick newspaper work.

A Regular Daily.

H. E. Jameyson, of the Pathe traveling forces, sends in a genuine curiosity in the shape of The Free Pointer, a two-page daily newspaper published by the Tucker Brothers, of Oklahoma City, in the interest of their Met theater. The sheet has a circulation of 20,000 copies daily and is printed on the Tuckers' own presses from type set in their own composing room. More than that, Mr. Jameyson says that during his visit to the business office three persons came in to complain that they had not received their paper. Just imagine people kicking because they do not get your advertising matter!

The sheet has nearly seven columns of classified ads. There is about a column of local news, a half column of house announcement to back up a half page advertisement, and the rest is trade advertising. The bill advertised is "The Melting Pot," "The Broken Coin," "Neal of the Navy" and "The Diamond from the Sky"; all on a single program, mind you, for five and ten cents.

And Mr. Jameyson writes of another man there who was running six serials and looking for a seventh for the odd day.

We think that the Tuckers hold the pennant for the present in that they print their own paper. There are many exhibitors who issue papers and a number owning their own small printing plants, but we do not know of another exhibitor, outside of the many newspaper editors who also are interested in picture theaters, who own plants large enough to get out two full-sized pages daily for a run of twenty thousand.

A Y. M. C. A. Exhibitor.

H. E. Dodge, General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., Fall River, Mass., sends a program card and this most interesting letter:

> I have been much interested and greatly helped from time to time in reading the departments under your supervision that appear week by week in the Moving Picture World.
>
> On Saturday, September 25, we begin our third season of motion pictures, as per the enclosed program. We have attempted all kinds of advertising, but have finally settled on three kinds, (a) cards similar to the one enclosed which are given to our patrons as they pass out, and which gives the program for the following Saturday. (b) Signs on the front of street cars. (c) Posters inside and outside of our building.
>
> You will readily understand that the Y. M. C. A. cannot run every kind of a picture. We have to be very careful of the dramas and comedies that we exhibit. In selecting these, we have been very fortunate in having the assistance of Mr. Louis M. Boas, who is Marcus Loew's agent in Fall River. In fact, we never book a drama or comedy without his O. K. on it. Mr. Boas knows the type of picture that we want, and never "misses fire" on his selections.
>
> Our total attendance for afternoon and evening reaches from 600 to 1,000 per Saturday. Ninety per cent. of the afternoon audience is children, and the same proportion is adults in the evening.
>
> The constituency of our audiences is composed of church people who never go elsewhere to see motion pictures—adult people who do go elsewhere to see motion pictures—high school students and children.
>
> If you have time out of your busy life, I would appreciate a frank criticism of these cards we are using as an advertising medium.

The cards are three in number, but pretty much alike. We prefer for size the card for the opening of the season 3¾ by 6 inches. The other cards are narrow and do not let in a line as nicely. On the other hand one point rule boxes help the display, and throw into relief titles and features. The panel scheme should be used on the wider card, not always but sparingly and when it is desired to give special emphasis to a release. The show is given only on Saturdays, a matinee and night performance. The opening bill this season listed Edison's "Out of the Ruins," a George Ade fable, a "Ham and Bud" comedy (a stage story at that), a "Hazards of Helen," a Paramount travel reel, two other travel pictures and a Pathe Weekly. This is clearly not a church show and yet a diversified as well as a clean program.

For a one-day program the single side card is the equivalent of the four page vest pocket for a week, and about the only suggestion of any value that we can offer is that the date should appear at the top of the card as well as the bottom. Persons naturally look at the top for the date, so it should be put there and again at the bottom as a reminder. Apart from this the card is about as good as comes, though the admission price might be added.

We wonder if Mr. Dodge ever looked into the scheme used in other parts of the country of using a single reel at the Sunday afternoon meeting for the text for a talk. In many parts of the country, particularly in the South, this has been worked to good effect.

Says It Paid.

Mrs. R. R. Moore, of the Ideal, Akron, Ohio, writes that they are still feeling the good effects of the recent anniversary and that they are going to have one like it again next year. And you'll note that she says next year and not in six months. Although she has only a 250 capacity she works the program and has had forty consecutive issues so far. The smaller the house the greater the need for keeping it filled, and a program with some good chat to back the list of films always pays.

Try the chat proposition for yourself some time. Pick out some one reel that you know is better than the average. Boom it in advance for a better than usual one and see if it doesn't swell business.

In a Nutshell.

George Editor Carpenter puts it all in a nutshell in a circular letter he sends out to the patrons of the Notable Feature Film Co. He says:

> Don't get away with the idea that it is the amount of space you secure in a newspaper that brings results. Busy people have not the time nor the inclination to read a column of adjectives devoted to a motion picture. It is the short, pungent paragraphs that bring home the bacon. The reading public does not care a whoop about what a great show man you are, "the play's the thing."

The last issue of Real Reels, by the way, is an extra covering the Paramount convention. It was double the usual size and three times as good and should help to put Paramount on more places on the map around Salt Lake City.

A What? ? ? ? ?

Harry Anderson, of Nashville, Tenn., sends in what he says is the first issue of a "Magazette." The thing looks suspiciously like a house program and is run in the interest of several theaterettes by Mr. Anderson who is an advertising agentette, or perhaps we should say agent since the suffix suggests the diminutive and Mr. Anderson is a regular. But dropping the kidding, he brings out sixteen pages and cover with full programs for the six houses of the Crescent company and enough good reading to carry along. There is some local talk, some general matter and the comment on the films as well as a lot of good foreign advertising, but not too much. It doesn't look much like a number one, but then it was gotten out by a trained man who has done his experimenting in other ventures. We welcome the Crescent and hope to stay on its mailing list.

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing) of photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

Just What?

PRESENTLY there will be need of a conference of directors to decide upon certain arbitrary meanings, or patrons will be unable to follow some stories. There is no need for an arbitrary language such as exists in the school of pantomime. This is forced and unnatural. Already we have too much of the labored but supposedly self-explanatory gesture. We need less; not more, but there are some usages that must be made uniform to be made intelligible. Chief of these is the use of the fade.

In the present time the fade generally indicates a vision instead of the double posed vision formerly used. But sometimes it is also used to indicate a lapse of time, replacing a timed leader.

It is here that the confusion arises and we know of one unreleased feature story that is injured by the interchangeable use of the fade for visions, lapses of time and to break minor jumps. Most directors fade to vision and when a character looks thoughtful and the picture fades down, we know that what immediately follows is what the character is thinking of. On the other hand, some companies, notably the American, fade down at the end of swings of continuity to indicate the cessation of that line of action and the commencement of a new phase of the story. Again some directors use the fade for both, without discrimination, others fade for time and dissolve for visions and still others use straight fades for time and fade to a diaphragm or at least blur the corners of the frame for a vision.

It is all very confusing to the spectator and probably to some writers who are eager to take up the newest styles in production, but the safest course for the writer to follow is to fade for visions and lead for time and leave the rest to the director.

Universal Wants.

William H. Lippert, the new editor of the eastern office of the Universal, writes of his wants as follows:

> In announcing my appointment as scenario editor of the Universal Film Manufacturing company in charge of the eastern studios, succeeding Mr. Raymond L. Schrock, who has been advanced to the post of director with this company, I wish that you might aid me in calling the attention of photoplaywrights to the fact that the Universal company is in need of good scripts.
>
> We are particularly anxious to obtain our scenarios from experienced writers and these must be all strong virile plots. With its largely diversified program, writers should be able to place with us scenarios of strong forceful pictures.
>
> Personally I am in favor of stories of the "red blood" type. Understand I do not desire melodrama, but I want plots that are human, where the situations are logical and not impossible and strong counter plots that make screen pictures worth while.
>
> Under our new organization, I can promise our contributors early consideration of their scenario and a prompt reply. We have now a large staff of competent and experienced readers, of good strong staff writers and we can act upon all scripts within a week. Of course, the scenario which requires no alteration on our part is the one for which we are going to pay top prices. We want the best and we want what is new.
>
> Our immediate needs are one and two reel comedy dramas for Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby, and two reel dramas particularly featuring Ben Wilson. We can also use original three reel stories.

We hope that Mr. Lippert in the east and Mr. Clapp in the west will succeed in devising some scheme for the handling of scripts that will protect authors against loss. This is one thing that has kept the real writers out of the Universal offices to a large extent.

Taylor Wants.

J. O. Taylor, of the Taylor Motion Picture company, Yuma, Ariz., writes that his company is in the market for Western, Indian or Mexican scripts in from one to three reels. Mr. Taylor does not state his releasing affiliation.

Wildcats.

If you persist in sending your manuscripts to companies that do not ask for scripts, you have no right to complain if you do not get the stuff back. If you see the name of a new concern and rush the stuff off before waiting to see what they are going to do, and if the company goes to smash, there is no one to return your story and it may go into the waste basket. No concern is under any obligation, legal or moral, to take care of unasked contributions. In the case of the companies that advertise their wants, there is some such obligation, morally if not legally, but moral obligations are apt to be lost sight of when the company has gone to smash and there is no one to undertake the work of shipping back the scripts.

Good salesmanship does not lie in sending out scripts to as many concerns as possible, but in making the greatest possible income with the smallest expenditure for postage.

And yet, in response to repeated requests for complete lists, we are preparing an address list that will cover the ground as completely as possible. This list will be ready for distribution about the time this item is printed. You are welcome to one, but do not expect this department to jump in and dig your scripts back for you. If you want to be foolish, go ahead, but on your own head rests your folly.

Schemes.

S. A. Van Petten was recently invited to send in some schemes, spoken of in an earlier letter. He sends in these:

> To begin with, I use a loose-leaf book about 6 by 8 as a Clippings Book, classifying under the following heads: Plotting, Characterization, Synopsis, Technique, Leaders and Inserts, Comedy, Miscellaneous. Formerly I used more subdivisions but I found that the extra time required for the classifying was not justified by the gain. I subscribe to every publication dealing with photoplay and short-story writing, and from these I clip, classify and paste everything that I consider worth preserving for future study and application in my own writing.
>
> Another thing. I remove the pages of the World containing the synopses, and bind each week's synopses together permanently. This I carry around in my pocket for study whenever an opportunity presents. Later each is numbered and filed away for future study and reference. I also clip and preserve synopses of stage plays. Also, as one of your correspondents suggested some time ago, I cut out and keep illustrations showing arrangements of sets as to doors, windows, furniture, actors, etc., which I think will be of assistance. In addition I have a collection of photos of the leading photoplayers, as I find it assists me to visualize if I have before me pictures of the players that I have selected to play the story that I am working on at the moment.
>
> Since I have been specializing in comedy I have worked up a Comedy Index, giving one line, in shorthand, synopsis of every comedy released of late years. It is so arranged with headings that I can glance through it and in a few minutes discover whether the comedy idea that I have in mind has been used or anything resembling it. Moreover in this way I can see how similar ideas have been developed by the various companies. I confess that it was a monumental task at first, and requires considerable work to keep up to date, but I think it is a great help to me.

It seems to us that Mr. Van Petten keeps in books much that he should be keeping in his head, though perhaps this is his method of memorizing, just as many actors of the stage find it easier to study by copying off their parts than to memorize wholly through repetition.

His scheme of copying sets is good, not that he puts this into the script but because he can plan the action better if he has some idea as to the sort of room he is working in. Lately we advised getting a book of house plans to study the floor layouts and our office pupil came in the next morning with a monthly on house decorating, which is quite another matter. The idea was to get the floor plans and study rooms in relation to each other. Frequently a director is unable to conceive a house such as the author builds—and the author would be hard put to draw a diagram himself.

Reading.

An author writes to ask about his reading. He says:

> And as to reading. Joe Roach of Essanay told me, in substance, some time ago that he did a great deal of reading, not for immediate use, but for the purpose of storing his mind with material, and that in time what he read would come forth transformed into something entirely different. From what psychology tells us I presume he is correct—it must be put in there before it can come out. Now, owing to my limited time, I can't read everything, or anywhere near it. I was wondering if it wouldn't be advisable to pick out one of the better magazines that specializes in plot rather than characterization, such as the Popular. I don't suppose the fact that I am especially interested in comedy makes any difference—there's just a hair line between a laugh and a tear.

It will not be advisable to pick out one magazine. The author who would store his mind with raw material must read not one but many magazines, he must read books and circulars and trade papers and the Bible and the Koran and anything else that comes along. The more you read the more material you have to work with and a footnote in a railway time table may suggest a better story to you than seven magazines. It was a footnote to the Koran that suggested "The Sultan" and the "Roller Skates" and "Pepys Diary" has yielded several suggestions that Samuel himself would never recognize. If you have no time for reading, you must make time somehow, and whether you are interested in comedy or drama you must read as widely as possible. There is little real difference between the two.

Train Wreckers.

Properly placed, it does not take a very large stone to throw a train off the tracks and a single foolish incident in a photoplay may spoil the entire effect. Only the other evening a large audience laughed heartily at the moment of greatest pathos in a three reel play because the film people acted so contrary to real life. The scene was supposed to be the auditorium of an opera house and the hero threw a fit when he saw his wife on the stage. They let him have the center aisle and the spotlight and the lady came down from the footlights and held his head while her maid brought a wrap and they went out through the front of the house just as the script directed. Several times before, the audience had chuckled in the wrong places, but this brought a roar of laughter and what was left of the effect was utterly spoiled. You cannot always save the director from blunders, but you can at least keep the stuff out of your script and put it squarely up to him if you stop and think of the probable visual effect of any particular scene.

Wrong Door.

Recently an anonymous writer sent in a long arraignment of the National Board of Censorship for passing vulgar comedies. The writer is advised that the board does not pass such stuff. It is put out without approval. The board issues for the use of directors a two page sheet of suggestions which, if followed, would rid the market of stuff of the burlesque show type. If the suggestions and rulings of the National Board were closely followed, there would be few local censors. It is because stuff is released over the objections of the board that there is a feeling that something must be done.

The board very truly says:

> The question of the treatment of "slapstick" comedies is a very difficult one to deal with as a matter of censorship. As a rule, the basis of these comedies is usually unobjectionable, the objection lying in the suggestive and excessively vulgar actions of the comedians.

This is precisely where the trouble comes. Given a comedian with no refinement of taste and an easy going director, the cleanest comedy can be utterly ruined. Very often it is.

And It's So.

It is a commentary on average production methods that one author is holding up all his rural comedy dramas until producers get to the point where they can appreciate the fact that the present day tiller of the soil now sports an automobile instead of chin whiskers. Each time a rural story is produced, the director seems to think that he must dress his players in the fashion of before-the-Ford. If you can get over a comedy of the farm life of to-day in such a manner that the director simply cannot call for chin whiskers, you might get a pretty good story.

A Change of Heart.

In speaking of his accumulated scripts, a newly arrived author writes:

> Of course there is the morgue, but I haven't a thing in it that I want to sell, now.

That's a good way to look at it. He has a lot of unsalable scripts, but he does not want to try to market them on the strength of his newer work. He is unwilling to reduce his batting average by slipping a nearly good between two really good stories. He knows that is not the way to get ahead. And he knows, too, probably, that in time he can resurrect these defunct experiments and give them new life by a little careful work.

The first instinct of most writers, when they score a success, is to seek to press their luck by sending in their back numbers. And that is about the worst thing that could be done. The next submission should be better than the one just sold. It should not be a remnant. The editor will read the second script with eagerness, but if it is poor he will view succeeding ones with a suspicion that is close to prejudgment.

An Annex.

Writing in appreciation of Technique of the Photoplay, a recruit adds the suggestion that this should be supplemented by a smaller work bringing that volume down to date. The idea is good, but there is such a supplement, and this it it. There have been comparatively few changes of importance in the past couple of years, but this department keeps the reader right up to the minute even on the unimportant changes. The photoplaywright department is not something to be read and thrown away. It should be kept and studied. That is what it is for.

Agents.

One of the Chicago schools now supplies its course for $5 to those who will tout for the school and further offers a cash commission for any victim landed. No wonder we've been getting letters in which the authors state that they learned a lot from a course.

Writing and Selling.

It is easier to write a script than to sell one, for obvious reasons, but even when you write good scripts, scripts that should sell, it is not always easy to dispose of the product. In the first place you have at least three persons who must be pleased, and their ideas are not always the same. The editor looks at a script for story. He wants a real plot well developed and logical. The director regards only the situations. He cares little for logic so long as there are strong scenes; scenes of vivid and startling action. The manager of production wants something he can sell to his exchanges; something striking, that will make good posters and sound well in synopsis. Like the director, he cares little about the logic. It is two to one against logic, but generally the editor sees the story first, so logic must be a feature of the story, but the story must also be told in big, gripping action and not merely in placid narrative. There must be the visual as well as the mental punch. That will get it past the director. To please the manufacturer you must get a story that presents some unusual features; something more than people walking around a room or through country lanes, and yet the sensation must not be so costly as to eat up the profits. It is by no means an easy matter to please all three. The director might appreciate a story with a duel in the air between two aeroplanes, but the manufacturer would know the exact number of extra prints he would have to sell to get back the cost of the planes. Again a director might "eat up" a story that a manufacturer would reject because of the offense that would be given a certain class of persons. Aim to please all three—and when you can, you will have earned every penny you get.

Personal Interest.

"There are hundreds of stories right here in this town, if I can learn to write them," is the announcement of a would-be writer. There are, but even more important than their writing is a knowledge of how to get them to the general public in a form that the public will understand. The man born and raised in the city takes no interest in the local news of some country weekly. He knows none of the people mentioned and it does not hold him spellbound to learn that Hank Marvin has painted his barn or that Sue Smith is suing William Simpson for breach of promise. On the other hand he will read with interest the story of Miss Smith's suit if it can be shown that Simpson cannot keep his promise to the lady because he already has eleven wives. That feature is unusual and raises the item to the dignity of telegraph news, and it will be clipped by hundreds of exchange editors. The stories, then, that will make good are not those that interest because the author knows the persons he writes of. They are those that are either possessed of an unusual appeal or those that are interesting entirely apart from the personality of the participants. It is very true that every town and village contains the material for hundreds of good plots, but by no means will those tales be of general interest unless they are told by a writer skilled in giving charm to the usual or making the usual unusual.

Paving the Way.

A certain well known feature editor says that more stories sent him are spoiled through being topheavy than from all other causes together. The story moves swiftly and surely to the climax and then the author has to sit down and interpolate a few hundred feet of vision to tell how it all happened. One submission recently ran smooth to the approach to the climax. This was led up to and then halted while in a swing of fifteen vision scenes something that happened before the start of the play was explained. Then the other half of the climax was sprung, but the surprise was all gone. Most of these stories could be worked with little or no explanation if only they were planned right, but a busy editor has no time to sit down and plan it out and so the submission goes back.

With Open Eyes.

Writing with much warmth, an author enclosed the carbon of his script and the criticism of the produced story. "It is not fair," he declaims, "to take my story and ruin it and then blame me for the authorship." And we'll bet two days' salary that a few years ago he was one of those who used to kick for credit on the screen. If you sell a story to a company in these still-crude days, it is almost certain that the story will not get on the screen as you wrote it. It may even be unrecognizable, but your name will probably be on the title. If you do not want to be blamed for the faults of the cutter and the director, do not sell stories. That is about the only way out of it, for the studios will not bother about pen names. If you take the cash you must be prepared to take the blame—and you can be reasonably certain that there will be blame.

Changing Over.

The old advice to change over from exterior to indoor stuff about this time of year no longer holds good. It is not a good plan to send outside stuff to the companies having studios in or near New York or Chicago, but there is plenty of market all winter for exterior stuff, so keep it going, but send to the right addresses.

Variety.

One photoplaywright who constructs his plays slowly and laboriously tells that he finds it is easier to write three or four at once, or rather to be working on several in different stages of advancement. Some dramatic authors find it helps to work on all of the acts of their plays at once, going from one to the other. Variety to one's work is certainly a help. It is particularly useful in the case of multiple reels where the action must be gone over repeatedly in the rough draft.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 110.

BEST answers will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

"What is a "quarter size," "half size," "full size" lens? What is meant by "stopping down" a lens, and why is it sometimes done? What objection is there to the type of objective which focuses by twisting the lens barrel? Where should the lens focusing screw be placed, and why? How would you test your lens for distortion of the picture?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 104.

The Roll of Honor on Question 104 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; John Solar, Watertown, New York, and W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York.

I have concluded to publish the replies of Brothers Solar and Crawford, because each deals to a certain extent with a little different phase of the matter.

Reply to Question No. 104.

By W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Question:

Suppose you had a 4½-inch diameter plano-convex lens next the arc. How close could you advance the arc before encountering the critical angle, and where would its first effect be felt? Is there any possibility of encountering it at any other point than at the rear surface of the rear condensing lens? Does placing the shorter focal length lens of two plano-convex lenses in front tend to bring about loss through critical angle?

The Answer:

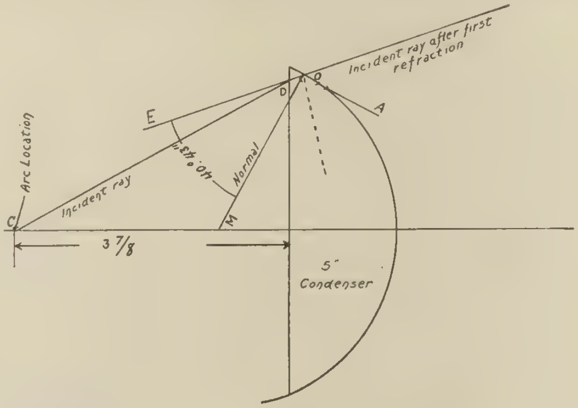
With a 4½-inch plano-convex lens next the arc you can advance the crater within 2.614 inches of the surface of the condenser before encountering the "critical" angle, which is 40° 43′, the angle formed by the ray of light and a perpendicular to the face of the condenser where the ray strikes it. At this angle the light is completely reflected from the lens and does not pass through it at all. The first effect would be felt at the extreme outer edge of the condenser. A ray refracted through the rear surface of the condensing lens may encounter the critical angle at the front surface of the lens, and again at the surface of the next lens. The longer the focal length of the rear condenser, the greater the divergence of the rays, hence, if the condenser of shorter focal length be placed in front, instead of in the back, where it belongs, the rays will diverge more, and have a greater tendency to cause loss through "critical" angle.

Reply to Question No. 104.

By John Solar, Watertown, N. Y.

The question infers that the critical angle is approached by moving the arc toward the condenser, whereas we approach it by moving the arc away. With the range of movement in the ordinary lamphouse, we cannot arrive at the critical angle with any condenser of longer focal length than 5 inches. The arc would have to be about 10 inches from the condenser in order to arrive at the critical angle with a 5½-inch lens, and about 14 inches with a 6-inch, and in either case the critical angle would occur at the extreme outer edge.

Referring to the diagram, critical angle is the name given to the angle M. O. E. when the corresponding angle of refraction equals 90 degrees M. O. A.; that is to say, after the ray at the second surface is at right angles with normal. In the figure the arc is 3⅞ inches from the condenser. The incident ray to the first surface C. D. is refracted at D, and after refraction takes the direction E. O., and this with M. O. (normal) forms the critical angle M. O. E., 40 degrees 43 minutes. The ray E. O., after refraction, takes the direction O. A., and just skims the surface of the lens, as shown by the arrow heads, and is at an angle of 90 degrees with normal. If the arc be moved slightly forward the point of critical angle will be moved toward the outer edge of the lens, and some light will be transmitted at point O. If we move it back slightly the light will be reflected in the direction of the dotted line. There is no possible chance of encountering critical angle at any point of the condenser combination except at the second surface of the back condenser—that is to say, under any condition encountered in practice.



[You are quite correct, Brother Solar, but it was the principle I was after, not the actuality of practice. By moving the arc forward toward the condenser, as Brother Crawford says, the critical angle will be encountered, first at the outer edge of the lens, and, as the arc is still further advanced, then further in toward its center, though, of course, the critical angle can never be encountered all over the lens at one time. The effect of critical angle would be a loss of light, or, in other words, efficiency. It is, however, purely a theoretical question, since, unless we should at some time adopt condensers of larger diameter, it is hardly possible that critical angle would be encountered in practice as Friend Solar points out.—Ed.]

Unfair Conditions?

The following statement appeared in the Ledger, one of the Columbus, Ga., daily newspapers, on Sept. 30. Later this statement was replied to at considerable length by M. P. M. O. Union 639 of Columbus, and the union now requests me to set forth their side of the trouble.

> NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC!
>
> THE GRAND, AMERICAN and BONITA THEATERS did not discharge their operators or reduce their salaries as reported, but they walked out, without giving us a moment's notice. WE REFUSED TO RECOGNIZE THEIR LOCAL UNION ON ACCOUNT OF VERY UNFAIR CONDITIONS IMPOSED UPON US. The Union Orchestra of the Grand Theater also refused to recognize them or walk out in sympathy with them. The above theaters have always been in favor of union help and are still paying union prices. It is not a question of salary or hours, but of principle. We are to-day paying as much as ever to have our machines run.
>
> This is our ONLY and FINAL statement.
>
> GRAND THEATER,
> By R. E. Martin, Prop.
> AMERICAN THEATER,
> By Jas. Johnson, Prop.
> BONITA THEATER,
> By W. H. Tolbert, Prop.

Replying to the foregoing the union, in brief, says: "The Bonita theater discharged one of our men and employed a non-union operator instead, whereupon the union, very naturally, pulled out their other man, following which the proprietors of the three named theaters appeared in a body in the operating room of the Grand and told the Grand operators they could only retain their positions by quitting the union. The same thing was repeated at the American, and notwithstanding the fact that the union had a contract with the manager of the American they were told peremptorily to give up the union or quit."

The statement of the union is too lengthy to publish in full, but the statement of the managers that they have always been in favor of union help and are still paying union wages; that it is not a question of salary, or hours, but of principle, is a proper subject for comment.

Our expert will help your projection.

In the above statement the managers contradict themselves flatly. If it is not a question of salaries, hours or conditions then what in the name of heaven could be these unfair conditions of which they complain.

It seems to me that if simply on a matter of principle these managers object to doing business with union operators, although willing to pay union salaries and allow union conditions, then they ought also to refuse to do business with a bank which is a member of the bankers' union, or employ an attorney who is a member of the attorneys' union (Bar Association), or have a theater built by union bricklayers, and above all things refuse absolutely to join the managers' union.

In the interests of harmony I might point out that many of the largest employers of labor to-day not only employ organized labor, but deal with the union as a body, and, as a general proposition, find it far more satisfactory than the old way of doing things. It seems to the editor that these managers are attempting to occupy a position long since found untenable by the railroads and many other large employers of skilled labor.

Warning Signal.

Rochester, New York, writes:

> I am thoroughly in accordance with the stand of the General Film Company against the unsightly string of punch holes at the end of a reel. It certainly looks bad, and is, moreover, entirely unnecessary. I am using a device which eliminates the need of any signal of any kind on the screen. It consists of a metal, trough-shaped receptable, placed underneath the reel in the upper magazine. It is split in half, and each side is insulated from the other and connected to opposite poles of a buzzer circuit. When rewinding I place a washer in the reel at the proper distance from the end, and as the reel runs out the washer drops down into the trough and closes the circuit, whereupon the buzzer giving the signal, and I switch over to the other machine. The action of this little device is positive, and you cannot miss the signal, as you sometimes miss the punch mark on the screen when your attention is distracted for an instant. One advantage of this plan is that you can place the washer any distance from the end you may desire, and have your signal work at any particular spot in the reel.
>
> If you get caught without N. I. cement when running N. I. film, trim the edges square and cement a strip of inflammable film over the joint. Regular cement will stick inflammable film to the N. I., though it will not join two pieces of N. I. I have often wondered how four and five day films could possibly get so much oil on them as some I have seen. Recently, however, I was in the operating room of a brother operator, and observed a nice little pool of oil in the base of the machine, into which every turn of the intermittent dabbed the lower loop. Every inch of that whole film had a blotch of oil on it, unless the oil was cleaned up before the end of the film.

Now here is a brother who has the right view of things. What he has said will be of benefit to thousands of operators in other operating rooms, and, moreover, this benefit is accomplished without in any way, shape, manner or form injuring him. I did not myself know that regular cement would stick ordinary film to N. I. The washer scheme looks like a good one. The only possible objection that could be raised is the fact that it must be put in every time the film is rewound, and moreover it will not work where the Feaster Film Feed is used. But as the brother says the signal is positive, and has decided advantages which he has named.

As to the oil smeared film, why I believe all Rochester men belong to the union. Now I wonder if it ever occurred to this operator who was daubing up film with oil through rank carelessness and sloppy work, that he is injuring not only his own work, but the work of every other operator, union and non-union, who must thereafter run that reel, unless somebody cleans off the mess he put on it. Does he stop to consider that the daubing up of that film is going to indirectly bring discredit on the work of other I. A. men? The audience don't know what makes that picture "fuzzy" on the screen. It simply blames the operator, who is innocent because he received the film in that condition. In my opinion it would be the duty of the Rochester local to endeavor to locate this man and punish him, by fine or suspension, for deliberate negligence in his work, tending to bring discredit on the work of other union men, as well as upon himself, and through him upon the I. A. An operator who at this late day does not know that one drop of oil is an abundance on any projector bearing is not fit to be in an operating room at all, much less the member of a union.

Two-Wire vs. Three-Wire.

Glasgow, Kentucky, writes:

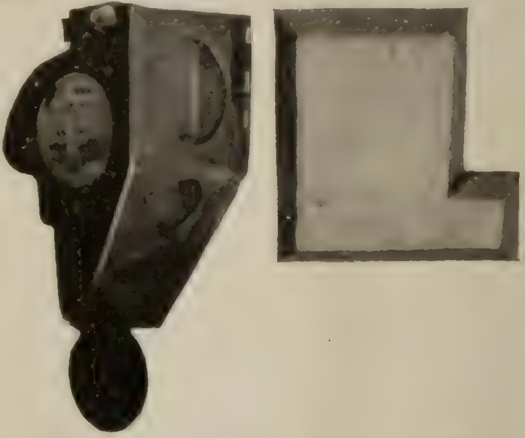
> Before going into my present trouble I must thank you for help in the past, although your answer did not quite fit the case. The reason for the jump on Pathe film was wrongly made patches. The intermittent sprocket was not worn out. It was in good shape, but after changing it everything went O. K. Many thanks. Our trouble now is, the light company has given us 110-volt current from a two-wire system. They are now going to change to a three-wire system, and asked if we could use 220 on three lines, though they claim we will only get 110. We use Hallberg's "Standard" economizer on one machine, and on the other a Bell inductor, the latter giving the better results of the two. The light company claims that by connecting through center line and one outside we will still get 110. We don't have to have it, and they don't insist on making the change, but they say it will give us better light. The Hallberg economizer is a 40-50 ampere, 110-volt A. C., and the Bell a 40-60 ampere, 110-volt A. C.

Yes, by attaching to the neutral and one outside wire you will get 110 volts, though it will have a tendency to unbalance the light company's system, but that is not anything you should worry about if they are satisfied. I would refer you to pages 40 to 43 of the Handbook for an explanation of the action of a three-wire system, if you have one. If you have not, then I would advise you to get one just as soon as the new book is ready—by January 1, I hope. There is no reason why you should get a better light with the three-wire system, unless the present two-wire is overloaded—which is quite possible. You get a better light from the Bell-Howell economizer because it has greater amperage capacity than the "Standard" Hallberg you have.

Improved Six A Fire Shield.

Brooklyn, New York, says:

> Users of Powers Six A machines can manicure their lower fire shield into simple and positive fire prevention by adopting the suggestion shown in the attached photograph, because breaks in the film are immediately detected through those openings, which are covered with glass one-eighth of an inch thick.



> The other object is an oil cover, of the value of which I am also convinced. Am using it to keep oil off the motor disc and friction wheel. My present friction wheel has been running twelve hours daily since December 13, 1913, and still is like new, except for the rawhide; much of that has disappeared as a result of periodical trimming. I submit these after one year's satisfactory use.

The present Powers fire shield is open on the right hand side—that is to say it is perforated. I cannot see where the fire prevention comes in on this, although some operators would appreciate the privilege of watching their lower loop. As to the oil shield, I cannot make intelligent comment, because I don't quite get the idea. The illustrations are passed along for examination and consideration by our readers. Would appreciate a description of Brooklyn's method of trimming up the rawhide friction wheel.

"Daylight" Screens.

Mr. Paul Davis, Boise, Idaho, wires the department asking the addresses of manufacturers of daylight screens.

Now it seems to me this daylight screen business is being just a little bit overworked. There is no surface in the world that can properly be called a "daylight screen." The only genuine daylight screen is one in which the surface is so thoroughly shaded that the daylight does not reach it practically at all. It may have a very deep shadow box, or may be made with a large number of very deep shadow boxes in the form of pigeon holes. The only way you can view a picture on a true daylight screen is directly in front of it. I would most respectfully suggest to screen manufacturers that they cease using the word daylight. Some screens will give a more brilliant reflection than others. By using heavy amperage you can see a picture even on a plaster screen in tolerably bright daylight, but there is not a screen surface on earth, and there never was, and there probably never will be, one which will show a good picture with its surface exposed to the broad, open light of the day. The Day and Night screen has gone out of business. Let us get down to brass tracks on this screen proposition, gentlemen, and confine our remarks to telling prospective purchasers that we have a most excellent screen surface, without using the word "daylight," which is, to say the very least, misleading.

It Helps Him.

Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Florida, encloses reply to Question 99, and says:

> Am getting used to answering the questions, and it seems as though the more I study the less I know. Nevertheless I do know one thing, and that is that studying these questions is doing a whole lot for me. I have learned more since starting to answer them than I would have imagined possible.

There are several thousand others in this glorious land who would discover the same thing if they got busy on the questions.

Motor and Dynamo Brushes.

Minneapolis, Minnesota, replies to Question 98 and propounds the following questions:

> (a) When the brushes of the dynamo or motor are sparking and their position on the commutator is changed, the sparking is often reduced. Why is this so? What I am getting at is the underlying reasons for the thing. (b). Are hard or soft brushes best? (c) Is a thin or a thick brush best, and how thick should the brush be? (d) How much pressure should the brush have? (e) What is for and against carbon and copper brushes?

(a) It would require a great deal of space to completely explain this particular matter, since it involves the whole scheme of commutation. In the first place there are two kinds of sparking, one due to a dirty commutator, and one due to wrong position of the brushes. Sparking that is due to the wrong position of the brushes has a bluish, brilliant color, whereas sparking due to dirty commutator usually has a duller, somewhat reddish tinge. Other things being equal sparking is least when the brush is in what is known as the commutating plane, a position ordinarily somewhat in advance of what is known as the "neutral plane." At the instant commutation takes place the current in the armature coil in which the current is being commutated has its direction reversed, and the reversal causes self-induction, which acts precisely in the same manner, or has the same effect, as though the current possessed weight. Now if the brushes be so set that commutation takes place in the wrong position, or at the wrong point, then as each segment passes out from under the brushes the coil to which it is attached will be thrown into the circuit carrying current flowing toward the brush as an idle coil—that is to say, a coil carrying no current. This creates additional resistance in the circuit and, due to self-inductance, what might be termed the momentum of the current seeks to jump the air gap between the segment and the brush, instead of instantly changing its path and flowing through the idle coil, and thus sparks are formed. If the brushes be rocked ahead (in the direction of armature rotation) to the correct commutating plane, then the coil will not be idle, but will be carrying current in the same direction as the current already described (to produce this condition is the principal office of the inter-poles of modern machines) and under this condition the current does not seek to leap the air gap, or at least is not nearly so likely to; hence sparking is reduced or eliminated. (b) Very soft carbon brushes have a tendency to deposit carbon on the commutator, which is, for several reasons, objectionable. A brush of medium hardness and of good quality is best for ordinary work. Very soft brushes are suitable for certain special work, as are also very hard brushes. Brushes having their outer ends coated with copper give better contact with the brush holders. (c) If the brushes be too thin there will not be sufficient time for perfect commutation, if too thick there will be trouble in another direction. The necessary thickness depends on width of commutator bars and degree of angle of brush with relation to commutator. The proper brush thickness for each machine is determined by the manufacturer, and the brush holder supplied by him indicates the thickness of brush to be used. Get brushes to fit the holders and you will be all right. (d) Just sufficient to make good electrical contact. Too much pressure will cause unnecessary friction, unnecessary wear, and unnecessary heating. Too little friction will produce poor electrical contact, with consequent sparking and damage to the commutator. No rule can be given which can be applied in practice by the average man. One and a half or two pounds pressure per square inch is supposed to be technically correct for carbon brushes. (e) Copper brushes made of guaze, if rightly constructed, are the best brushes made. They are, however, expensive and require more or less expert attention. Copper wire brushes require much attention, and have other objectionable features. Copper brushes have a tendency to roughen the commutator, and when they are used, the rotation of the armature in the wrong direction, even for a short distance, might cause serious damage. Carbon brushes cause less sparking than copper. The carbon having higher resistance than copper, particles which may become embedded in the insulation are not so apt to short circuit adjacent commutator bars. With carbon brushes no serious damage will be done even if the armature be rotated in the wrong direction for a considerable distance, or even for a short space of time. Copper brushes are more flexible than carbon, and any roughness of the commutator is apt to have greater effect with carbon than with copper brushes.

On the whole, however, the carbon brush is much superior to the copper article for all ordinary work. Copper brushes are now seldom used except for machines supplying very large amperage at very low voltage—as for electro plating.

No Damage.

E. C. Jarvis, Lansing, Michigan, asks for the address of the Radium Mat Slide Company, and says:

> In setting up two Powers machines, I find that although they are only 18 inches off center, one of them seems to be slightly out of focus on the long side. Have raised one side of the aperture plate the thickness of one of the aluminum cards enclosed, and find it corrects the fault. I am wondering, however, if this will be detrimental to the film—in other words, does it make too much work on one side of the intermittent sprocket? I don't myself believe it will do any harm, but some of the boys think it is bad.

Sent desired address by mail. No. You have only raised the aperture probably ten-one-thousandth of an inch. Theoretically, of course, this would make a heavier pull on one side than on the other, but practically the difference is too slight to be seriously considered, and, moreover, the stiffness of the film itself will prevent the sprocket teeth on one side from having any more pull than those on the other side, therefore no damage will be done to the film. Should you get the intermittent sprocket shaft that much out of square with the camshaft, then the condition named would obtain, and the effect would be decidedly bad.

Wants to Use a Thimble.

L. H. Woodruff, Vincent, Ohio, says:

> In the course of a year I have several dollars' worth of carbons in the form of stubs. When using an economizer on these stubs, it very often happens that, through a slight miscalculation, I lose the light in the middle of a reel. Now I would appreciate your advice on a proposition to which I have given some thought, and with which I am unable to find fault. It is to use a thimble, or sleeve, made of carbon, as per sketch, > the same to be so made that it will slip snugly over the ends of the carbon stubs. You can then burn all your carbon stubs, thimble and all, and that also eliminates the cost of the sleeve.

There are two faults I could find with this particular proposition. First: The cost of such a sleeve would, I think, amount to almost as much as carbon stubs are worth, and the fact that you "burn the sleeve" would cut but little figure, so far as cost be concerned, since the available light does not come from the outer edge of the carbon, but from the center. Second: Due to slight variation in carbon diameters, I think you would find that some stubs would not go in the sleeve at all, and others would fit so loosely that they would not make good contact.

As I understand it, different brands and different lots of carbon of the same brand, will shrink differently in the baking. You can try it, Brother Woodruff, but, while I am sorry to land a wallop on your dream of wealth, still I am afraid the scheme won't work as well as you think.

Wrong and Right.

W. C. Evans, Sherman, Texas, says:

> I have had an argument concerning the right and wrong way to make patches. Enclosed find two splices which I would ask you to examine and test as to which method is the better. My opponent in the argument pulled the Handbook on me, and I pulled the September 4th issue of the Moving Picture World on him, and showed him where Mr. Mitchell of Kansas City, Mo., was arguing the patch problem. I am obliged to look at the matter the same as you do. I cannot see any particular difference, provided a good cement is used, and plenty of pressure be supplied while the cement is setting. Kindly give us your final opinion in order to settle the argument. By-the-way, we ran "Scandal," a five-part Universal feature, the same being shipped to us from the Lyric Theater, Van Alstine, Texas. It required two hours' time to get it in shape to run. Was obliged to make forty-three patches in the five reels. Looks as if the Lyric operator was out of cement, or else did not know how to use it, for the films were broken in several places; also they looked almost as bad as though they had had an oil bath.

Will the Van Alstine operator take note and justify himself—if he can? As to the patch proposition, why, if a patch is tight, as it should be, I don't think it makes a particle of difference which way it is made—that is to say, whether the top of the picture is laid on the emulsion side of the bottom of the next picture, or the bottom of the picture is laid on the emulsion side of the top of the next picture, moreover, as another correspondent has set forth, if the patch be loose it will go through some projectors better if made one way than if it is made the other way. As the thing stands, I really don't believe it makes any difference which way a patch is made, provided (a) it be not too wide; (b) the sprocket holes be matched perfectly; (c) the emulsion be thoroughly scraped off; (d) the back of the celluloid side be scraped; (e) that plenty of pressure be applied while the patch is setting. Incidentally, Brother Evans, the cement you are using is a very poor article. That is not, of course, your fault, but it makes a very stiff patch and has a tendency to curl the film. It is a hard job to get good film cement, and, moreover, my experience has been that when you get hold of a good cement that makes a perfect patch, and then the next lot of the same cement does not act the same at all. Don't ask me why—I don't know, though I lay it to variation is strength of different lots of chemicals.

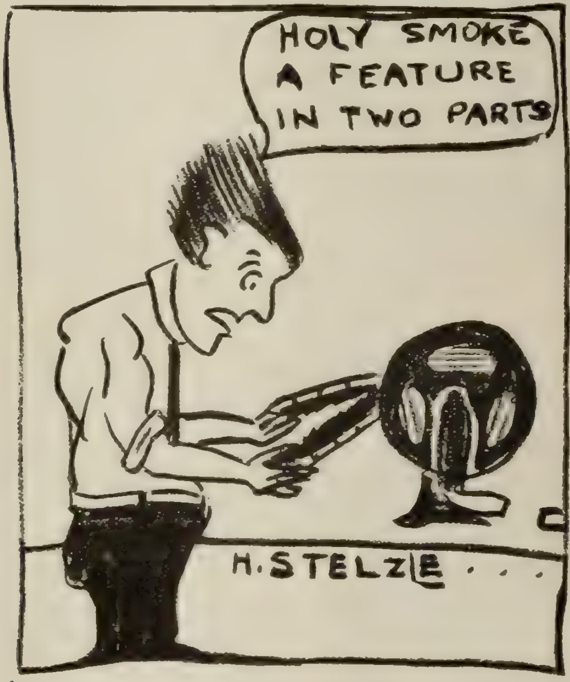
Carbon Economizer.

The Culbert Reliable Carbon Company, Orange, Mass., Mr. Frank R. Culbert, president, has sent in a sample of their carbon economizer, a very neat little device made of iron, designed to enable the operator to use his carbon stubs. It is very similar to other carbon economizers, but has the advantage of selling for a very low price, viz.; fifty cents. The fact that it is made of iron cuts no figure, provided the clamp screws be kept lubricated with graphite, there being plenty of metal to provide against undue resistance.

We can recommend the Culbert economizer as an excellent, cheap device. By its aid carbon stubs can be burned down to one inch or less in length.

In Two Parts.

The following came in a letter from Weehawken, N. J. I did not get the idea for a minute, but when the matter had had time to soak through the solid ivory, I concluded that the "two parts" would have to be amputated from the film.



HOLY SMOKE A FEATURE IN TWO PARTS

A Self-Respecting, High-Class Artisan.

It is with a great deal of satisfaction the editor has, during the past five years, watched the evolution of the moving picture operator from a plane of mediocrity in workmanship, irresponsibility as to his relations to the industry, and comparative lack of respect for his profession or trade, into a self-respecting, high-class artisan. The metamorphosis is not yet complete, I regret to say, but, nevertheless, the advancement has been very great, and it, perhaps, gives the editor more genuine pleasure than any other one thing to feel that he has been, at least, to some extent, instrumental in the bringing about of the better condition.

And why should not the moving picture operator be self-respecting, and have respect for his profession? Can you show me another single industry where so very much depends upon the work of one man? Where is there another industry in which the entire revenue of an investment totaling, perhaps, as much as $150,000, is made dependent, very largely, if not absolutely, for its income upon the excellence of the work of a single individual? Nor is that the sum of the responsibility of the moving picture operator, because, not only is the revenue of the individual theater, to a very large extent, dependent upon the work of the operator, but also the success or failure of the work of the producer, which, in many cases, may have cost thousands upon thousands of dollars, is also made or marred through the excellence or lack of excellence of the work of the erstwhile despised moving picture operator. I say "despised" because five years ago, when this department was first started, the moving picture operator commanded, in many quarters, less respect than was accorded a fairly decent canine.

All that is of the past, however. Today some of the best moving picture theater managers in the world will tell you frankly that they consult their operators in all matters of importance having in any way to do with results upon the screen. They possibly might have done the same thing five years ago, but it would have been useless, because, except in isolated cases, the operator himself knew but little—but very little—about his own profession. In fact, no one really knew much about it. Wages were very low, and there was a general I-should-worry air pervading the operating room and things allied thereto. There was no source from which knowledge concerning projection could be had, except through the slow and painfully hard school of experience.

Today, however, it is not uncommon to find operators discussing problems which might well puzzle, and, in fact, do puzzle opticians of much learning, and it is no unusual thing to hear a moving picture operator argue an electrician clear back into his hole, and shove the hole carefully in after him. Many narrow-minded operators have opposed the work of the projection department and its editor, still, I think none of them will dispute the proposition that practically all knowledge now available concerning the higher problems of projection has been brought into existence, and been given to the men by and through this department and the Handbooks of its editor. How many of you would like to go back to the five-year-ago state of ignorance? I don't think even the most confirmed drone would welcome that proposition, and, moreover, I do not believe there is a single operator, worthy of the name, who, away down in the bottom of his soul, really believes that the spread of knowledge, which has operated to elevate his craft, bring it into repute, and secure for it that respect which is its due, has in any way, shape, manner or form injured him.

Please don't think I am writing this with any view of "boosting" the projection department. That idea was far from my mind when I started, but I find that in dealing with matters of this kind, the history of the advancement in knowledge of projection and the history of the projection department is so closely interwoven that it is almost impossible to speak of one without dragging in the other. I think most of you will realize that is a fact. So far as this department is concerned, I take the position that it does not need any "boosting"; nor does it need any apology of any kind whatsoever. For myself individually, I have none to offer any living soul. If I had it all to do over again, I cannot look back and see where I could materially improve upon what I have done, taking everything into consideration.

I have worked for the organization of the men, and the raising of their wages and the bettering of their conditions in the past, as I intend to in the future, because I am firmly convinced that those things are not only to the best interest of the men themselves, but the best interest of the theater manager, and the industry as a whole. I believe that just as firmly as I believe that the night follows the day.

We need knowledge, responsibility, good judgment and competent workmanship in the operating room. We cannot get those qualities for a song. They must be paid for; nor will men capable of putting forth those qualities be content to work under any but reasonably good conditions.

This department and its editor have met with a certain amount of opposition from certain operators' unions. He has had the hearty support of other operators' unions. He believes, however, that slowly and gradually the men are coming to a better understanding of the fact that the work of this department is, and always has been, in the best interest of the moving picture operator, both organized and unorganized, and I hope that the day is not far distant when we shall have the hearty co-operation, not only of our present host of friends, but also of those who still hold aloof. I would welcome the co-operation of every operators' union in this country and Canada, and the sooner I get it the sooner I will be able to do the greatest possible amount of good for the operator, individually and as a whole.

This department is a thing which must be reckoned with. It does not matter whether you approve or do not approve of it, it is going to go on just the same. You have (some of you) done about everything you could do to try to injure it and its editor, without avail. Your opposition is regrettable, because it operates to injure yourself (and yourself only, therefore, why not make the best of things, jump into the band wagon, and let us all work together for the further advancement of the art of projection, and the improvement of the conditions of the operator. We are on the upgrade, but the top of the hill is still far away.

Interesting.

M. Smith, New York City, writes:

> In a recent issue you ask about the size of spot when using A. C. A few weeks ago I took charge of a small theater on Long Island where I used A. C. through a Power's inductor. I noticed that the bottom carbon would always form a fine crater which I could use almost the same as D. C. I had a fine light until about three weeks after taking charge when I trimmed my lamp connections and found the top wires almost burned off. This leads me to believe that the extra resistance in the top carbon was the cause of the excellent crater which formed on the lower carbon. After cutting off both wires the crater formed on both carbons. Am now using D. C. and cannot experiment, but would like some of the A. C. boys to try increasing the resistance on the one wire to see if we cannot have an A. C. spot that will give good results.

No, Friend Smith, I do not think there is anything doing in that direction, but it really would be interesting to know why the crater formed only on the lower carbon under the conditions named. The only thing I can see is, that, and come to think of it, that explanation does not fit either, the added resistance was sufficient to largely overcome the current flow in one direction, though that would give it no added force in the other direction, and I cannot see why it would tend to increase the size of the crater on the lower carbon. It really is rather a puzzling point. Let us hear from some of our nut crackers as to their view of the matter.

Multiple and Series Multiple Connections.

W. Shepherd, New Orleans, Louisiana, says:

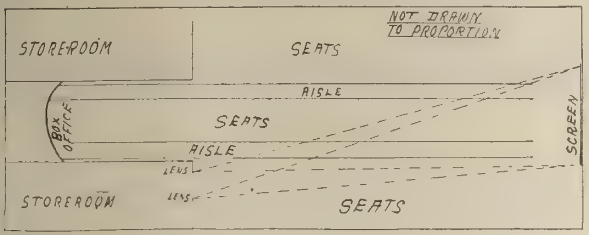
> Have had several arguments with some of the boys with regard to what constitutes a rheostat multiple series connection. Will you kindly set us right by means of a diagram in the department?

The multiple series connection as applied to the rheostat would be, I think, a foolish proposition. It is not necessary to make a diagram. If you connect two rheostats in series, and then connect two more rheostats in series, and then connect these two series in multiple with each other, you have a multiple series connection. But what earthly use would that be? Or, rather, to what earthly use could you apply that kind of connection, so far as rheostatic resistance be concerned? The multiple series connection was used for a time in incandescent lighting, but was long since discarded. As I understand the matter, it was an unsuccessful attempt to use a one-wire incandescent lighting system. One reason it did not work lay in the fact that when one lamp of the series went out the whole series was promptly put out of business; also, it was necessary to extinguish several lights in order to extinguish one.

Operating Room Location.

Nebraska, says:

> Although I have taken the World for three years, and was also a purchaser of your Handbook more than two years ago, am up against a proposition I cannot figure out to my satisfaction. Enclosed find hurriedly drawn sketch of house. You will note that the operating room is proposed to be located on the second floor, probably about twelve feet above the first floor, and is also to one side. Of course this would give us a double keystone effect, but what I want to know is, will it be too much, and can we focus our picture sharply all over? The throw will be 100 feet, and it is 18 feet 9 inches from side to center of house. There will be two projectors, and the operating room will be 9½ feet high and as deep as we want it. By arranging machines proper distance apart the slant on one will be 17 feet 6 inches on a 100 foot throw, and on the other 12 feet 6 inches. How will this work out in practice? I would rather you did not put the above in the department, or if you do please do not use my name, as these are plans for a proposed theater which I do not want known for the present.



Well, Nebraska, I cannot make fish of one and flesh of another, and as you have not enclosed the customary fee I shall be obliged to publish the matter, withholding your name and the name of the city, however. If I would reply to questions by mail without any charge it would be but a very short time, as experience of two or three years ago proved, until I would be called upon to work anywhere from four to five hours a day replying to letters, and most of the correspondents would not even enclose postage. I like to help and be accommodating, but there are limits, and I have some other things to do. According to your plan I see no earthly reason why you could not bridge between the two store rooms, either at their front end or over the box office, and thus secure a centrally located operating room at a very nearly ideal throw. To locate the operating room as you propose would make it very difficult, if not impossible, to secure a sharply focused picture all over the screen. As to the keystone effect, you can easily figure out the amount of that. If you have a 16 foot picture at 100 feet the spread per foot would be 16 × 12 ÷ 100 = 1.92 inch spread of light ray per foot of throw. The rest is simply a question of laying out the angles to scale on paper, and seeing how much farther it is from the lens to one side of the picture than to the other side of the picture, and then multiplying that distance by the spread per foot. This will tell you how much larger one side of the picture will be than the other.

Remove the Click.

V. H. Bell, Gordon, Texas, orders the question booklets, and asks:

You cannot hope to entirely remove it. It is no doubt due to worn parts, although there is always some click in the intermittent movement. That is in the nature of things. However, possibly the intermittent is out of adjustment. If so, I would recommend that you make the adjustment as per Instruction No. 39, page 281 of the Handbook, a copy of which I presume you have. (b) I cannot give you an intelligent answer without knowing what amperage you are using. The better way would be to try it. The general practice is, however, to have both carbons of the same diameter. If you try it, get a 9-10 for below, if you can—if not, try a ½ inch.

Buffalo Local to Dance.

Mr. J. Affachirer, secretary-treasurer of the Buffalo Local Union, No. 229, I. A. T. S. E., says:

> This local will hold its annual Spotlight Novelty Dance at the German-American Hall, Wednesday, Nov, 17, 1915. Our affairs are always attended by the theatrical profession of Buffalo and surrounding towns, and in the past each one has proven to be a most enjoyable occasion.

The department wishes for you a continuation of past successes upon the coming occasion. The Buffalo men have in the past proven themselves to be live wires. The local is aggressive and up-to-date, and I am sure they will give their guests of the evening a good time.

An Excellent Film Cleaner.

What seems to be a really excellent little device for the operating room is about to be placed on the market by Mr. C. F. Shue, New York City.

The device consists of a base, D, Fig. 2, which carries arm A, Fig. 2, which is mounted, and two specials, B-B, Fig. 2, with metal caps, upon which are wound strips of cotton flannel, three yards in length. In Fig. 1 we have a view of the cleaner in operation. The film is drawn around the rollers under considerable pressure, and each side is, in turn, rubbed against the cloth, thus removing dirt and oil. The device will, in my opinion, be particularly valuable for the removal of oil, although it also collects much dirt, and thus places the film in better shape for projection.

Arm A, Fig. 2, is held to base, D, by a shaft or spindle upon which it rocks, arm A, being held in upright position against the pressure of a spring. This equalizes the pressure with which the film rubs against the cloth, and when it becomes too great arm A will rock downward, thus decreasing the tension on the film.

The action of this device is somewhat similar to that of other well known film cleaners which cleans the film by drawing it between pads of cotton flannel. The peculiar advantage of this cleaner, is, however, that the cloth is in an endless strip, and all that is necessary to renew the cleaning surface is to cut off a little piece of the cloth; also the rocking feature is, I think, valuable.

The manufacturer claims that the device causes the rewinder to pull but little harder. It is even possible to renew the cloth while the device is running. Under screws, CC, Fig. 2, is a coil spring which holds the spools over against arm A. The cap on the other end of the spools has six holes in its surface similar to those shown in cap B-B, and the holes engage with a dowel pin in arm A, so that by pulling outward against the pressure of the spring under screw C this dowel pin is disengaged whereupon the spools may be rotated, thus unwinding the soiled section of cloth, which can then be clipped off with a pair of shears.

For altitudes up to 5,000 feet no change need be made. From 5,000 to 8,000 feet take ¾ of the time in the table. From 8,000 to 12,000 feet use ½ of the exposure in the table.

Exposure for average landscapes with light foreground, river scenes, light colored buildings, monuments, snow scenes with trees in foreground. The data given is compiled for use with Eastman's standard motion picture film and cameras with 50 per cent. shutter opening.

The exposures given are approximately correct, but usable negatives can be obtained with ½ to ⅔ less time where it is not possible to give more on account of small apertured lens or ¼ opening shutter. Allowance should be made, however, for smaller shutter opening whenever possible.

Forty-two degrees North Latitude is that of New York and the Northern States. For Southern Canada use next larger sized stop and in the winter months perhaps two sizes larger. For Southern California, Florida and the Southern States, the next size smaller will generally be sufficient except in the early morning and late evening hours, when the opening should be according to the chart or even increased. When the light is red or yellow where the indicated stop numbers are underlined, the diaphragm opening must be increased to the next or even to the second or third opening beyond that indicated by the chart.

The numbers given in the chart indicate the diaphragm opening necessary under the F system, which is the system used in marking the diaphragm opening on nearly all cinematograph lenses. They are F 3.5, F 4, F 5.6, F 8, F 11, F 16, F 22, F 32—each succeeding number in this series giving one-half the exposure of the one preceding. Other intermediate numbers are sometimes given, but not often, and may be practically disregarded when using this chart. In the following classification of subjects, the diaphragm opening should be modified from the one given in the chart according to the direction given after each class.

For example, we wish to make a picture in June, at four o'clock in the afternoon, of some red brick building on a hazy day. Under June we look in the hazy sun column and opposite the time we find the exposure to be F 16. For this classification the increase is two points, or F 8.

SUBJECTS.—For other subjects modify the exposure for an average landscape as given for the class of subject.

CLASS A.—Studies of sky and white clouds. Decrease opening three points.

CLASS B.—Open views of sea and sky; very distant landscapes; studies of rather heavy clouds; sunset and sunrise studies. Decrease opening two points.

CLASS C.—Open landscapes without foreground; open beach, harbor and shipping scenes; yachts under sail; very light colored objects; studies of dark clouds, snow scenes with no dark objects; most telephoto-subjects outdoors; wooded hills not far distant from lens. Decrease opening one point.

CLASS D.—Landscapes with medium foreground; landscapes in fog or mist; buildings showing both sunny and shady sides; well lighted street scenes; persons, animals and moving objects at least thirty feet away from the camera. Increase opening one point.

CLASS E.—Landscapes with heavy foreground; buildings or trees occupying most of the picture; brook scenes with heavy foliage; shipping about the docks; red brick buildings and other dark objects; group outdoors in the shade. Increase opening two points.

CLASS F.—Portraits outdoors in the shade; very dark near objects, particularly when the image of the object nearly fills the plate and full-shadow detail is required. Increase opening three points.

CLASS G.—Badly lighted river banks, ravines, glades and under the trees. Wood interiors not open to the sky. Increase opening four to five points.

For back lighting and Rembrandt effects, give an additional increase of one point more than indicated by the classification.

Subjects which require openings much greater than afforded by the lens used should not be attempted, as the film is only wasted.

Bad Film Stock.

A. D., Brownsville, Texas, returns with more details concerning his trouble with film fresh from boxes being stuck together so tightly that the film tears at the sprockets before it will unroll:

"You say to keep the negative in tin cans and carefully taped. Which is what I do until I use it. But it is under these same conditions in the cans sealed that I find my negative stuck on removing it. It's in the can and sealed with the usual tape as sent out by Eastman and it is sealed as well as tape can do it that I find my negative in the shape referred to. I don't expect to keep it for any length of time after its removal from the cans. But how does the moisture enter the cans? It appears as if the tropical heat or warmth has a tendency to produce the sticky annoyance. It would not appear as if moisture alone or at all in this case was responsible.

"The only remedy I can see for me is to keep as little as possible on hand. Still, I am not in position to do this satisfactorily as I never know when I will need 100 feet or when I might urgently need 1,000 feet. It depends on sudden occurrences for which I have to provide and then I find by negative, not all, but some of it useless."

The film which you get stuck together in well sealed cans cannot have been in the proper condition when shipped and you should return it and demand that your money be returned or good film sent you in its place.

I have taken pictures in much worse climates than South Texas and with reasonable care have never experienced the trouble which you describe.

Exposure With Nitrogen Lamps.

Al Lindmark, Chicago, asks:

"When nitrogen lamps are used can the exposure be calculated the same as with mercury vapor lamps?

Please tell me where I can get some literature on the new Shusteck camera?"

By using an exposure meter the value of any type of light may be estimated. It is difficult to estimate the comparative value of nitrogen lamps and Cooper-Hewitt tubes without knowing just what type of installation is used. Using banks of eight Cooper-Hewitt tubes of the standard type they seemed to have about twice the photographic value of twelve 1,000 watt nitrogen lamps arranged in a similar sized bank. The Cooper-Hewitts were fitted with the usual half cylinder white porcelain enamel reflectors and the nitrogens with semi-parabolic shaped hoods with white enamel reflecting surface.

Unfortunately this department has not heard before of the Shusteck camera and will be glad to hear from any reader who can give any information in regard to it. In addition, anything within the jurisdiction of this department in the way of new cameras, apparatus, or news contributed by its readers, will always find a welcome.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company

ARLINE'S CHAUFFEUR (Biograph), Oct. 25.—This one-reel drama bears but slight relation to things as they are. It is a pleasant little romance, nevertheless, and everyone will be glad to learn that matters turn out quite properly and Arline's chauffeur becomes her husband, as well. Isabel Rea, Jack Mulhall, W. J. Butler and W. C. Robinson supply a satisfactory quality of acting.

THE INEVITABLE PENALTY (Lubin), Oct. 25.—The danger to a woman in "loving not wisely, but too well" is illustrated in this one-reel drama, written by David Ellis. The film is full of action and has received thoughtful direction by Percy Winter. Octavia Handworth, William Wilson, Gilbert Ely and Louis Mortelle act with excellent effect.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 85, 1915 (Selig), Oct. 25.—A class flag rush at City College, New York, gives a spirited opening to this number. Other items of interest: Suffragette parade, Boston; the Mayor of Chicago at the Panama-Pacific Exposition; Lucile fall and winter styles; new summer home for President Wilson, Long Branch, N. J.; opium pipes and drugs destroyed at Los Angeles; San Francisco high school girls compete in athletic sports; railroad wreck, Randolph, Kans.; Italian troops on Austrian border.

THE PRINCE IN DISGUISE (Vitagraph), Oct. 25.—A charming juvenile comedy in one reel has been written by W. A. Tremayne, and it is delightfully played, with Bobby and Helen Connelly in the star roles. The human touch is irresistible. Mabel Kelly, Frances Connelly and Robert Gaillard are the grown-ups of the cast.

THE KNAVES AND THE KNIGHT (Kalem), Oct. 26.—A diver has nothing on Bud Duncan, in this one-reel burlesque comedy, as Bud is thrown into a lake while incased in a suit of armor. The comic mishaps leading up to this situation are plentiful, Bud having donned the hardware in order to annex a lot of silverware. Rube Miller, Martin Kinney and Ethel Teare assist in the fun-making.

PLAYING IN TOUGH LUCK (Lubin), Oct. 26.—D. L. Don, Ferdinand O'Beck and Eleanor Blanchard are cast for the comic trio in this one-reel farce, written by Daniel Ellis. The fun is of the burlesque type and is well suited to the methods of all concerned. The situations, and not "funny falls," furnish the laughs.

THE RACE FOR A GOLD MINE (Selig), Oct. 26.—Tom Mix wins the race. This is a guarantee that there is plenty of hard and reckless riding in the picture. The reel discloses a breezy western story and Tom once more wins the girl of his choice, as well as the race.

DREAMY DUD UP IN THE AIR (Essanay), Oct. 27.—Wallace A. Carlson has discovered a number of surprising adventures for Bud and Wag in this animated cartoon, and then lands his hero safely back in his bed again. The picture is quite as amusing as the rest of the series. Scenes in the Canadian Rockies are on the same reel.

ITSKY, THE INVENTOR (Vitagraph), Oct. 27.—The central idea of this one-reel comedy is novel and is the mainspring of a lot of laughs. Hughie Mack is responsible for the larger portion of the fun, good work also being done by Harry Fisher and Florence Natol. C. Jay Williams made the production.

A TRICK OF FATE (Biograph), Oct. 28.—The three characters which tell the story in this one-reel photoplay are enacted by Charles Perley, Hector V. Sarno and Augusta Anderson. It is a tense little drama, its scenes laid in the far West, and its strong points are well brought out by the cast.

FUN AT A BALL GAME (Essanay), Oct. 28.—The surroundings and incidents in this one-reel comedy are comparatively novel and also vastly amusing. The leading role is played by Jewel Mendel, who is assisted by a good cast.

KIDDING THE GOATS (MinA), Oct. 28.—There are two comedies on this one reel, the title of the second picture being "A Matter of Form." Both are of the liveliest description, from a knock-about point of view, and will prove amusing to many patrons of the screen.

THE UNFORGIVEN (Vitagraph), Oct. 28.—This is a dream picture, and the unhappy ending of a good man's romance, which is shown to an audience, has no foundation in fact. The dream is a tragic one, however, and the acting of Charles Wellesley, L. Rogers Lytton and Zena Keefe makes it seem very real.

THE WONDER CLOTH (Lubin), Oct. 29.—The "wonder cloth" is a bullet-proof vest, and Benjamin Lev, the author, has written an interesting story in connection with it. The picture is in one reel, Melvin Mayo, Adda Gleason, L. C. Shumway and George Routh forming a satisfactory cast.

A CASE OF EUGENICS (Vitagraph), Oct. 29.—The fun in this one-reel comedy seems rather labored, in comparison to most of the pictures in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are the leading actors. However, there are many hearty laughs in it, and Bobby Connelly is also a member of the cast.

General Film Company Specials.

THE PRICE OF AMBITION (George Kleine), Oct. 25.—Three people tell the story of this two-reel drama. The part played by Ethel Grandin is that of a wife who is forced by her husband to assist him in obtaining money from a wealthy man by passing herself off as her husband's sister. Owing to the lack of character in the wife, Miss Grandin is unable to make the part a strong one, although she acts with sincerity and good judgment. The production is creditable.

THE NET OF DECEIT (Kalem), Oct. 25.—The characters in this three-reel drama range from a simple fisherman to a spy, a foreign diplomat, a powder king and an adventuress. The lady in question flirts with the fisherman, but learns to love him and gives up her evil ways for his sake. Melodramatic situations abound in the play, but it lacks that inevitableness which is the most necessary feature in a plot. Harry Millarde has given it a good production. The leading parts are acceptably filled by Roland Bottomly and Alice Hollister.

A MYSTERY OF THE MOUNTAINS (Biograph), Oct. 26.—Homely folk, of simple life and primitive passions, are the men and women in this two-reel drama. The character drawing has been done by a skillful hand, and the story which is unfolded is strong of motive and full of interest. The acting is uniformly excellent and is contributed by Ivan Christy, Jack Drumeir, Jos. McDermott, Mary Malatesta, Kate Bruce, Sidney D'Albrook and James Fuery.

MISS FRECKLES (Essanay), Oct. 26.—Ruth Stonehouse comes very near being the whole thing in this two-reel comedy. She impersonates a denizen of Hogan's Alley, and is first seen "rushing the can" for her Dad. Her performance is well rounded and delightfully humorous. The comedy reflects credit upon the author, H. Tipton Steck, and offers excellent roles for Frank Dayton and Marion Skinner.

HARVEST (Biograph), Oct. 27.—Madame Janauschek, the celebrated Polish actress, made a great success of the stage version of this three-reel photoplay. The drama is a strong one, with a gripping heart interest, and has been expertly arranged for the screen. The parts are all most capably played by Franklin Ritchie, Louise Vale, Gretchen Hartman, Jack Drumeir, Herbert Barrington, Charles H. Mailes, Jack Mulhall and Vola Smith.

BY WHOSE HAND (Kalem), Oct. 27.—The mystery in this two-reel drama is well sustained. Not until Hamilton Smith, the author, is ready to reveal the secret, does the truth come out. It is a crook drama and is spiritedly acted by Harland Moore, Marguerite Courtot, Richard Purdon and Robert Vaughn. A short animated cartoon, "There's Villainy Afoot," is on the last reel.

THE MAN OF GOD (Lubin), Oct. 27.—A priest, a young woman and a degenerate are cast upon a desert island, in this two-reel drama. The priest has great difficulty in saving the girl from being assaulted by the other man. The degenerate dies, the girl is saved and the priest remains on the island. The picture will offend many patrons of the screen. Earl Metcalfe, Ormi Hawley and Kempton Green comprise the cast.

THE STRANGE UNKNOWN (Lubin), Oct. 28.—Paris and New York are the scenes of this three-reel photoplay, which is melodramatic in plot and contains an interesting story. The acting of the cast meets every demand. A review of this picture appears in this issue.

THE MYSTERY OF ROOM 13 (Edison), Oct. 29.—A review of this picture appeared in the issue of Oct. 30, page 813. It is a well-constructed melodrama, finely played by a large cast, Lillian Herbert and Marc MacDermott taking the principal characters.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

PENNINGTON'S CHOICE (Quality—Metro), Nov. 8.—Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are featured in an ingenious story that has an unexpected denouement. Miss Bayne plays a dual role, that of a society girl and that of the untutored daughter of a Canadian woodsman. In changing from one to the other her transformation is complete. Mr. Bushman is excellent in the character of an eastern college man whose courage is severely tested. This subject is reviewed at length on page 1156.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 43, 1915 (Oct. 28).—Interesting items of this issue are the testing of the new life preserver in New York Bay, scenes of the revolution in Haiti, President Wilson arriving at Princeton to cast his vote for woman suffrage, baseball fans in San Francisco watching the world series, and George Cohan laying the corner stone of the new Friar's Club Building in New York City.

THE SMUGGLER'S CAVE (American), Oct. 29.—This film is based on an old theme, wherein the simple girl of the sea coast falls in love with a stranger, and gets into serious difficulties therefrom. The picture is prettily staged and holds the interest fairly well.

PUTTING PAPA TO SLEEP (Novelty), Nov. 1.—In which a girl changes places with her maid in order to elope with her lover. Elopers and pursuers wind up in the police station. Some of the small business is funny, but the production as a whole is an average one.

ONE TO THE MINUTE (Beauty), Nov. 2.—A bright little comedy number, featuring Frank Borzage and Neva Gerber. The young club man robs his fellow-members on a bet, but gets in bad when his supposed friend skips with the proceeds and turns out to be a crook. The number is pleasing

SEE AMERICA FIRST (Gaumont No. 81), Nov. 2.—The Mutual Traveler visits Boston, Concord, Cambridge and Marblehead in this half-reel. Some fine scenic views are shown of this historic locality.

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES (Gaumont), Nov. 2.—On same reel with above. This shows Pa and Ma Jones in some drawings animated by H. S. Palmer. The moving day adventures prove amusing.

ON SECRET SERVICE (American), Nov. 5.—Winifred Greenwood, Edward Coxen and George Field appear in this number. The girl's father turns out to be a badly wanted counterfeiter, but the secret service agent is himself a crook. The story holds the interest and is fairly strong.

BILLY VAN DEUSEN'S CAMPAIGN (Beauty), Nov. 6.—An amusing comedy in which Van Deusen loses out in an attempt to do something to distinguish himself in order to win the girl he loves. His competitor for mayor of the town has a cleverer scheme than he for obtaining votes, and so Van Deusen is obliged to take a back seat in a very undignified manner. The comedy of this number is good.

DOES IT PAY TO ADVERTISE? (Casino), Nov. 7.—A theatrical couple, believing in the adage, "it pays to advertise," hire a baby, keep the boarders in the house awake all night with the crying of the baby, and end in the police court after participating in a number of ungraceful situations. This number contains considerable of the kind of comedy that the average audience likes.

THE MISTAKE OF MAMMY LOU (Thanhouser), Nov. 7.—The old negro mammy sees her young mistress with a revolver and thinks she is going to kill herself. She runs and brings the lover, with whom the girl had quarreled. There is an attempted burglary and the reel closes amid great excitement. A light, pleasing number.

LULU'S LOST LOTHARIOS (Falstaff), Nov. 8.—This is an original and amusing number, in which the jealous sheriff locks up his rivals, one by one. Suburban Holmes, a detective, manages to get them out. The plot is slight, but pleasing.

THE DOUBLE CROSS (Cub), Nov. 12.—A George Ovey comedy in which the comedy lead tries to usurp the place of one who has entrusted him with the entertainment of his young aunt until his return On the return of the master of the house considerable trouble arises which ends in the tragic dethroning of the would-be nephew.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

PLAYING FOR HIGH STAKES (Mustang), Oct. 29.—This is a two-reel western drama which is fairly interesting. The story is of how a western saloonkeeper, falling in love with the brother of a pretty newcomer to the village, tries to keep the young man straight, and eventually gives up his saloon and buys stock in a mining company for the sake of winning the love and respect of the girl. The story is not above the ordinary, but is moderately entertaining, as produced in the film.

THE WASP (American), Nov. 1.—A two-reel number, featuring Vivian Rich. She is first seen dressed in men's clothes, robbing a house. She afterward reforms and takes charge of a relief bureau. Her heart is touched by the sight of so much poverty and she again steals, devoting the proceeds to buying things for the poor. Later she marries a man who has befriended her. The story suffers from the weakness usual to plots wherein a person commits a crime in order to accomplish good of some sort. The leading character holds the interest, but the offering as a whole is not very strong.

WHEN AVARICE RULES (Centaur), Nov. 4.—A two-reel animal melodrama in which Bonavita as the villain kidnaps the ward of the man who has insulted him. He places her in an apartment from which there is no escape except the lion's den. The wife of the animal trainer releases the young woman at the instigation of her sweetheart, and is maltreated in a brutal manner by her husband for her pains.

THE LAW OF DUTY (Reliance), Nov. 7.—A two-reel German military drama which is rather overdrawn as regards action. The story centers around a situation that has been utilized many times before, that of a father sitting in judgment on his son, learning eventually that his surmises are wrong, and that the son, in place of being the turncoat that he had accused him of being, is a hero.

ALICE OF HUDSON BAY (American), Nov. 8.—A two-reel production directed by Chas. Bartlett. The picture is an interesting one with Winifred Greenwood in the feminine lead, and George Field as the villain. The only serious fault to be found with the production is the typically western character of the country where the scenes are laid. The story treats of a circumstance where a man is arrested for the crime of another. The perpetrator of the crime at his death confesses, and the imprisoned man is released. There is a love tale also running through the weave of the story which brings into prominence Alice, the daughter of the trader, and one of the Canadian Mounted Police.

THE DEVIL'S DARLING (Rialto), Nov. 8.—A three-reel subject featuring Francine Larrimore, who proves attractive in the lead. The plot is a variation of the "Faust" theme; in this case a woman sells her soul to the devil in order to retain her beauty. This part of Irma is a repulsive one, yet well handled; she entices the girl from her work and tries to procure her ruin. Phillip, a young minister, arrives just in time to save the girl from a wretched fate. This combines a half-mystic theme with some familiar white slave situations. It is well-constructed and a fairly strong offering of its type.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 85, 1915 (Pathe), Oct. 23.—Besides the usual number of scenes from the front, we see in this issue Geo. M. Cohan laying a corner stone for a new Friar's Club Building, and the Klicatat Indians carrying home their allotment of fish in the Wind River district

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

NEAL OF THE NAVY, NO. 9, "The Yellow Peril" (Panama Films), Oct. 18.—"The Yellow Peril," which is the title of this number, has, in addition to its entertaining qualities, an educational value, in that it shows how to combat with the disease breeding mosquito. There is a thrilling visualization of how the villain, Hernandez, had Neal and Annette placed in the heart of the mosquito swamp, and their rescue from death by the brute man, and later their safe return to the village by the help of the rescue party from the village.

NEW ADVENTURES OF J. RUFUS WALLINGFORD, "The Lilac Splash" (Pathe), Nov. 1.—"The Lilac Splash" is the name of this number of this series. This time a very elaborate lilac dress figures largely in the story. This is not just as amusing as some of the rest of the series, but has a goodly fund of humor at the same time.

THE MENACE OF THE MUTE (Gold Rooster Play), Nov. 5.—The second of the Ashton Kirk series staged by Arnold Daly. It is a thrilling melodrama, well produced, and reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 190 (Universal), Oct. 27.—Football, Uncle Joe Cannon on the stump, fashions, Rookies training near Chicago, war scenes at the front, Hy Mayer drawings and other features appear in this number.

A DAY AT MIDLAND BEACH (Joker), Oct. 30.—A low comedy number, in which a boob takes his girl on a trip to the beach. He falls off a ferry boat on the way and later takes a tumble from a Ferris wheel. The fun is of a rough sort, but will serve to please some observers.

TWENTIETH CENTURY SUSIE (Joker), Nov. 6.—A "rube" comedy number with Wm. Franey, Gale Henry and Lillian Peacock in the cast. The natives turn out to meet the coming young lady with a band, but she turns out to be old and homely. This is quite amusing in its way.

CUPID AND THE SCRUB LADY (L-KO), Nov. 7.—A very funny low comedy number, featuring Alice Howell as a scrub lady. She is very much in love with the boss and desires to become a real lady. Her chance comes when she saves his safe from being robbed. A good offering of the burlesque type.

THOSE KIDS AND CUPID (Nestor), Nov. 8.—A comedy number, by Thomas Delmar, featuring Ray Gallegher and Billie Rhodes. The girl's little sisters place some silverware in the young man's pockets and a policeman takes him for a burglar. The plot is light, but amusing and well pictured.

GETTING HIS GOAT (Imp), Nov. 9.—A comedy number, featuring William Garwood and Violet Mesereau. A goat gets the hero's clothes while he is bathing; the picnic party is upset by a snake. Numerous other amusing adventures are shown. A pleasing light subject.

PARSON OF PINE MOUNTAIN (Rex), Nov. 9.—Ben Wilson, Joseph Girard and Dorothy Phillips appear in this. The characters live in a mountain district and the young parson forces the girl's lover to wed her after he has betrayed her. The settings and cast are pleasing; the story quite appealing, though not very new in plot.

FATHER'S LUCKY ESCAPE (Nestor), Nov. 13.—In which a young man plays waiter in order to see his best girl at a restaurant. The scene in which she lures his father into a flirtation has a "sporty" tone and lacks any great novelty. A fair comedy number.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THE MAN IN THE CHAIR (Gold Seal), Sept. 14.—A two-reel number, written by Hobart Henley, who also plays the lead. He is assisted by Grace Thompson, Burton Wilson, Ray Hanford and others. The story, which is chiefly concerned with the trial of the invalid hero for murder. is a most absorbing one and excellently presented. The wrath of the life-long sick man is aroused to the extent that he walks and meets a man in hand-to-hand conflict. He is acquitted after confessing to his crime. This is new and unusual throughout. It makes a strong offering.

SUCH A PRINCESS (Rex), Nov. 7.—A charming little three-reel fairy story, with Elsie Albert, C. Norman Hammond and others in the cast. The prince is compelled to marry very quickly in order to retain his throne. He does not like women, but on a hunting trip meets Wildflower, a girl of the woods. He marries her and carries her to court where her bucolic ways attract great attention. The prince becomes irritated, but she saves him from his enemies and his love returns. This is not remarkable for its settings or characterizations. The story, however is a very pretty one and leaves a good impression on the observer.

ON THE LEVEL (Gold Seal), Nov. 9.—A two-reel number, featuring L. M. Wells, Jack Wells, Herbert Rawlinson and Jean Taylor. Jim, the younger brother, assumes guilt for his brother's forgery. Later the brother makes confession, while facing death, and Jim is exonerated. Jim, in the meantime, writes a play and falls in love with an actress who is masquerading as a housemaid to gain local color. The love story is a pleasing one and the number is entertaining, though not dramatic HEARTS THAT ARE HUMAN (Big U), Nov. 11.—A three-reel number by J. Jackson. This has a slight tendency to melodrama in the opening scenes, where the hard-hearted father turns his girl away from home. The action is a little jerky. Later, however, the story becomes very interesting. It is all familiar material, but is handled in a way that gives a fresh view of a girl's struggles in the world. The heroine of this is a pretty girl who makes good as a concert singer and then triumphs on the operatic stage. She has trouble with a married man, but later finds happiness with her own lover. This has numerous elements of universal appeal.

WHAT THE RIVER FORETOLD (Bison), Nov. 13.—An excellent three-reel western, based on a story by Peter B. Kyne. Sherman Bainbridge, Edythe Sterling and Jack Holt play the leading roles. The old Indian legend is nicely woven into the story. The mystic draught at the stream by the two partners results in a complete carrying out of the old superstition. There are some fine scenic effects in this. It leads up to a fitting climax and makes, on the whole, an offering well above the average.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN, a story of War's Red Blot (Lubin), Oct. 25. An unusual five-part production inspired by the European war. Louis Reeves Harrison wrote a scenario in which he aims to show the horror of conditions resulting from autocratic rule. Contrasted with the menace of militarism, democratic institutions appear in a very favorable light. Director Jack Pratt gave the picture an appropriate setting and the principal characters were adequately presented by Rosetta Brice, Richard Buhler, Francis Joyner, Charles Brandt and George Clarke.

THE CRIMSON WING (Essanay), Nov. 1.—Using a novel by Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor as the basis of the story, E. H. Calvert has produced a six-part romance of the European war for the Essanay Company. The picture is beautifully staged, has many popular qualities and is excellently acted by Mr. Calvert, Beverly Bayne, Ruth Stonehouse and Bryant Washburn.

THE TURN OF THE ROAD (Vitagraph), Nov. 1.—Isabel Johnston wrote the scenario for this five-reel Blue Ribbon feature and Tefft Johnson produced an unusually appealing picture, in which Naomi Childers, Joseph Kilgour, Virginia Pearson and Bobby Connelly appear. It is the story of a mother's love for her son and of a husband's infidelity when tempted by a flirtatious young woman. A happy conclusion is brought about in a reasonable fashion.

World Film Corporation.

BOUGHT (Shubert), Nov. 1.—Lawrence McCloskey wrote this story of an impecunious author's romantic adventures in marriage and on the stock exchange. It was ably directed by Barry O'Neill, with Frederick Lewis and Ethel Gray Terry in the principal roles, those of the unsuccessful writer and the girl who becomes his wife. The picture reaches its most exciting moments in the stock exchange scenes in the last reel.

SHOULD A WOMAN FORGIVE? (Equitable), Nov. 8.—A five-reel offering made by Horkheimer Brothers and featuring Lillian Lorraine. It is a sex problem picture in which the married woman's part is ably taken by Mabel Van Buren. Both sides are acted well, though Miss Lorraine is perhaps more artistic in her interpretation of a Gypsy-like woman. A longer review will be found on another page of this issue.

Associated Film Sales Corporation.

SHOT AT SUNRISE (Monte), Oct. 25.—An amusing eccentric comedy which is a go-between farce and burlesque. In many ways the comedy is decidedly original, and has been cleverly developed. It starts out with masculine rivalry over an eccentric feminine, and ends in a most remarkable fusilade of misaimed cannon. This comedy will be liable to please any audience.

AND HE CAME STRAIGHT HOME (Atlas), Nov. 2.—It is easy to believe that by many audiences this comedy would be greeted with roars of laughter. It cannot be highly recommended, however, because it is one stagger of drunkenness from beginning to end. A few amusing scenes are enacted in a cemetery where the Empress of Egypt, according to the drunken husband's story, with her cruel husband, step out from the tomb for his entertainment.

UNEXPECTED REWARD (Liberty), Nov. 2.—This is an attractive one-reel western drama. It is presented as a story within a story. A young man, returned from the West, telling his mother and sweetheart of how he injured his wrist, gives a vivid description of how a bandit entered his cabin, and forced him, at the point of a gun, to lure a posse that appears on the hills nearby off his track. The incidents attendant on the chase and the eventual obtaining of an unexpected reward of $500 for the capture of the bandit are interesting.

Associated Film Sales Corporation Specials.

IN AND OUT (Banner), Nov. 2.—A two-reel comedy of rather an ordinary sort. A good deal of it centers about a young woman who, attracted by a moving picture actor, tries to enter the game somewhat to her sorrow. The picture might be amusing to some audiences, but is not a first-class comedy.

HILARY OF THE HILLS (Santa Barbara), Nov. 2.—Gertrude Bondhill and Ralph Gray are featured in this two-reel production. The story is of the western mines and is of a fairly interesting character. Gertrude Bondhill plays the role of a simple girl of the hills very acceptably, and Randolph Gray, as the new superintendent of the mines, does good work. There are several thrilling situations in the run of the picture.

Miscellaneous Specials.

THE FAMILY STAIN (Fox), Oct. 18.—The opportunities for suspense in this five-part mystery melodrama are partially lost, owing to a lack of clear explanation of the situation in the early scenes of the picture. In its entirety the production is rather harrowing, but well handled by the director. The acting of Frederick Perry, Walter Miller and others is satisfactory.

Flickers

WEDNESDAY afternoon, October 20, was a very big day for the staff of the All Features Film Co. They sure did cut loose and forget they had come to the office that day or to do any work at all. The reason for it all was that George Ames, general manager of the company, went and married. Frances Eugenie Baker was the young lady that upset business in general around 126 West 46th street that afternoon. The motto now is, "Let George do it."

George Ames.

Mr. and Mrs. George Ames hopped a rattler direct for the Thousand Islands and will spend their honeymoon counting them all to make sure that none of them have been taken in for the winter season.

Stop a minute and look up at George. We trust that he will preserve and always wear that little smile, which has become as well known as he himself.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

Patriotic Pictures Prevail.

AN ATMOSPHERE of patriotism seems to prevail in Chicago these days. Soldiers and sailors and members of patriotic organizations may be seen most any afternoon or evening marching in groups to the Olympic theater to see Vitagraph's "The Battle Cry of Peace," and many of them are bound for the Colonial theater, where "The Birth of a Nation" is still running successfully.

As guests of J. Stuart Blackton, five hundred Fort Sheridan "Rookies" (business and professional men of Chicago and nearby towns, who have had military training under the supervision of army officers), saw "The Battle Cry of Peace" on Tuesday evening, October 26. Colonel W. N. Nicholson and Congressman M. B. Madden, sponsors for the Fort Sheridan Training Camp, declared "The Battle Cry of Peace" to be a fine lesson in preparedness.

By invitation of D. W. Griffith, the "Rookies" attended the regular exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation" on the following Friday night, October 29. They assembled at the Sherman Hotel, and marched in a body to the Colonial theater, to the music of the Fort Sheridan band.

Other patriotic organizations to give their support to "The Battle Cry of Peace" are the National Security League and the Chicago chapter of the Navy League. Fifteen hundred members of the National Security League attended an exhibition of the picture on Wednesday evening, October 27. Several members of the organization highly endorsed the subject when addressing the spectators that evening.

The Navy League intends to make a special event of attending an exhibition of the picture during United States Navy Week in Chicago, which began Monday evening, November 1. Five hundred members of the league have already been supplied with tickets.

Strand Activities Broaden.

Announcement was made recently by the Strand Theater Company that it has increased its capitalization to $1,000,000, and plans have been completed for five more Strand theaters to be erected in this city; four to be located in the outlying residence districts, and one in the "downtown" district, in addition to the present one at Wabash avenue and Seventh street.

The stock of the new Strand organization, on its $1,000,000 basis, has already been subscribed for by thirteen prominent Chicago business men. In discussing the resultant growth of the organization, the management stated that there were 33,000 paid admissions to the Strand theater in the last seven days. Geraldine Farrar, in the Lasky-Paramount production of "Carmen," has proven to be a remarkable drawing card, and the discriminating Strand clientele built up at Orchestra Hall has been retained at the new location.

In addition to the present officers of the Strand Theater Company, the latest Strand venture will be supervised by a directorate of thirteen stockholders.

Mutual Gets World's Series

Will Release on November 15 Two Reels Selected from the Mass of Negative Secured at Stirring Baseball Games.

IN accordance with his well-known policy to obtain the widest range of subjects, President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation has completed negotiations with the World's Series Film Company for the exclusive rights to two reels of pictures taken when the recent world's championship series was played between the Boston Red Sox and the Phillies at Philadelphia and Boston, October 8 to October 13.

This remarkable picture, which was taken by the company which had the only authentic consent of and was made in cooperation with the National Baseball Commission, is the only accurate pictured account of the series. From three to six cameramen were stationed all the time at vantage points on the diamond and in front of the grandstand, and as a result the picture which will be released in the Mutual program on November 15 contains a most complete record of the series.

Not only are the individual members of the teams shown, but their plays, in coherent sequence, as they were made. The enthusiastic fans, the arrival of President Wilson and his fiancee, Mrs. Galt, the throwing of the ball by the former, and all other events of importance and interest are shown. The two reels will take the place of the regular Monday and Wednesday "Novelty" comedy releases of that week.

BLANCHE WALSH DIES IN CLEVELAND.

Actress Had the Distinction of Being the First American to Be Starred in an American Feature.

BLANCHE WALSH died in Cleveland on Saturday, Oct. 31, as the result of a relapse following a return to work after an operation. Miss Walsh insisted on keeping her engagements and refused to heed the advice of her physicians. Her husband, William H. Travers, left for New York on Sunday with the body.

Miss Walsh was born in 1873 in New York City, and attended the public schools and Normal College. Her first appearance on the stage was in 1888 in "Siberia." She had been continuously before the footlights ever since. Early in 1912 she appeared before the camera in "Resurrection," a four-part subject by the Masko Company. The picture was released in July of that year, and was the first American feature of that length. So, too, was it a good picture. On the stage Miss Walsh had in 1903 created the role of Katusha in "Resurrection."

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. VON HARLEMAN and CLARKE IRVINE

EXHIBITOR VS. EXHIBITOR.

One Theater Owner on the Board of Censors Votes Against Competitor's Picture.

LOS ANGELES is a strange place. Here the Board of Censors say that they might as well disband and allow the public to censor its own pictures. That is the opinion of Judge A. P. Tugwell, member of the local board.

This situation arose when the local clippers of film stood up and said "No" when J. A. Quinn, one of Los Angeles' foremost exhibitors, ran "Damaged Goods" for them.

At a private invitational showing of the Mutual picture only two cards were received out of about one hundred and fifty which in any way showed disapproval of the great play. Mr. Quinn requested a reconsideration by the members and they consented. The matter was talked over, one of the women members admitting that she would never forget the picture all her life. Manager Brooks of the Brooks theater was strongly against Mr. Quinn running the film.

Mr. Brooks admitted that he was an exhibitor and a member of the Board of Censors and that he ran features in his house and also that he was against allowing Mr. Quinn, his competitor, to show the picture.

At the present writing the matter is hanging fire until the Board of Education sees the film, the censors having given up the argument and "passed the buck" to the educators.

GREAT FIRE SCENE STAGED AT INCEVILLE.

Entire Village of Thirty-three Houses Burned Down for Final Scene in Ince-Triangle Production.

The "village-to-be burnt" was completed this week at Inceville, and burned. This fire scene is the climax in a powerful Ince-Triangle picture story featuring William S. Hart. Thirty-three buildings were razed to the ground, while nine cameras registered the conflagration.

In filming this fire Ince stationed his camera men at various points of vantage on the adjoining mountains. Then by the use of white flags he signaled them to commence "shooting," when the torch was applied to one of the oil-soaked structures. Quickly the flames spread and within twenty minutes the entire village was ablaze.

The Big Fire Scene at Inceville.

A fire to be convincing in a picture must be the real thing. An ordinary "set" will burn too fast and the walls crumble up and fall unreal in the flames. Determined to have no faky-looking fire scene spoil his production, Mr. Ince went to the considerable expense of building regular houses of solid lumber. There was a dance hall, saloon, grocery store, post office, hotel, etc., good enough for any mining town.

The smoke from the conflagration was really astounding and drifted in big black clouds over Santa Monica. The whole beach district was thrown in a pitch of excitement and telephones began to ring furiously, inquiring whether Inceville was on fire.

Billie Burke Has Gone.

Since Billie Burke departed from Inceville a cloud has passed between the bright sun and the canyon studio.

Billie Burke liked this state. In her Southern style bungalow she enjoyed every leisure moment when she was not facing the lens.

Billie Burke.

Now that her picture is completed and she is far away she awaits a pleasant surprise in seeing herself acting on the screen. She is not the only person who is anxious to see the picture. Mr. Ince, too, is anxious. He has labored on this subject.

Another Studio for San Diego.

Word comes from San Diego that the Great American Film Company is establishing a plant in the southern exposition city. It is announced unofficially that the studio will occupy ten acres of ground and promises to be one of the best in Southern California. The Pacific Building Company, owner of the tract, is interested and is making all efforts to rush work and will begin making comedy pictures some time this week.

Negotiations are also being made with the Exposition officials to have a Great American day at the Fair. This will be one of the big attractions, and the film made that day will be part of the serial, "Great America."

New Studio to Be Built in Los Angeles.

The site for the new studio was purchased some time ago. The company, in addition to producing one and two-reel pictures, will engage in the manufacture of motion picture cameras and projecting machines for use in homes. The company is also planning to make a specialty of producing films suitable for use in churches, Sunday schools and similar organizations.

The officers of the company are William Francis Truth, a Los Angeles man; J. Mortimer, an Englishman, and

Ramona, according to Kenneth McGaffy, the enterprising publicity expert of the Lasky Company, is the only living burro with a dramatic temperament. She very nearly tendered her resignation to the Lasky Company last week. It was only after personal appeals were made to her by the heads of the Lasky Company that she finally consented to appear in support of Victor Moore in "Chimmie Fadden Out West." Ramona does not care to be identified with the lighter side of dramatic art. Having appeared in support of such famous stars as Geraldine Farrar, Lou Tellegen and Edgar Selwyn, she feels that her forte is Greek tragedy or the Shakesperian or Ibsen revivals. She is not a comedienne. Emotional work is her scope and she does not care for the light and frivolous.

Therefore, when Ramona was told she was cast for a comedy she refused to make up. At the eleventh hour she demanded that she have an introduction as well as several close-ups with the stars. She also insisted that she have her own automobile to take her to and from location, and that the chauffeur and footman be in uniform. These requests were granted, but even during the taking of the picture, Ramona did not enter into the comedy scenes with the proper spirit. It was only when emotional dramatic energy was required that she threw herself whole-souled into her art and rose to the dramatic heights with that energy, fire and technique for which she is justly famous. Ramona is her "nom de film"—in private life her name is "Jonnie."

"Mother of Seven" is one of the most pretentious Fine Arts Film productions now under way. Jane Grey, the well known actress, is playing the stellar part with Tully Marshall, Ralph Lewis and Walter Long in the cast.

Staging Mexican Battle Scene for Fine Arts Film, "Mother of Seven."

A number of the exterior scenes are being staged at Sunland, Cal., where Co-directors C. A. and S. M. Franklin have built an entire Mexican village and are filming some spectacular battle scenes.

Another Fine Arts feature now being filmed for the Triangle program is "The Price of Power," starring Orrin Johnson with Vera Lewis, Charles Clary, Gladys Brockwell, Spottiswoode Aitken, Daisy Robinson, Eugene Pallette, Francis McDonald and Clyde Hopkins in the cast. Jack Conway is director.

Two hundred and fifty people appeared in a lawn fete scene in a current Lasky production in which Fannie Ward, Jack Dean and Sessue Hayakawa played principal parts. The location was Busch Gardens in Pasadena. Some virtuous citizen in the prim little burg informed the local police that there was a big picnic party and that they carried on something scandalous—gambling, by gosh, and everything. Mounting its trusty motorcycle the police force sped to the scene of the crime and was just about to drag the entire party of 250 players to jail when it discovered a battery of motion picture cameras.

Rollin S. Sturgeon and a company of Vitagraph players will start for the Great Bear Valley about November 1st, to film scenes for "God's Country and the Woman." This Blue Ribbon feature is an adaptation from J. O. Curwood's novel and the scenario is written by Doris Schroder. The picture is supposed to be laid in the Far North and at first the producer desired to spend the winter in Alaska, but that was given up and a California location decided upon. The company will be away for a month and the cast will include Nell Shipman, William Duncan and George Holt. Forty-five Eskimo dogs, including sixteen full bred malamutes, will be used for the dog scenes. William Duncan, who has lived in Alaska and knows how to handle dogs from A to Z, will play the lead. Bear Valley, one of the most picturesque of coast mountain locations and which is a paradise for exacting directors, is to be kept open all winter if the plans of the stage driver are put through. Several thousand dollars are to be spent in retaining a right of way with Dame Weather, and if the road is open some wonderful pictures ought to be made during the cold months in this Alpine-like country above the earth.

The Isis Theater, owned by Charles G. Robinson, in Covina, was last week sold to Mrs. Lulu A. Dietz of this city. Mrs. Dietz has gone to that city to take charge of her new playhouse. She will first completely renovate the theater, then open with an attractive program.

Thomas H. Ince is producing a special picture in which appear several hundred little children who have been rehearsed under the direction of Mrs. John D. C. Carey of Venice. The children are pupils in the Pavilion de Danse at Ocean Park in a Saturday afternoon class. There will be 78 distinctive characters in addition to the corps de ballet and the auxiliaries. The script for the special story was gotten out by Kenneth A. O'Hara, Ince's publicity manager, who is dabbling in the scripture end of the business.

William Wolbert has now finished "A Squared Account," in which George Kunkel, Otto Lederer and Jack Mower playing leading parts. Otto Lederer, who played the part of Black Steve, a wounded outlaw, was laboring under rather strenuous difficulties, having framtured his right arm while cranking a motor car. Director Wolbert's next picture will be "La Paloma," a three reel feature by Daisy Eloise Smith. George Stanley is to play the part of an old Spaniard who always whistles "La Paloma."

Henry King, who starred in the "Who Pays" serial with Ruth Roland for the Pathe-Balboa, bought a fine new car and went out to drive to town. The motor back fired and burst into flames and now Henry is wishing that he had taken out a full insurance policy. The worst part of the experience was that he was compelled to tramp all the way into town, seven miles, which is no easy matter for a tired player when he is used to riding.

I hope this is the last motor story. Roscoe Arbuckle, of Keystone Films, made a 750-mile tour in his big car through Southern California, the whole distance being made in less than three days, a mere week-end vacation. He relayed driving with his chauffeur, and did not stop but for gas and oil, and once in a while for a bite to eat. The engine was kept humming both night and day. When he did stop, the husky young Keystonian was forced to play a few antics for the benefit of the crowds that recognized and demanded a "speech."

Every record for fast moving picture productions was beaten here this week when Pathe News cameraman Buffum surprised detectives and deputy sheriffs by appearing on the scene with his trusty camera and took pictures of their chase of Harry Duncan, alleged slayer of Patrolman Toolen of the Los Angeles police department, who was shot one day before. The posse was hot on the trail of the reported murderer and Buffum learned of the search in time to board a fast machine and reach the location of the hunt. The films were taken in the afternoon and developed and printed during the rest of the day and went on the screen at the Orpheum the same evening.

Charles Fais, who for the past twenty-five years has been identified with the show business in many capacities, has assumed management of the Purchasing department of the Keystone Film Co., under George Stout, business manager of the studio for Mack Sennett. This move was made necessary upon the inauguration of the Triangle and the increased business transactions of the fun producers. Several new departments in the business end of the studio have been inaugurated lately.

C. H. Keipp, the pioneer exhibitor of Pomona, has retired from active business, having recently sold out his interests, the Berry-Grand theater, to Leo Uhrig, who will assume management shortly. At Leading Picture Theaters

ONE of the most important photo-dramatic productions ever presented at the Strand theater is "Carmen," this week's attraction, in which Geraldine Farrar, the famous prima donna, enacts the title role. In securing Miss Farrar before the motion picture camera, Jesse L. Lasky scored a notable coup in motion picture history. The production of the photoplay fully realizes the ambition of everyone concerned in its making, the cast to support Miss Farrar including Wallace Reid, Pedro de Cordoba, William Elmer, Anita King, Jeanie MacPherson and H. B. Carpenter. The bull fight scenes were specially staged by a company of toreadors brought from Spain. The story has been somewhat elaborated upon for the screen production, with a superb musical setting, appropriately adapted from Bizet's opera, rendered by the Strand Concert Orchestra. Besides the main feature, the Topical Review, including news and war pictures, scenic and scientific studies and a new comedy are shown. The musical program, which is one of the important factors of the Strand entertainments, consists of popular and classical selections by the Concert Orchestra and vocal soloists, headed by the popular Miss Grace Hoffman.

Hazel Dawn comes into her own in the Famous Players' Film Company's photo-adaptation of Henry Arthur Jones' international dramatic success "The Masqueraders," a Paramount picture which is being presented at the Broadway theater this week. By her resourceful presentation of the role of Dulcie, Miss Dawn surpasses her fame as one of the foremost musical comedy stars in the country and claims serious consideration as a finished dramatic actress. Special music to fit the picture is arranged by J. C. Bradford, director at the Broadway.

The remainder of the program consists of Pathe latest events, selected comedies, South American Travel pictures and cartoons.

"The Battle Cry of Peace" is continuing its successful run at the Vitagraph theater, and "The Birth of a Nation" will close its engagement at the Liberty the latter part of this month.

Triangle Bill at the Knickerbocker.

Douglas Fairbanks is again seen this week as the Triangle star at the Knickerbocker theater, appearing on the screen in a motion picture play, "Double Trouble." Other stars are Miss Bessie Barriscale, in "The Golden Claw," and Weber and Fields in a screen version of themselves called "The Best of Enemies." Another Keystone comedy, "Saved by Wireless," is also shown.

Essanay Releases

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, announces for the Essanay January release on the V-L-S-E program, one of the most successful plays of the speaking stage in recent years, "The Misleading Lady," by Charles Goddard.

Henry B. Walthall will take the leading role which was portrayed on the stage by Lewis Stone. Miss Edna Mayo will take the leading feminine role, playing opposite Mr. Walthall.

This play lends itself peculiarly to photoplay art, being filled with action and dramatic climaxes. It is replete with thrilling incidents, such as the kidnapping of a society girl by a wealthy Western mine owner after she had led him to propose as a bet at a house party, making him the butt of the joke. Their experiences in the rough north country, where he has abducted her, and where she finally learns to love him, are intense in interest.

Essanay also will release a special five-act feature in December, "A Daughter of the City," taken from the play by H. S. Sheldon. This is a thrilling story of mystery and romance, with John Junior, the well known stage star, and Marguerite Clayton in the leading roles. The play is directed by E. H. Calvert, who also plays a prominent part.

The regular December release is "The Alster Case," written by Rufus Gillmore, author of "The Opal Pin," and numerous other detective novels. J. Charles Haydon, director, has just completed the production and it promises to be one of the greatest of Essanay's multiple reel successes.

"Pennington's Choice" Opens Wurlitzer

THE Wurlitzer theater, 120 West Forty-first street, one of the most novel institutions in New York, was formally opened on Thursday, October 28, when the big five part feature, "Pennington's Choice," the Quality-Metro production in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are starred, was shown to the New York critics and a party of guests. This screen masterpiece proved a fitting feature for the opening of this finely appointed little institution. The theater occupies the entire ground floor of the Wurlitzer Building, which was recently completed. It is conveniently located just a few steps off Broadway.

The theater was primarily constructed to demonstrate the Wurlitzer organ and other musical instruments, but it will be rented to film companies who desire to give private presentations of their pictures. The interior of the theater is fashioned on an Egyptian scheme of designing and carried out an elaborate plan. There are 150 comfortable chairs attractively arranged with ample space on either side of them. The place is carpeted and rich purple velvet hangings give the whole a pleasing effect. The walls and pillars are covered with gold leaf and artistically decorated with a hand painted design. There are two large motion picture theater organs arranged along one wall, and every known modern appliance and equipment is found in the place.

Can You Beat It?

Here Is the "Last Word" in Motion Picture Censoring—Pusillanimity Personified.

ONE of the most remarkable instances of the absolute ridiculousness of state censorship as it is at the present time in Pennsylvania was recently demonstrated when the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors refused to allow a picture portraying the removal of a statue from City Hall to be exhibited throughout the State.

At the present time work upon a new subway system in Philadelphia is being rushed forward with all possible speed. The process of construction has been started at City Hall and various notable figures have been moved in order to make way for the subway excavation. It so happened that a camera man from the Pathe exchange was on hand taking pictures of the operation and, while so doing, he happened to include a picture of the removal of the statue of John Christian Bullitt from one pedestal to another, in doing which the workmen put a rope around its neck.

When the picture was presented to the censors for approval they immediately took exception to the scene portraying the moving of Mr. Bullitt and accordingly eliminated it from the film. The trouble apparently lay in the fact that "an act of hanging" and "a state of being hanged" was portrayed for public view. Whether the subject was of flesh or blood or merely a cold, bronze bust did not enter into the matter at all in the minds of the censors.

Can anything more ridiculous be imagined? It is certainly a shame that the workmen did not place the statue in a cradle or at least have knotted the rope about the waist of the statue instead of the neck. Such a brutal scene as lifting a statue from its pedestal by means of a rope tied about the neck can never be exhibited to the good citizens of the state of Pennsylvania, according to the censors, and they intend to save the public from seeing any such bloodcurdling sights as lifting a prominent citizen in bronze from his resting place and lowering him to the hard cold pavement below. We thank the censors for their kindly regard for the feelings of the general public and we wish to say that any such body of persons are certainly deserving of favorable mention to the Carnegie fund for endowing those who have performed heroic acts with suitable reward.

Lorimer Johnston Sails for Africa

American Producer Will Direct Subjects for African Films Productions, Limited.

LORIMER JOHNSTON, late of the Vitagraph company, who has been engaged by the African Films Productions, Ltd., for chief director of the plant located in Johannesburg, Union of South Africa, who sailed for England September 4, has been detained in London by reason of the taking of steamers for army transports. Mr. Johnston, however, sailed for Cape Town October 23. He secured in the United States and in England a further equipment for the already established plant—and engaged players. It is Mr. Johnston's intention to put on as first production one of the most famous of the South African stories of Rider Haggard. He has arranged with a celebrated Italian actor who played in "Cabiria" to take the leading part in the first play. Mr. Johnston writes he will travel through Cape Colony, Transvaal, Durban, Zululand, Traziland, Rhorksia, Matabeleland and all the South African country to gain truthful detail as to exact locations of the parts to be used in the productions.

Miss Jewel Hunt

JEWEL HUNT is the latest member of the Vitagraph Company's stock players. Hitherto unknown to either the legitimate stage or the screen, she is considered a veritable "find" and is destined to rise to the highest ranks of her profession. As a dancer in New York society, however, she has already made an enviable reputation for herself. She is a Southerner, born in Atlanta, Ga., seventeen years ago, of French descent, the daughter of a Confederate colonel of sharpshooters, who still remembers with vivid distinctness the days when he drew fatal bead on the hated "Yanks."

She was one of the first to properly interpret the modern dances and under the patronage of a number of society women, she conducted the Dolly Varden Studio, at Fifth avenue and 46th street, Manhattan, where she numbered among her clientele many of the "400." She became one of the leading exponents of up-to-date dancing and originated the Dolly Varden Waltz and other attractive figures that found their following among the best dancers.

Jewel Hunt.

Miss Hunt has a personality that is undeniable, and is of an unusual type of beauty, resembling no other screen actress. Her French ancestry shows itself strongly in her face and manner, in her black hair and her charming daintiness.

During her brief time at the Vitagraph plant, she has shown a remarkable aptitude and a thorough understanding of the roles she has played. She is soon to be featured in productions that require her dancing ability as well as emotional powers she possesses.

Great Northern Announcement

General Manager Oes Promises Two Features Monthly, With Many Leading Players.

ANNOUNCEMENT is being made by I. C. Oes, general manager of the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West 40th street, New York, that they will henceforth release two features per month under the brand name "Polar Bear Features." These will consist of photoplays especially selected to meet the demands of the American public, and no less than four reels in length. The leading roles will be interpreted by such internationally known stars of the legitimate stage as Rita Sacchetto, Betty Nansen, Ebba Thomsen, Valdemar Psilander, A. Hertel, Nicholas Johansen, Olaf Fonss and others. The productions will be adaptations of well-known plays, and based upon novels and scenarios written by authors of international fame.

Ingvald C. Oes.

Amongst the first of the Polar Bear features will be a four-reel production entitled "Sins of Great Cities," "Money," a screen version of Emil Zola's famous novel of the same name, and a series of detective pictures entitled "The Man with the Missing Finger"; each of these productions contain a complete independent story. The leading part will be played by A. Hertel, the renowned actor, who has created an unprecedented reputation for himself by his famous characterizations of "Gar El Hama."

The Great Northern Film Company, which is one of the pioneers of the motion picture industry, has at all times exercised extraordinary foresight and aggressiveness. It was the first concern to introduce "Features," starting in the early spring of 1911 with the three-reel picture entitled "Temptations of a Great City," and has since been producing them regularly. The Great Northern was the first concern to engage stars of the spoken drama for its photoplays; and it was the first to produce multiple reel comedies. How auspicious the foresight of this aggressive company has been is best evidenced by the fact that since the inauguration of the above measures by the Great Northern, the same policy has been adopted by practically the entire film industry throughout the world.

Mr. Oes has had the management of the firm for the past eight years. The excellent reputation of his concern throughout the entire country is mainly due to his efforts. His earnest endeavor to offer the trade such productions as are in demand, is bound to meet with success, and it is hoped that the past prosperity of the Great Northern Film Company will be augmented by the Polar Bear features.

ENLARGE MOROSCO'S NEW YORK FILM OFFICES.

The continuous growth of the business at Oliver Morosco's Eastern film offices has for some time demanded larger quarters and in order to facilitate the increased activities the New York offices will be moved to a more spacious suite in the Candler Building.

A floor space of almost twice the size of that now occupied by the offices has been taken over by the company, and it is expected that the staff will be comfortably installed in its new home the early part of next week. There will be three private offices occupied by Carl H. Pierce, who is at the head of the Eastern headquarters; Julian M. Solomon, Jr., Accessory and Advertising Manager, and Pete J. Schmid, Publicity Representative. A large space will be allotted to the stenographic and billing departments. The store-room fitted out with library bureau steel shelving for the accessories and special advertising boosters, the mimeograph, multigraph and addressograph machines, cut cabinets, etc., will be in charge of Carl Berger. A new exhibitor's aid department has just been installed under the care of George K. Henken. A little over a year ago Carl H. Pierce, with the assistance of Julian M. Solomon, Jr., represented the company in the East, occupying desk room at 440 Fourth avenue.

Dorothy Davenport Member of Lasky Co.

MEMBER of a family that has been prominent in the American theater for many years, Miss Dorothy Davenport has been engaged as a regular member of the Lasky Feature Play Company and is busy at work on two elaborate productions in which she has leading roles at the studios in Hollywood, Cal.

Dorothy Davenport.

Miss Davenport made her first appearance in Paramount theaters in the Lasky production of Lou-Tellegen in "The Explorer." Universally she won praise for her playing. She will be the heroine in the picturization of "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo," supporting Theodore Roberts and Carlyle Blackwell.

Miss Davenport is a daughter of the noted comedian, Harry Davenport, and the celebrated actress, Alice Davenport. She is a niece of the late Fanny Davenport, for many years the reigning favorite of the Broadway stage. She was born March 13, 1895, in Boston, and was educated in the public schools in Brooklyn and at Virginia College, Roanoke. At six years of age she made her stage debut in a stock organization.

Her career on the legitimate stage was brief, however. After a few seasons as a child in vaudeville, she joined the Biograph Company at sixteen, and has appeared at different times with the Reliance, Nestor, Selig, Ince and Universal. With the latter organization she played leading roles with Wallace Reid, a screen romance that ended in their marriage. Her first motion picture was in support of Henry B. Walthall in "Life's Cycle."

Miss Davenport is fond of riding and motoring and has a reputation of fearing nothing, which she proved once by jumping off a motor boat which was running at full speed.

METRO FILM OPENS BOSTON HIPPODROME.

After scouring the market for what it considered the biggest and most pretentious current film offering for the auspicious opening of the New Hippodrome in Boston, the week of October 25, the management selected the Rolfe-Metro five-part feature production, "The Final Judgment," in which Ethel Barrymore is starred. The New Hippodrome is the largest theater in New England and has a seating capacity of 4.000. This now gives to Metro the two largest theaters in New England, for the Boston theater, seating 3,500, has gained its wide popularity with Metro features.

The keenest sort of competition existed among the motion picture companies for the feature place on the new program. Metro won out despite the fact that the Boston theater was was already showing Metro feature pictures. Both theaters are run by the Keith interests. The prices at the New Hippodrome range from 25 cents to $1 for admission. For the opening week an added feature was Creatore and his band of fifty pieces.

RAVER HAS STUDIO ON STATEN ISLAND.

Harry R. Raver, president of the Raver Film Corporation, has accomplished another coup d'etat, this time in connection with a studio in which to produce Augustus Thomas' successes, commencing with "The Other Girl." The erection of this studio has just been completed by W. Lindsay Gordon and his associates. According to the agreement entered into by the Raver organization with the builders, Mr. Raver assisted in the installation of lights and selection of scenery and settings. The studio is ideally located on Staten Island and suits the needs and purposes of the company in every way. Every modern facility necessary for the production of important pictures has been provided.

Kleine-Edison Holiday Program

One Comedy and Five Dramas Already Listed for Coming Releases.

THE Kleine-Edison program, which is now complete to the first of next year, offers a pleasingly diversified list of both stars and features. Of the six productions still to come, one is a comedy, "The Politicians," with Bickel and Watson, and the five remaining are dramas. Of these latter, two, "Children of Eve" and "The Destroying Angel," are of the heavier kind and both Edisons.

Two stars new to the Kleine-Edison program will make their debut during December. Arthur Hoops will be seen in the lead of Canavan in the Kleine feature, "The Danger Signal," founded on Rupert Hughes' Saturday Evening Post story, "Canavan, the Man Who Had His Way." Maude Fealy is scheduled to make her first appearance under the Kleine management in "Bondwomen," a story written especially for her. Irene Fenwick, Viola Dana, Bickel and Watson, Mabel Trunelle and Marc MacDermott are headliners who will be seen in this interesting list of good things to come.

The November program is opened by Irene Fenwick in George Kleine's version of Owen Davis' play, "The Sentimental Lady." This is a delightful story of summer resorts, gas stocks, Wall Street and a promising young lawyer who refuses to take "no" for an answer. Miss Fenwick is supported by Frank Belcher, Richie Ling, Ben L. Taggart and others of equal reputation. This feature will be released through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service on November 3.

The following week, on November 10, will be released "Children of Eve," a powerful film story, featuring Viola Dana In a smoothly laid plot, moving rapidly to an unexpected, powerful climax, there is told in this subject a story of love and tragedy. Miss Dana demonstrates graphically her great dramatic talent and scores a decided success.

On November 17 comes the Kleine film comedy, "The Politicians," featuring Bickel and Watson, one of the strongest team of comedians on the American stage today. This is five reels of unadulterated refined mirth, unfolding a tale of two strong-arm politicians fleeing from justice after election frauds in New York have been discovered.

"The Danger Signal," with Arthur Hoops in the titular role, appears on December 1. This tense, powerful story created a sensation when it appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. In it Mr. Hoops rises to dramatic heights and, supported by a company of unusual excellence, presents a most finished performance. The staging of this remarkable photoplay is an achievement in itself.

A week later, December 8, "The Destroying Angel," featuring Mabel Trunnelle, will be offered in the role of Mary Ladislas, whose dramatic inclinations cause her father's disapproval. She elopes with the chauffeur because of his sympathy for her ideals. On the way for a license the auto overturns and kills the chauffeur. The finale provides a situation intensely interesting, affording Miss Trunnelle opportunity to display her forceful character.

December 15 "Bondwomen," with Maude Fealy in the star role, will be released. This story was written especially for Miss Fealy, and provides a splendid vehicle for a display of her remarkable dramatic power. "Bondwomen" is a tale of great strength, furnishing many situations of intense interest, garnished with just enough humor to afford moments for relaxation. It is peculiarly a photodrama that will provide the proper setting for ushering in the holiday season.

ARDEN SUGGESTS A LITTLE STRATEGY.

Edwin Arden, the actor, who is at present engaged with the World Film Corporation in the production of "The Gray Mask," suggested a new method of saving time for the director and actors when the company was out at Ninety-third street and West End avenue in New York City making exteriors, the other day.

The scene was a simple one. The actor had to leave a house, followed at an interval by several other people. A great crowd of adults and children gathered about the camera, watching operations, and continually getting in the way. The light was failing fast. After the director had tried four times successively to get the picture, and failed, he was about ready to give up for the afternoon. Mr. Arden suggested that someone go around the corner with the still camera and two of the minor characters who were not needed and who bordered on the comedy type. An assistant was sent with the still camera, and the comedians were soon at work before it was half a block away. As they left, the director and the principals climbed into the machine and shouted, "Good-bye! See you tomorrow!" to those who were being left behind.

They drove up the avenue two blocks, then returned to the house which they were trying to photograph and went through their important scene without disturbance, because the crowd was around the corner watching the fake comedians before the still camera.

Mr. Arden suggests that this may prove valuable to other directors who are having difficulties in taking exteriors.

A. C. F. Company Extending

Has Increased Capital and Enlarged Factory and Is to Open Western Sales Office in Chicago.

AT a meeting of the officials of the American Correspondent Film company the capital of the company was increased. The factory in Stamford is being enlarged and a western sales office is to be opened shortly in Chicago. "The Battles of a Nation," a six-reel production, is the A. C. F. company's latest.

"Friends and Foes," a four reel production, presenting intimate views of the treatment of war captives in the German prison camps and showing operation of the captured industries, is ready for the market and state rights are being sold.

"System, the Secret of Success," and "Pushing Through Poland" have been sold outright and these features are to be put out by their purchasers under their own brand with different titles.

The A. C. F. company has received two batches of film from Europe. One was from Edward Lyell Fox and the other from Albert K. Dawson, special A. C. F. war correspondents.

Augusta Anderson

AUGUSTA ANDERSON, for four years under the guidance of David Belasco, has succumbed to the lure of the movies. Miss Anderson has turned down several large offers to appear on the legitimate stage. She said that the remainder of her days in the amusement world would be spent before the camera. She will be seen shortly in a number of feature pictures.

Augusta Anderson.

Miss Anderson is not altogether new in pictures, having been the leading lady in Biograph pictures more than a year. Heretofore she only appeared in one or two reelers. Within a few days she will attach her name to a contract that will call for her services in a series of features that will occupy her time for a year.

Before taking up the screen work, Miss Anderson was starred in "The Good Little Devil," "The Governor's Lady," "Years of Discretion," "The Man Inside," and a number of other Belasco productions. She is known as one of the prettiest women either on the stage or before a camera. In every popularity contest she has entered, she has always come out the winner or a close runner up.

Miss Anderson is at her best in society dramas, although she is capable of holding her own with the best of character actresses. In several of her productions she played the parts of vampires, to the queen's taste.

Rothapfel Speaks in Washington

Tells Exhibitors of Capital City They Should Aim to Show the Best and Avoid Sensationalism.

By Clarence L. Linz.

TWO big surprises were sprung at the dinner at the Raleigh Hotel on Friday evening last under the auspices of the Mutual Film Corporation, at which the exhibitors of Washington and nearby places had an opportunity of listening to the address of S. L. Rothapfel, vice president and director of the Rialto Theater Company of New York, who visited Washington while on a lecture tour.

In his talk to the exhibitors, Mr. Rothapfel predicted that there will be a war between the producers in the days to come and he declared the business today to be in a chaotic stage. "You've got to hold tight," he said, "if you want to stick and make good, for the day is coming when it will be the survival of the fittest. The exhibitors are the base of the industry, and it should be their aim to show only the best of films and to avoid sensationalism.

"I cannot impress upon you too much the importance of attention to every little detail of your business," he continued. "You should create a feeling of co-operation among the employees of your theatre and no matter how small their position, impress upon them that they are part of the organization." Mr. Rothapfel declared that the fitting of music to pictures is a thing of the past, and that the music for the up-to-date motion picture theater must be interpretative. He also spoke of the use of perfume in displaying certain features, mentioning the use of incense during an exhibition of "Quo Vadis," and of sulphur during a showing of the "Last Days of Pompeii."

"Individuality means success in the moving picture game, for the movies will not stay long in their present state," he continued. "The Barnum theory has been exploded and the people are not so easily fooled as they used to be. They know good pictures when they see them. You cannot kill an art, and the spoken drama is an art, but the advent of motion pictures has forced the producers of the spoken drama to give the public better entertainment in order to hold its own with the popular moving pictures."

He declared that the moving pictures were the greatest power in the world for good or evil, the press excepted, and that 5,000,000 people attend the exhibitions everv day. He stated that co-operation between the exhibitors and the newspapers is essential to a successful and growing business and that advertising brought big returns on an investment. Following his formal address, Mr. Rothapfel answered pertinent questions anent the business asked by the exhibitors and the guests present. Mr. Ferguson, better known in the field as "Gardner Mack," editor of the motion picture section of the Washington Times, acted as toastmaster. Prior to introducing Mr. Rothapfel as the principal speaker of the evening, he made a few remarks on the condition of business, its growth, etc., in the national capital.

Clinton T. Brainard, president and editor of the Washington Herald, spoke of the rapid growth of the moving picture form of amusement. "The growth has been so rapid," he said, "that one can hardly grasp it. At the annual banquet last Wednesday in New York of the Retail Book Sellers' Association, the fact was developed that despite the war in Europe the sale of standard books, such as the works of Thackeray, Dickens and Shakespeare, had been normal, while the sale of books of popular fiction had fallen far below the average.

"This falling off in popular fiction is due to the fact that few people remain at home to read for pleasure in the evening any more, but go to the moving picture theater instead. It has been demonstrated that the moving picture has likewise been responsible for a decided falling off in the circulation and advertising of the afternoon newspapers because, instead of sitting at home and reading the newspaper, people go to the moving picture shows.".

One of the surprises was sprung by Tom Moore, owner of the Garden, Strand and Plaza Theaters, who declared that "on March 15, of next year, work will be started on my new theater in Ninth street, between D and E streets, Northwest,, which will be completed by November 1, 1916, at a cost of $500,000. It will be a moving picture house exclusively."

Mr. Moore told his audience how he had started in the moving picture business by first singing in a picture theater, his wife playing the piano and how since that time he has made $500,000. He has operated seventeen theaters in the last ten years, three of which he still has. The second surprise was the announcement that ground will soon be broken for the erection of a large theater on upper Fourteenth street, Northwest, probably by a group of New York capitalists.

The banquet arrangements were made by B. C. Cunningham and Victor L. Abbey, of the local Mutual offices. Among others present were A. Brylawski of the Cosmos Theater; Harry Wolf, Meader's Theater; A. B. Spellbring, of the local operators' union; J. E. McDonald, of the Southwest Amusement Company; H. E. Bierman, Mutual Film Corporation; J. A. Cunningham, Baltimore manager for the Mutual Film Corporation; C. Plunkett, Plaza Theater; V. C. Wrenn, Strand Theater; Tom Moore, Arthur Robb, Garden Theater; E. B. McCurdy, Lafayette Theater, Baltimore; G. C. Schulz, Penn. Gardens; George M. Mann, manager of the Washington office of the Paramount Pictures Corporation; Thomas A. Costello, American Theater; A. J. Eichelberger and F. H. Smith of the Empire Theater, Frederick, Md., and members of the press.

Mr. Rothapfel has wired the Mutual offices from El Paso, from which point he took the train for Los Angeles, that he is eating his way "around the United States." Following his visit to Washington he stopped at New Orleans, Dallas and El Paso. He reports his meetings are getting better right along the line. His immediate itinerary is Los Angeles, October 30 to November 2; San Francisco, November 3-5; Portland, November 7; Seattle, November 8. Then Mr. Rothapfel will proceed to Salt Lake, Denver, Kansas City and through the Middle West.

Bradley Barker with Kalem

BRADLEY BARKER, who has joined the forces of the Kalem Company, began his work for that company in support of Marguerite Courtot in "The Ventures of Marguerite," and from preliminary reports he is bound to be as successful with this company as he was when on the stage. Mr. Barker entered the motion picture field several years ago following a long experience on the stage and in commercial life. While he was not of a theatrical family, Mr. Barker's early inclinations were toward the stage.

Bradley Barker.

Born in Hempstead, Long Island, thirty-one years ago, his father sent him to New York early in his life to attend school. He was brought up by a theatrical family and was associated with Julian Mitchell and others during his early days. it was natural that Mr. Barker at the conclusion of his school days should turn to the stage for a living.

Mr. Barker had everything in his favor, looks, ambition and a winning personality. He started stock work, becoming a member of F. F. Proctor's stock company. Later he joined the West End stock and soon all eyes were turned to the actor for the sterling performances that he was giving in the leading roles.

His stock experience finished, Mr. Barker turned to new productions and for two years he supported Dustin Farnum in "Arizona" and then in "The Virginian," in which the young actor kept up his excellent work.

Then came a season or two in vaudeville, in which he headed his own company. At the conclusion of his vaudeville engagements Mr. Barker left the stage and entered commercial life, but he soon returned to the theatrical field and later turned to motion pictures. After working for several companies Mr. Barker turned to the Kalem Company and was engaged.

Mr. Barker has very definite ideas on the qualifications of an actor for motion pictures and he is a strong believer in "realism." There is no detail too small for him to spend considerable time over, and he never appears in a picture without first having devoted considerable attention to the things which he believes necessary to a good performance.

Signal Will Make Railroad Series

S. S. Hutchinson Will Supervise Production of Fifteen Subjects Featuring Helen Holmes, Directed by J. P. McGowan.

HELEN HOLMES is to be featured in "The Girl and the Game," a film novel in chapters, to be produced by the Signal Film Corporation, the first release of which will be December 13. The story is from the pen of Frank Hamilton Spearman, whose stories have appeared in McClures, Collier's and other publications, earning for him a reputation for literary virility that few authors of the day possess.

J. P. McGowan will produce this latest screen novel under the general supervision of Samuel S. Hutchinson, the master-producer of "The Diamond From the Sky," and President John R. Freuler of Mutual Film Corporation, for which latter organization "The Girl and the Game" will be a "special feature," and which have general direction of the distribution.

Helen Holmes, as "the girl," will have abundant opportunities to display the daring which is her proud possession, and which has brought more thrills to motion picture patrons than the work of any other actress on the screen. The "game" is society today, finance and intrigue interwoven with a background ranging from the marble pillared offices in Wall street and the mansions of the elect to lamp-lighted switch shacks and smoke filled roundhouses with their coal-eating guests of iron.

Helen Holmes.

To produce "The Girl and the Game" a special studio was erected giving to the Signal the greatest railroad studio in existence. A depot was built practicable in every way inside and outside, and a switch tower was erected at a point on the trackage laid on the Signal grounds. Switches, semaphores and all the mechanical safeguards and hazards of the rails have been installed. So complete is the equipment at this new studio that in the actual taking of the first chapter of the forthcoming novel, Director McGowan, thirty minutes after the author's script was delivered to him, had a train consisting of Pullmans, day coaches, parlor cars, diner, baggage car and engine, ready for the camera.

One of the first scenes to be taken was a collision, a freight train smashed into a siding, and a thrilling leap by Miss Holmes to safety. This is all in the first chapter, making a sensational cascade of tense situations, tinged with a human expectancy all compelling, and a femininity pretty and dainty.

Mr. Spearman has in his writings all of the romance of railroad making from the secret intrigue in the private offices of the magnate to the nerve-racked but cool-headed men whose skill drives the big iron horses over the great steel rails. There is in his story the spirit of fight, a struggle for a purpose, with all of the ramifications of the human tangle in the present day battle of man to man. He is the author of "Whispering Smith," one of the most successful serials ever run in American newspapers. "Held for Orders," one of the most melodramatic contributions to American literature, came from his pen as did "The Nerve of Foley," "Dr. Bryson," "The Daughter of a Magnate," Robert Kimberly" and "The Mountain Divide."

Altogether it is predicted by Director McGowan that "The Girl and the Game" will have more actual "thrill-punches" than any picturized novel thus far produced. He has set himself to outdo Director Taylor, producer of "The Diamond from the Sky" in the matter of thrill-making.

Kaj and Arne Gynt

KAJ and Arne Gynt, the well known and talented artists of the Royal Dramatic theater in Stockholm, have recently arrived in New York.

This brother and sister began their stage career at a very early age and achieved many successes. When mere children they were accorded the honor of playing in "Hop o' My Thumb" before the late Oscar II., of Sweden. Among the heavier roles in which they have appeared most successfully are Nastiah and Alyoshka in "A Night's Lodging," by the famous Russian author, Maxim Gorki; as Eleonora and Benjamin in August Strindberg's "Easter," and many others.

Arne Gynt.

Kaj Gynt.

Mr. and Miss Gynt, like most other talented artists, have succumbed to the lure of the camera, and have appeared in a number of photoplays produced in Sweden and Germany.

Miss Gynt is a striking woman, possessing most appealing and expressive large, black eyes which give her a most winsome expression. Her power of interpreting varied emotions is developed to an unusual degree and her every movement is a graceful pose.

Mr. Gynt is a serious, thoughtful type, whose histrionic art is equally as well developed as that of his sister.

Owing to the present unsettled conditions in Europe these unusual artists have brought their talents to the New York mart. Any producing company desirous of high class ability will find in them a valuable acquisition.

ARTHUR S. KANE IN NEW VENTURE.

One of the interesting announcements of the week in exchange circles is that Arthur S. Kane has opened an office of his own in New York, at 901 Candler Building, 220 West 42d street, where he proposes to represent exchangemen and manufacturers. Only recently Mr. Kane returned with his family from a four months' trip in the Middle West and on the Pacific Coast.

"I feel the summer did me a lot of good in a business way," said Mr. Kane this week. "It added greatly to my knowledge of the film business throughout the country. This was my first trip to California, although my third to the Pacific Northwest. The film and picture business in that state was feeling the effects of the expositions which had caused quite a percentage of the theaters to close down. In the Northwest it simply is a case of rather scant population and practically as much film as in the densest communities. Under these circumstances an exchange manager should not be expected to make big returns.

"Canada, of course, has been feeling the effects of the war, and from Winnipeg West to Vancouver and Victoria, I found business rather slow.

"In Minneapolis, many of the exchange managers have the pleasant custom of taking lunch together. Trade animosities seem to play small part in their scheme of things.

"In Kansas City Mr. Newman, proprietor of the Royal, a downtown house at 1022 Main street, handed me two excellent exhibiting maxims: 'It isn't how much you make in a week, it is how many weeks you make money,' and 'Nothing works unless it is simple.'"

V-L-S-E Cuts Fat Melon

Directors Distribute Among Employees 20 Per Cent. of Profits for Quarter Ending October 9.

MONDAY was mèlon-cutting day at the home office of the "Big Four." On that day there were distributed the checks, representing twenty per cent. of the net profits of the company for a period of thirteen weeks from July 12 to October 9, among all the employees who had been with the organization during that time.

The directors of the V-L-S-E established the unusual precedent of making the office force, as well as the sales force eligible, but credited the sales force, because of the creative character of their work, with two shares per dollar of salary of the fund and the office force with one. It is significant of the spirit of co-operation which apparently prompted the division, however, that the directors made the following statement

"The board begs leave to enter your lives to the extent of making a personal suggestion, which is this: that each one continue to 'cut his cloth' only to the extent of his salary; and that those who do not possess a savings bank account will establish one with their share of the fund and with scrupulous care add to that account the whole of each succeeding distribution so that this organization may be the means of creating for many a life capital, the possession of which will be of inestimable satisfaction and may be, of unusual benefit in an unfortunate hour."

This distribution is to be a permanent affair, the division being made every thirteen weeks, or four times a year. It means, in reality, a most substantial increase in salary, but the board is anxious to make it clear it is not so to be considered but solely as a token of appreciation of the efforts of the organization and will in no way affect future advances in wages.

The V-L-S-E now has a staff of more than two hundred employees, with offices in nineteen cities. It is this month beginning the second half of its first year.

Triangle Signs Big Stars

Sir Herbert Tree to Appear Under Direction of Griffith—Ince Will Direct Mary Anderson de Navarro.

TWO contracts of signal importance to the photoplay world have been closed by the Triangle Film Corporation. They call for the screen appearances of Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree and Mary Anderson de Navarro., known on the stage as Mary Anderson. According to the announcement recently issued from the home office of the Triangle Corporation, Sir Herbert will reach New York on November 15th, and soon after that time will start work on photoplays under the direction of D. W. Griffith. Miss Anderson will be directed by Thomas Ince in her initial picture appearance.

The sum to be paid Sir Herbert is said to be one of the largest ever offered a dramatic star, cash in excess of $100,000 being the remuneration agreed upon. On his arrival in America, the actor-knight will decide whether he is to enter at once upon his motion picture activities, or fill a comparatively short theatrical engagement in a few of the larger cities. It is probable that one of his first productions will be Shakespeare's "Tempest," which should offer exceptional opportunities from a film standpoint.

The signing of Miss Anderson is equally a triumph for Triangle officials, for since her retirement, some years ago, she has consistently refused offers to return to the stage. Miss Anderson was born in Louisville, Ky., made her debut at Macaulay's Theater in that city and soon rose to the foremost rank of actresses. Unless there is a change in present plans she will be introduced to the photoplay public in Robert Hichen's "The Garden of Allah," a production to be followed by others for which the actress will write the scenarios.

RAVER CAST COMPLETED.

Director of Productions Percy Winter of the Raver Film Corporation is rapidly closing up the last few selections of the huge cast of five hundred necessary to portray "The Other Girl," which Augustus Thomas production inaugurates the releases of this new feature organization. In addition to James J. Corbett, Paul Gilmore and Becky Bruce, President Harry R. Raver announces the engagement of Frances Thompson, Mona Ryan, Horace Vinton, Mortimer Martini, Louis Thiel, Rawland Ratcliffe, Harry Redding, Ten Eyck Clay, Zola Telmzart and Lizzie McCall. The list enumerated comprises the principals.

Col. Selig Honored

MAYOR WILLIAM HALE THOMPSON, of Chicago, Ill., on Monday evening, October 25, nominated six new members of the Board of Education of Chicago. The Chicago Board of Education is among the most powerful and important educative boards in the United States. Included among the nominees was William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company. Mr. Selig is at present visiting his motion picture studios in Los Angeles, Cal., and Las Vegas, N. M., and was not appraised of the fact that he had been nominated as a member of the Chicago board.

Col. W. N. Selig.

In commenting upon his nomination, Mayor Thompson said: "I think my appointees are the best group of individuals ever suggested for membership on the board. There were many names suggested to me and the choice was a difficult one."

Mayor Thompson classifies Mr. Selig as a self-made man and one qualified in every way for membership on the Chicago school board. Mr. Selig is known as one of Chicago's most influential business men and is probably one of the most widely read men of the present day. His personal friendship with literary men and women of high standing is also very extensive. For many years Mr. Selig personally read and selected the novels, short stories and original photoplays submitted to his company for motion picture filming, and his conception of the style of work of authors of high class is probably unsurpassed by any book or magazine editor.

Mr. Selig's nomination for membership on the Chicago Board of Education is not only a tribute to Mr. Selig as a man, but is also a tribute to higher art in motion pictures The product of the Selig Polyscope Company has always been consistently clean and educational.

World Film's New Purchasing Agent

LEWIS J. SELZNICK believes in youth and always gives it its chance. Joe Harnd is only twenty-five years of age, but he is the purchasing agent of the World Film Corporation. His face and his record speak for themselves. There is his face and here is his record.

Joe Harnd.

He was five years purchasing agent for a large silk firm; then he worked for two years for the United States Printing and Lithographing Company. He has been with the World Film for a year, in which organization he started in a lowly position, before he attained his present promotion.

Mr. Harnd is a hard worker, conscientious in the performance of his duties, and, above all things, loyal to his company. Loyalty and ability are the things that count with World Film. He will be successful, because he has energy and the kind of a character that makes for success.

Reviews of Current Productions

"The Turn of the Road"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Presenting a Neglected Wife in an Appealing Light—Released Through V-L-S-E.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN THIS five-part production there is a creditable and in the main a successful effort at character drawing. The author of the story, Isabel Johnston, and the director of the picture, Tefft Johnson, were careful to bring out the human appeal of an unhappy domestic relationship that is easily understood. If anything, they developed the story in a too leisurely manner, repeating scenes that only serve to emphasize what the audience already knows. We soon learn that Helen King is devoted to her son, and although the manifestations of mother love are pleasing enough, as acted by Naomi Childers and Bobby Connelly, there is danger of their needlessly retarding the progress of the story. Perhaps a little judicious cutting will quicken the action in the first two reels and strengthen the grip of a production that has many excellent points.

From first to last the picture measures up to the high standard of photoplay workmanship characteristic of Vitagraph features. It always carries the impression of being true to life; the settings, down to the smallest detail, are flawless and the acting is convincing. "The Turn of the Road," more than most pictures, depends upon acting rather than action, for there is much to be expressed in conveying the emotions of the three principal characters. Miss Childers has the role of an unselfish wife, who refuses to believe ill of her husband, and even after she is forced to face the facts is ready to forgive him. Well conceived and earnestly played, an audience is certain to respond to the sympathetic appeal of this character. Then, of course, there is no more winning youngster on the screen than Bobby Connelly, cast as little Jack. Joseph Kilgour is dignified and forceful as the husband; Virginia Pearson, in appearance and manner, is just the actress for the part of the flirtatious young woman who causes all the trouble, and Robert Gaillard makes a correct figure of the doctor.

That the picture may not be without sensational moments, there is an automobile wreck in which the flirtatious young lady is seriously injured, also a fire of dangerous proportions. These scenes are well presented.

"The Family Stain"

Mystery Melodrama Adapted and Produced by Will S. Davis—Released on Fox Program.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE possibilities for suspense and interest in this five-part melodrama, produced by the Fox Company under the direction of Will S. Davis, would be more fully realized if the exposition in the opening reel were clearer. Judging from the comments of the audience at the New York Academy of Music, the situation at the basis of the mystery—the supposed substitution of one infant for another—was not sufficiently explained. The audience believed that something of the kind had happened; but seemingly it was at a loss to give a reason, and to account for the actions of the characters in subsequent scenes. This weakness in the early passages of the picture necessarily discounts the effect of the melodramatic scenes that are piled up in rapid succession.

The production, however, is not without its impressive moments, although too great emphasis is placed on physical horrors that are brought to the attention of the audience by means of many close-ups. In his efforts to arouse thrills, the director has stopped at nothing and the wonder of it is that some of the more brutal scenes were passed by the censors. As an example of expert photoplay workmanship the production has much in its favor. The thunderstorm, with the flashes of lightning shooting across the screen and the downpour of rain, is realistic to the last degree. Little is left to the imagination of the spectator in presenting the murder of the woman around whom the mystery centers, and the incidents leading to the apprehension of the murderer are followed in logical detail.

Frederick Perry heads a competent company that plays in a correctly melodramatic key. Walter Miller, in particular, gives a forceful performance.

"The Strange Unknown"

A Three-Reel Romance of New York and Paris—Produced at the Lubin Western Studio.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ONE of the most effective scenes in "The Strange Unknown" is when a woman's hands and arms part the portieres at the back of a room in which two people are conversing. The woman does not show herself further, her presence being accounted for by explanation that the house is haunted. Two half-sisters are the principal characters in the story. One is an actress living in Paris. An artist, who also lives abroad, is in love with Meta, the other sister. The actress is disinherited at her father's death and a fortune left to Meta. The elder sister returns to New York, with a French cook, and Meta is given a drug that deprives her of her senses and locked in the garret. The lady of the stage manages to gain possession of the family fortune and then tries to capture the young artist, who has also returned to this country. Meta escapes from her prison, shoots the crook, while still deranged, and is finally restored to reason and the arms of her lover.

William H. Ratterman is the author of this active photoplay, which unwinds a story of crime and mystery that will prove deeply interesting to admirers of the non-analytical but pro-sensational school of drama. The picture is well produced. Helen Eddy is excellent as the younger sister. Her mad scenes are particularly meritorious, being handled with fine restraint. Dorothy Barrett gives a clean-cut performance of the actress, and L. C. Shumway, George Routh and Melvin Mayo are competent in their respective roles.

Scene from "The Strange Unknown" (Lubin).

"Colorado"

Hobart Bosworth Strong in Interesting Five-Part Universal Broadway Feature.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

STIRRING melodrama is "Colorado," a five-part Universal Broadway Feature. The script is by Harvey Gates, who in adapting the play by Augustus Thomas, has done a good job. Hobart Bosworth is seen in a role that makes requisition on the versatility of the sure-enough screen player. From the college professor of placid temperament and quiet life he is transformed to the farmer and then to the miner—and horseman—facing and meeting stern situations that "try men's souls" and bringing to the surface those qualities of character admired even if not possessed by all humankind.

Scene from "Colorado" (Universal).

The story grips the sympathy right at the beginning. Mr. Bosworth is Thomas Doyle, the professor, compelled to resign his chair of Latin and remove to Colorado in the hope of restoring the health of his wife.

He pays an exorbitant price for arid land. The man who by indirection pilfers his money attempts by more direct means to steal the affections of Mrs. Doyle. The tool of the swindler pays violent and unwelcome attention to Doyle's sister. In revenge for a whipping administered by Doyle he nearly drowns the mine's crew—but the blast that endangers their lives sets free a torrent of water that enriches the ranch and makes Doyle's fortune. There is a happy ending.

Anna Lehr is seen to splendid advantage as the invalid wife who becomes strong in the mountain country. Her art finely supplements that of Mr. Bosworth. Colonel Kincaid, the character designed to show that an act of Congress cannot unfailingly make a gentleman of a United States officer, is well played by Mr. Bradbury. Carl Von Schiller, Albert MacQuarrie and Louise Baxter also do good work. A character that is made to stand out is that of Morgan, the old prospector, played by Edward Browe. It is a delineation that will make appeal anywhere, but deeply so in the west that so well knows the type.

The picture is well staged, barring the topography, which is of Southern California desert mountains and not of rocky Colorado. The scene of the flooded mine is unusually well done and constitutes one of the thrillers of the story. That the drunken good-for-nothing is caught in the torrent and carried to his death is the height of poetic justice. There are moments of tenderness and of strength. Of the latter one of the best is the denouement—the struggle in the hotel between Doyle and Kincaid.

"An Enemy of Mankind"

First Episode in Kalem's Stingaree Series Is Interesting Two-Part Picture.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IF THE first episode may be taken as a fair sample of what is to follow, the Kalem company may count on satisfactory returns from the "Stingaree" stories, to be released in a series of two-reel pictures, beginning with "An Enemy of Mankind" on November 24. The photoplays are adaptations of E. W. Hornung's stories, which will be published in some twelve hundred newspapers throughout the country while the Kalem productions are on view. James W. Horne is directing the pictures, acted by an admirably balanced cast, including True Boardman, William Brunton, Marin Sais and Frank Jonasson.

The opening reels of the series, something in the nature of a prologue, show how Irving Randolph, normally a young man of fine instincts, comes to be "an enemy of mankind." He is the victim of circumstances due to the cowardice of his dissipated brother, Robert, and in consequence is hopelessly embittered. In trying to save Robert from an entanglement with a married woman, Irving becomes seriously compromised and then, entirely by accident, he shoots the woman's husband. Despairing of ever having his story believed he goes to Australia with the intention of following a criminal career.

This episode not only gives a sound preparation for what is to follow, but is a complete photoplay in itself, replete with dramatic incidents. Most of the action is laid in England in sumptuous interior settings and against the backgrounds of beautiful estates. It is at a house party on one of these estates that the tragedy which alters Irving's life occurs. Concluding scenes, supposed to transpire in Australia, might have been photographed there instead of in a section of California where eucalyptus trees flourish. Director Horne was fortunate in finding locations that correspond to pictures and descriptions of Australian country.

"The Crimson Wing"

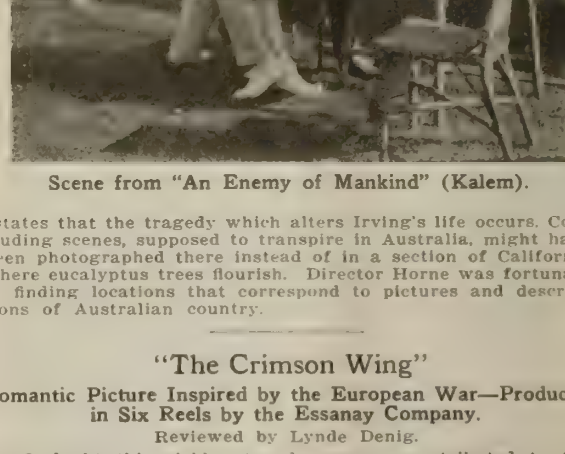
Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

NO doubt this richly staged romance, contributed to the V-L-S-E program by the Essanay Company, is a faithful adaptation of Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor's novel, "The Crimson Wing." If the author, in the first place, wrote an ingenuous sort of a story, it is not surprising that the same qualities are to be found in the picture. We should say that it is war as seen through the eyes of a romantic gentleman with a pretty good idea of what the public—especially the feminine public—likes. Which is equivalent to saying that this six-reel picture ought to be popular. It is almost bound to be popular, because there is nothing in the production to offend a sensitive taste, whereas there is much to please. That the credulity of an exacting spectator will at times be taxed, is equally true.



Scene from "The Crimson Wing" (Essanay—V-L-S-E).

First among the picture's assets may be placed a cast that contains such able players as E. H. Calvert, Beverly Bayne, Ruth Stonehouse and Byrant Washburn. Second, it seems fair to mention the elaborate and for the most part, appropriate settings. Then due credit must be given the romantic spirit of the story. Mr. Chatfield-Taylor does not aim for a place among the realists who paint war as it is. He prefers, rather, to imagine its colorful and romantic aspects. It could hardly be claimed that his theme is new, for quite frequently, in Civil War dramas and others, we have seen how friendships are broken and lovers parted when armies clash. But, at least, the theme has something of the charm of novelty when brought up to date and transferred to locations in war-torn Europe.

Germany and France supply the scenes for the action, the principal characters being a German count, his cousin, a French girl with whom he is in love, a French actress and a lieutenant in the German army. Count Ludwig and Marcelle have little more than confessed their love for each other when war is declared and automatically they become enemies. The picture then goes on to show how personal love surmounts love of country, by placing the Count at the mercy of the French girl and allowing her to save him though he carries valuable information to his superior officer. The pleasure-loving actress, sobered by the war and her hopeless love for Ludwig, becomes a nurse and saves the man she worships, even at the expense of her own life. All this and much more was woven into an entertaining and at times stirring story, admirably acted. Mr. Calvert is an excellent type for a German officer.

None the less there are scenes that appear rather too unnatural in view of what we read about conditions in Europe. German military efficiency is a by-word, yet Ludwig and his Uhlans when sent out on a scouting expedition fall into traps with childish simplicity. Then we are inclined to smile at the sight of a general's daughter, lurking around the firing line and heading a charge. But after all one cannot expect romance to be brutally realistic.

"Should a Woman Forgive?"

Equitable Program Offering in Five Reels, Made by Horkheimer Brothers, and Featuring Lillian Lorraine—A Sex Problem Picture, Well Written and Effectively Acted.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

A SEX problem picture in five reels, made by the Horkheimer Brothers and issued on the Equitable program, "Should a Woman Forgive?" ably fulfils its mission. Both sides of the situation it reflects are vivid and dramatically effective. The author of the script, Joseph E. Howard, has provided incidents free from the suggestion of staleness and repetition, and has introduced them with a balance that keeps the attention flowing along with the action without hurry or dragging. There is also much to praise in the direction. The work of the players is restrained, natural and convincing and the staging is for the most part simple and to the point.

It has the two sides usual to such a picture. Here, on the one hand, is Lillian Lorraine playing passionate breast to breast kisses and all the vapors, whims and petulances of a Gypsy trollop with a heart that is cold and calculating in a voluptuous body. On the other hand, is Mabel Van Buren's interpretation of a badly treated wife of a not very interesting individual who is trotting back and forth between the two "homes." The light on this side is heightened by the presence of a child and a dignified mother-in-law, mother of the wife, who has money in her own right. This wronged woman is played sincerely and, if Miss Van Buren's work is not so "artistic" as Miss Lorraine's, it is much more pleasing. It rings true emotionally and is full of dignity.

Scene from "Should a Woman Forgive?" (Equitable).

The value of the offering depends upon the patronage. It will interest all; we fear that it will please most. It cannot claim depth; for it gets no real hold on actual life, the man in the case being a figure—the outline of a type, rather than a type—whose inner heart is not shown to us. It is very good work done on a subject not of the highest.

"The Frame-Up"

George Fawcett Comes to the Screen in a Dramatic Five-Part Universal Subject of Politics and Love.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THREE characters bulk big in "The Frame-Up," the five-part Universal Broadway Feature in which George Fawcett, veteran actor, is introduced to the screen. These are the star, Maude George, and Harry Carter. There is a fourth figure, the physical counterpart of which or of whom does not appear before us. That is Otis Turner, who has written and produced a story of politics and love that will more than entertain—it will hold and it will move.

Scene from "The Frame-Up" (Universal).

Mr. Fawcett has the role of Luke Simms, a politician of rugged honesty. It is a character that in life may be somewhat rare, but surely always welcome and one that in the end is usually famous. Simms is a bachelor who loves children—you see, he is unusual all around; but here again is a likable quality. When Sears, the boss, is in a pinch he names and elects Simms mayor, trusting to time and the dark and devious methods of the master skilled in corruption to subdue him. When the issues of battle are joined it is his mistress Sears selects as the instrument of Simms' undoing. She is to win the mayor and marry him—and control him. How she fails—to control him—is an interesting part of the story.

Mr. Fawcett's manner of speaking—especially in situations of stress—is of the stage rather than of the screen. It is of the rapid-fire or more accurately of the staccato style, but manifestly it fits the character and adorns it. Probably he will like the screen and surely its followers will like him. He has strength and he has magnetism.

As to Maude George: Here is an actress. Face strong and mobile, with a trace of the Latin; large eyes, revealing keen intelligence. To see her performance of Florida Everett, the mistress, who obeys the instructions of a dreaded overlord and marries the mayor and falls in love with him, is to want to see more of her work. Mr. Carter, who plays Sears, is excellent in his many-sided villainy. He displays polish as well as power. Albert MacQuarrie, Olive Fuller Golden and Lule Warrenton complete a good acting cast.

"The Martyrs of the Alamo"

Fine Arts Five-Reel Historical Drama Produced Under the Direction of W. Christy Cabanne and the Supervision of David W. Griffith.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A VERITABLE historical drama of tremendous action and of high added value in its elaborate subtitles, "The Martyrs of the Alamo" follows closely the best previous idealizations of the same story with superior care as to detail and greater intensity during the supreme moments of struggle. Most sublime sacrifice of American blood for the cause of liberty, the defense of the Alamo needs such adequate picturing lest we forget how the broad sweep of fair country we enjoy in peace was wrung from the hearts of those who made it what it is. We do forget. The warm hearthstone does not foster nobility of character. We become completely engrossed in absorbing, existing, recreating and dying, like so many vegetables. We lack the stimulus of some great cause to fight for and lapse into so many turnips or orchids, according to social station, except when some epic like the "Alamo" stirs the sap in our veins until it feels like the red blood of our hard-fighting ancestors.

The accurate picturing of those ancestors, their dress, their crudities, their strategems in warfare, their remarkable combination of cunning, self-control and stubborn courage, is an education in itself, but it is the great stimulus of this story that has highest value. It quickens our pulses, gives new life to stagnant blood of overfed prosperity. "The Martyrs of the Alamo" is an admirable presentation from every point of view and should prove a winner wherever it is shown.

"The Sentimental Lady"

Irene Fenwick in a Five-Reel Comedy-Drama—Released by the Kleine-Edison Feature Service.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE scenario of "The Sentimental Lady" is taken from a drama written by Owen Davis. George Kleine has given it the benefit of an excellent cast, headed by Irene Fenwick, and the story admits of many scenes of great beauty, amid quiet woodlands and on the shores of a lovely sylvan lake.

Scene from "The Sentimental Lady" (Kleine-Edison).

The plot is along familiar lines. During the opening reel, the action takes place in the city. Amy Cary, a wealthy young girl, owns a controlling interest in the People's Gas Company. Peter Cary, her uncle, is president of the company. Norman Van Aulsten, son of the vice-president, attempts to help his father unload a crooked deal on Amy. The young man also is anxious to marry her. The action shifts to a summer hotel on Trout Lake. Here, Amy meets Bob Nelson, a level-headed young attorney, who promptly proceeds to make love to her, rows her to an uninhabited island, and takes a long and dangerous swim for another craft when their boat drifts away. In the meantime, young Van Aulsten betrays the daughter of a local guide; and as Bob is the one who frustrates the crooked deal of his rival, he has little trouble in winning Miss Cary. The events in "The Sentimental Lady" follow along pleasantly, but never reach any real dramatic height. The nearest approach to a strong scene is when Amy prevents the guide from shooting Van Aulsten, and that is of secondary interest. Bob Nelson's swim is a picturesque incident, but it can hardly be called thrilling. On the credit side of the photoplay are four reels of pictorial loveliness, the development and consummation of an engaging love story, and the thoroughly competent acting of Irene Fenwick and the supporting company. Miss Fenwick's charming personality and easy command of stage technic permit her to make Amy Cary a most likable young person. Jack Devereaux realizes Bob Nelson in a very satisfactory manner, and other members on the honor roll are Frank Belcher, John Davidson, Thomas Magrath, Richie Ling, Anna Reader, Lila Barclay, Della Conner, and Ben L. Taggart.

Ruth Hoyt Burned in Studio Explosion.

While acting in the Casino Star comedy, "Beauty in Distress," with Harry Vokes, Miss Ruth Hoyt was painfully but not severely burned in a studio explosion. Wearing a comedy make-up as an extremely plain woman, it was Miss Hoyt's business to gaze at herself in a mirror. Not being able to stand such a homely visage, the mirror was to explode. The explosion occurred but some of the burning powder fell on Miss Hoyt's hand. She was able to continue at work after Director Edwin Middleton had applied first aid remedies.

"The Menace of the Mute"

Another of the Ashton Kirk Series in Five-Part Gold Rooster Play.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THUS far in the Ashton Kirk series proves beyond a doubt the aptitude of both John T. McIntyre, the author, and Arnold Daly, actor-director, for the manufacture and staging of thrilling melodramatic situations. There is also proof positive that Sheldon Lewis is an adept at feigning death, and makes a remarkably effective corpse. The fact of the matter is, it is rather a disappointment to the spectator when this talented actor passes out with such celerity. However, thus is he cast in the play, and so it must be.

"The Menace of the Mute" will please the majority of audiences because the majority of people like melodrama. The more thrilling it is, provided realism does not entirely vanish, the better it pleases.

The story of the murder committed in the play centers about the search for a clue to the death of an old machinist who had in his possession the plans of an invention belonging to the father of the juvenile lead of the play. The young man having a mysterious and apparently unpleasant connection with the old machinist, is believed guilty by his sweetheart, who upon finding that the police are watching the house rushes to warn him. The discovery of the clue is made by Ashton Kirk, and the deaf mute and an accomplice, who are responsible for the murder, in the attempt to gain possession of the plans of the invention, are arrested amid thrilling circumstances.

The production is well made, its situations are tense, its photography good, and it has all the attributes of a good box office attraction.

"Pennington's Choice"

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne Appear in Quality-Metro Production That Brings a Surprise at the Close.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"PENNINGTON'S CHOICE" may be placed among the very few photoplays that spring a surprise near the close of the last of five reels. And it is a genuine surprise, too, for all along the spectator has been quite in the position of Pennington himself, who has been fooled right and left. He believed two fiercely aggressive bandits to be sincere in their efforts to knife him; he was taken in by the disguise of his sweetheart and believed her to be the twin sister of the girl he wished to marry, and he never guessed that the whole affair was pre-arranged to test his manly caliber. Originality in plot and treatment must be credited to this production of the Quality Pictures Corporation, directed by O. A. C. Lund and featuring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

Scene from "Pennington's Choice" (Quality-Metro).

Miss Bayne's transformation from a fashionably gowned young woman to a bare-footed girl of the Canadian wilderness is so complete that an audience is ready to credit Pennington's failure to penetrate the deception. He is told that her name is Marie, that she is Eugenia's twin sister, and that she will assist her father in judging him, for Eugenia will not be allowed to marry a man who does not possess the courage and strength to inspire respect in primitive society.

Pennington, who has grown soft since his college days, is subjected to the severest sort of tests. He goes into training with his friend Jack Jeffries (brother of the former champion), and on his return to the settlement trounces the two bullies who have been bothering him. He never suspects, nor does the audience, that the men are Eugenia's brothers. Scenes of particular interest in this ingenious story show Miss Bayne diving from high rocks and Mr. Bushman sparring with a prize fighter. The fight in which he proves his courage is as spirited an affair as one need wish to see. Wellington Playter makes an impressive woodsman.

"The Devil's Darling"

A Rialto Feature of An Original Character Featuring Francine Larrimore.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

PARTICULARLY attractive because its players and its director have worked conscientiously to make the play a dramatic success, "The Devil's Darling" suffers at the same time from an unhealthiness of theme. It is original in character, and presents a strangely gruesome flight of the imagination.

Flavia Arcaro has succeeded well in portraying what we would suppose to have been the idea of the author in connection with the "Devil's Darling." Furthermore, she has dressed the part well, and presents a handsome picture of the intended type.

Francine Larrimore as Alice Lane, a girl behind the counter of a department store, who is lured by the older woman as a sacrifice to her devil, plays with ease and grace, and lends a charm to the atmosphere of darkness that pervades the picture. She is lithe, beautiful, and innocent—the only pure thing in sight.

The closed room whose door opens by means of a hidden spring in which reside the darling's devil and numerous skeletons and skulls presumably of victims brought into his majesty's clutches through the dark-stained incidents which mark the woman's past, can be enjoyed only when considered as an allegorical representation. The production is a go-between allegory and realism, and its moral would point out to young girls that to be safe they must have a care of strangers of either sex.

"See America First"

No. 8 of the Gaumont "See America First" Series Revives Interest in Historic Boston.

Keeping pace with the growing tendency to stimulate interest in things American, the Gaumont Company continues to give the public carefully detailed illustrations of points of geographical, topographical and historic interest throughout the American continent.

Too much cannot be said in praise of this system of enlightening the Americans of today with regard to the history and scenic beauty of their own country.

One of the most interesting of the "See America First" series presents all the points of interest in and about Boston. Among the scenes presented are glimpses of the beautiful grounds of Harvard University, the Charles river, Bunker Hill Monument, the harbor, famous as the scene of the Boston Tea Party; the Tremont Hotel, the home of Louisa M. Alcott, and the old State House. The scene of the massacre is also shown, along with various points associated in history with George Washington, Paul Revere, etc.

A very fine quality of photography characterizes this number, which should be especially interesting to educators.

"The Golden Claw"

A Strong Five-Reel Kay-Bee by C. Gardner Sullivan.

A MOTION picture story of the highest class, of vital subject, original development and striking characterization, "The Golden Claw" is one of those rare products calculated to interest many millions of intelligent people and bring into the fold those other millions of intelligent people who are repelled by poor examples of the new art. The story deals with a subject exceedingly difficult to handle without stumbling upon lines long regarded as commonplace, but it escapes them through a finer conception than usual on the part of the author. It is fortunate for those who attend the exhibitions of photodrama, as well as for Mr. Sullivan himself, that he is what might be called "established." Had he been compelled to submit the script of "The Golden Claw" indiscriminately, it might never have been produced. It is one of the kind beyond mediocre grasp until thrown on the screen in complete shape.

"The Golden Claw" attacks the problem of money madness with great simplicity and directness so far as the line of action is concerned, but the admirable solution is so subtle that only fine characterization and such powerful interpretation as that given by Bessie Barriscale and Frank Mills carries it to the mind through the heart. Miss Barriscale's conversion to a finer view of the marriage relation through delayed promptings of a womanly heart is attended with some exquisite revelation of mental and emotional states, a source of perpetual delight to those in the audience who enjoy a play well worth while.

"The Ferret"

Rupert Julian Appears in Three-Reel Production, Giving a New and Startling Variation of Jekyl and Hyde.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

BY SOME most amazing facial grimaces and contortions Rupert Julian outdoes the famous dual character of "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde," in this three-reel production, entitled "The Ferret." He makes the change of features and expression entirely without the aid of any sort of makeup and does it so effectively that the unsuspecting observer is not aware of the deception until the desired moment arrives. It is a new revelation of what can be accomplished by the human countenance for screen visualization.

Scene from "The Ferret" (Universal).

Mr. Julian is assisted by Elsie Jane Wilson and "Doc" Crane. The latter gives a splendid study of a wily old detective who traces the crime to the respected physician and demands an accounting.

The story is simple, but absorbing. The first scene pictures the bodies of two dead men lying on a restaurant floor. The only suspect is a queer fellow with a distorted face, who is held for some time, but refuses to divulge knowledge of the crime, even under the third degree. The detective arranges to permit the man's escape. He falls into the trap and by careful shadowing is followed to the home of Dr. Baxter. The detective confronts the debonair physician and brings the crime home to him. The wife's story clears him, however, showing that he acted in both her defense and his own. The production is intensely interesting and well handled throughout.

Mysteries of Monte Carlo

Revealed in Lasky Production, "Mr. Grex," in Which Messrs. Roberts and Blackwell Star.

THERE has been joy among the hundreds of persons in and around Hollywood Cal., who work as "extras" in the motion picture studios since the Lasky Feature Play Company started work on a very elaborate feature production, "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo," a picturization of E. Phillips Oppenheim's widely read novel of the same name.

Rehearsing a Scene in "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo."

Some of the scenes in the play, in which Theodore Roberts and Carlyle Blackwell will appear as co-stars on the Paramount program, are laid within the great casinos of Monte Carlo, the world's most famous gambling resort. Probably the biggest interior setting ever erected in a studio is used in one of these casino scenes. Four great halls are revealed in panorama and nearly 1,000 persons are seen playing at the various roulette and card tables.

Frank Reicher, under whose direction the photoplay is being made, had the benefit of considerable personal experience several years ago in Monte Carlo. Mr. Reicher is a native of Germany, but has traveled extensively on the continent and he passed many months at different times in Monte Carlo. Before the Lasky artistic and carpenter staffs started to construct the massive interior sets they studied authoritative plans and photographs of the main casino at Monte Carlo and the one shown in "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo" is a replica of the famous resort and gaming house.

In book form "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo" had a big circulation, first as a serial. It contains a melodramatic story that is exceptionally timely at the moment as some of the principals represent national figures in Europe. The story is, however, strictly fiction and attempts to expose no historical facts. Intrigue, international spies and the enthusiastic movements of a young American, proverbially wealthy, form a series of dramatic situations.

It is related from the Lasky studios that when the call went forth for additional players to appear in the great ensemble scenes in "Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo" many local celebrities of Hollywood applied for positions. When "extras" are used at the Lasky plant Cecil B. DeMille and Jesse L. Lasky always make it extremely pleasant for them. Incidentally, the big ball room floor erected for "Mr. Grex" has been put to practical use many times in the past month.

Theodore Roberts in the title role of the piece is given a splendid opportunity for the kind of acting of which he is capable on the screen. His impressive appearance lends itself admirably to the role of a Russian nobleman. Mr. Blackwell, of course, will play the young American who finishes something he started, and Miss Dorothy Davenport, following her great success with Lou-Tellegen in "The Explorer" and in other plays, will appear as Fedora, the lovely heroine.

"Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo" will be among the Lasky releases on the next quarter of the Paramount Program.

DRESNER GETS ASSOCIATED.

A. Dresner, general manager of the Kriterion Film Service, of Indianapolis, Ind., has been spending the last two weeks among the New York exchanges and various exhibitors' headquarters, getting a line on the Associated Program, and after thorough investigation he has come to the conclusion that the Associated Service is not a promise, but a business run on a business basis by business men. He therefore contracted for the states of Indiana and Kentucky. To have a man of Mr. Dresner's film experience pass on the Associated Service is something to be proud of, and which the Associated Service well deserves.

Mr. Dresner is a pioneer in this business, having started with Lubin about twelve years ago. He has managed the General Film in Cincinnati and Universal Film in Washington, and has also controlled a vast number of theaters throughout the middle western states.

"THE AMBITION OF MARK TRUITT" (World).

World Film Corporation is to produce "The Ambition of Mark Truitt" in feature film form. Henry Russell Miller is the author of the book, which has a phenomenal success with the reading public. "The Man Higher Up" was also written by Mr. Miller. Robert Warwick will play the leading role in "The Ambition of Mark Truitt."

"THE COME-BACK OF PERCY" (Selig).

"The Come Back of Percy," third in the Selig rural comedy series, "Chronicles of Bloom Center," was written and directed by Marshal Neilan, and will be adjudged one of the best productions in the series of laugh-provoking Selig comedies. Percy Pinkham, Constable Plum, Druggist Phil Pickle, Postmaster Ira Pash, Chubby Green and Johnny West all contribute.

One fine day a fashionably dressed stranger arrives in Bloom Center. He encounters Chubby Green, and without further ceremony Chubby receives a punch on the jaw. The stranger then seeks out other Bloom Centerites and the same violent proceedings are continued. Constable Plum is appealed to by the victims, and he goes on the trail of the stranger, who, seemingly, the moment he ascertains the name of an inhabitant, proceeds to assault him in a most violent manner. Confronted by Constable Plum, the stranger tells a story.

He recalls the time that he was an urchin in Bloom Center. He says he distinctly remembers that on nocturnal expeditions to melon patches, during visits to the swimming hole and elsewhere, that he was made the "goat" by the other Bloom Center boys. He says that when he left the village with his parents he vowed to return some day and get satisfaction. Then it is he hands his business card to Constable Plum, which reads: "Percy Pinkham, Champion Lightweight Pugilist." He is then recognized as the little undersized boy who many years ago had been made the butt for all mischief perpetrated by Bloom Center boys.

Scene from "The Come-Back of Percy" (Selig).

There is not a dull moment in this two-part comedy and the real human nature shown will appeal to thousands who were themselves boys living in small towns.

"NOT GUILTY" (Equitable).

When a man in a moment of weakness runs away from something he should have faced, and later finds himself in prison with a sentence of death hanging over him, his wife dead from the shock of the occurrence, and nothing between himself and death but the prayerful insistence of his devoted mother to the governer that he is innocent of the crime for which he is to be killed, there is taught a powerful moral lesson. But when his sentence is commuted, and twenty years later the man who struck the fatal blow confesses his crime and his victim is released, there is presented a still more powerful lesson of the awful responsibility resting on those who condemn a man to death on uncorroborated testimony, unsupported by evidence.

Scene from "Not Guilty" (Equitable).

These points, as well as some others of equal strength, are brought out in "Not Guilty," a forthcoming five part production by Triumph, for the Equitable program, in which that sterling actor Cyril Scott makes his first appearance before the camera in the part of Edward Andrews, the long suffering hero. Joseph A. Golden, who directed the production, utilized Sing Sing prison, the Governor's office in the State mansion, at Albany, and the Governor's official room in the State Capitol, as locations for some of the scenes, and in the room where his mother pleads for his life and wins it, a similar plea for a real murderer had been turned down only an hour or two before the screen picture was taken. The producers have a letter signed by an official of the grim, gray pile on the banks of the Hudson at Ossining, certifying that the prison scenes in the play were actually taken within its confines.

KALEM RECOMMENDS "THE MODEL'S ADVENTURE."

The three-part Kalem release for November 22, featuring Paul Gilmore, will be issued under the title of "The Model's Adventure," instead of "A Woman's Wiles," as formerly announced. Kalem recommends this subject as a powerful drama dealing with the Latin Quarter, one of the most interesting phases of Parisian life.

Mr. Gilmore as Jack Addison, an American sculptor, is ably supported by an all star cast. The winsome sweetness of Alma Ruben as Lucile Bergere, a Parisian model, wins the sympathy immediately. Ethel Fleming as Yvonne Nodier, the pampered society girl, who, for the first time, is denied something she desires, and Arthur Templeton as Philo McCullough, an American artist, deserve special mention for their artistic performances. During the action of the picture a well known Western sculptor actually constructed a replica of Miss Reuben in modeler's wax.

EAGLE FILM TO PRODUCE COMEDY.

That is the plan of William J. Dunn, general manager and director of the Eagle Film Manufacturing & Producing Company, 109 North Dearborn street, Chicago. Furthermore, he has completed arrangements for an immediate start on the long task he has set for himself and on Monday morning, November the first, will call together for the first time the company which will make the first series of forty comedies.

"The Adventures of Duffy" will be the title of the series, which will have to do with the comedy mishaps of a detective of the correspondence school brand. The series will carry him through various parts of the country and the possibilities for comedy with such a character are readily seen. The scenarios are all from the mind of Rex Adams, and represent, in the opinion of Mr. Dunn, the best work that photoplaywright has done. The first release will bear the title, "Duffy Makes His Bow."

All of the filming will be done in Chicago for the first ten reels of the series. By that time it is hoped the new Eagle Studio, near Jacksonville, Fla., will be ready for the occupation of the players.

"DOES ADVERTISING PAY?" (Gaumont).

The Gaumont company is to be congratulated upon securing such well-known comedians as Tom Waters and his wife, Mrs. May Wallace Waters, for "Does Advertising Pay?" Tom Waters is known all over America for his popular pianologues in vaudeville and for his numerous light opera successes. His wife is also a favorite, having appeared as co-star with him at the head of their own vaudeville troupe.

"Does Advertising Pay?" also has another remarkable member of its cast. This is "Stuffy" Davis, the press agent who kept Barnum and Bailey in the limelight for several seasons and also has been publicity promoter for Luna Park, Coney Island's greatest amusement center. There is a character in this laughable comedy called "Stuffy," a press agent. The usual Gaumont enterprise secured the Broadway original to appear in this Casino Star comedy on the Mutual program.

"A MODERN CAMILLE" (World).

This forthcoming World Film feature directed by Albert Capellani, is, of course, based upon Alex Dumas' famous play of the same name. It was known both in London and New York at the same time as "The Lady of the Camelias" and was popular under that title.

"BELLA DONNA" COMPLETED FOR FAMOUS PLAYERS.

The adaptation of Robert Hichens' celebrated novel and play, "Bella Donna," with Pauline Frederick in the title role, has been completed by the Famous Players Film company under the joint direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford. It was in this familiar role that Mme. Alla Nazimova won her first great American triumph, far eclipsing the reputation she had gained in her Ibsen roles.

The story of the novel, which ranked among the "best sellers" at the time of its publication, has been strictly adhered to, but the more sensational points of the story have been softened in order to avoid offending even the most conservative tastes.

"Bella Donna" marks Pauline Frederick's fourth motion picture appearance, as she has already been starred in "The Eternal City," "Sold," and "Zaza," in all of which she appeared under the joint direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford.

For the purpose of obtaining the famous desert scenes in the description of which Hichens displayed some of his most wonderful artistry, Messrs. Porter and Ford took a company of players to Florida, the outbreak of the war having rendered impossible the original plan of the producers to stage the play in Egypt. The sandy wastes of Florida, however, have made an admirable substitute for the African backgrounds.

In support of Miss Frederick there appear Thomas Holding, who already distinguished himself by his excellent work opposite the star in her previous screen subject; Julian L'Estrange, who has been seen before in the same star's company. Eugene Ormonde, George Majeroni and Edmund Shalet complete the list of principals.

Scene from "Bella Donna" (Famous Players).

Cyril Maude Production

Last Scene of "The Antique Dealer" Completed by Director Knoles Now in Premo Assembly Room.

OCTOBER 25 witnessed the taking of the last scene in the sumptuous production of "The Antique Dealer," which is the vehicle starring Cyril Maude and a supporting company of stars. Simultaneously with this, Mr. Maude in "Grumpy" started on his countrywide tour, routing America's highest class and highest priced theaters.

Not only in the building of the play which was made to fit Cyril Maude's particular talents, but in every detail Director Harley Knoles has worked his schedule with clocklike precision.

Cyril Maude.

The Premo Feature Film corporation has at no time stinted in any quarter where results depended on getting the right material. Not only is Cyril Maude paid $200 an hour for his time in the studio but a payroll such as has probably scarcely been equaled in a motion picture feature before had to be met.

With every member of the cast supporting Mr. Maude—a star—witness: Lois Meredith, Montague Love, Margot Williams, Lionel Belmore, Walter Craven, Mrs. Cooper Cliff, Will T. Carlton, Henry Carvill. The cast of "The Antique Dealer" reached the $50,000 mark with the end of the scene and there is still as can well be realized considerable to be done before it is ready for the screen. This is the second of the Premo releases.

MUTUAL ADOPTING NOVELS AND PLAYS.

Many pictures from books and stories by well known writers are included in the Mutual Film Corporation's new program. These productions appear in addition to the output of the scenario writing staffs.

"The Other Side of the Door," a novel written by Lucia Chamberlain, and published in 1907 by the Bobbs-Merrill company, has been purchased by S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film corporation, and is being produced at the studios at Santa Barbara, Cal.

"The Seventh Noon," a Mutual Masterpicture made from the book of that name, written by Frederick Orin Bartlett, and published in 1910, is a triumph of direction and acting.

A third Mutual release of unusual quality is "His Wife," a Mutual Masterpicture of the wild life of the Irish coast, which was founded on the popular story of Charlotte Monica Braeme's entitled "My Poor Wife," which has already been released.

"The End of the Road," an American release, is founded on the play by H. Grattan Donnelly, and was first known as "Carolina."

"A BIT OF LACE" (Essanay).

This is a charming romance in three acts, taken from the play by H. S. Sheldon. The setting is exceptionally artistic and the scenery and photographic work is of high merit. Edna Mayo, Essanay leading woman, takes the role of the wife of a scoundrelly clerk. She despises him but battles loyally to be a dutiful wife. Although she is loved by another man, she successfully conceals the fact that she cares for him. Her loyalty to her husband goes so far that she even attempts to purloin a letter incriminating him, and is caught through a [illegible] of lace catching in a door when she is trying to escape. The full depth of her husband's infamy finally is revealed to her and she gives him up. Miss Mayo brings out the conflict of the woman between love and loyalty with a nice discrimination. Darwin Karr plays the leading masculine role, that of a western mine owner, with his characteristic dash and brilliancy. Sydney Ainsworth, as the heavy, succeeds in making everyone hate him as the scoundrelly husband.

Agricultural College Wants Fifty Screens

Oklahoma State University to Equip Agricultural Lecturers With Picture Outfits.

An interesting development in the commercial end of the motion picture business was recorded last week when the Minusa Cine Products company received an inquiry from the University of Oklahoma as to the cost and specifications of fifty small sized screens to be used by the student lecturers on agricultural subjects in their "extension" courses. The inquiry came in through the Victor Animatograph company, of Davenport, Iowa, who handle Minusa screens exclusively. The Victor company was also the recipient of an order for fifty projectors.

During certain seasons of the year the University sends out members of its senior class, also professors and instructors, to various localities where for three or four days an "institute" is held to which all of the inhabitants of the neighborhood are invited. Short courses on various subjects are given and the University is now equipping each of these extension colleges with a moving picture outfit as an aid to the lecturers.

The officials of the college wanted the advice of E. R. Anderson, the maker of the first gold fiber screen, and now the manufacturer of the famous Minusa Gold Fiber, as to the size of screen that ought to be used as well as to the quality.

There is no doubt as to the practicability of the University's plan and success here would seem to open up a broad, new avenue to the great commercial future of the moving picture.

MARGOT WILLIAMS IN MINA.

Margot Williams is capering for MinA in its release of Nov. 11, "An Eye Too Many."

Born in Louisville, Ky., Miss Williams romped through her childhood and school days there. Possessing a hankering for the footlights, Miss Williams left Louisville for New York and danced through her first season in the ballet of "Ben Hur." After a vaudeville engagement George V. Hobart saw her and realized her worth. This resulted in the success that Miss Williams secured as Frailty in "Experience."

CHAPLIN IN NEW ROLE.

Charles Chaplin of the worn out shoes and old clothes appears in an entirely new role in the latest Essanay-Chaplin comedy, "A Night in the Show," which soon is to be released.

In this play Mr. Chaplin doffs his old costume and appears in dress suit and silk hat. But even in this disguise it is impossible not to recognize the Chaplin walk, the Chaplin capers and the inimitable Chaplin mannerisms. He is Charles Chaplin, whether in the garb of a hobo or a man of society.

This comedy proves conclusively that it is not Charles Chaplin's make-up, funny as that has been considered, that endears Chaplin to the photoplay public. His success lies deeper than that; it is personality, an individuality that always is found no matter in what garb he appears.

And Chaplin loses none of his funniness; in fact critics who have watched him at work on his newest piece declare that he is funnier than ever, although a new Chaplin in a new role. His versatility is surprising and leads one to wonder "what next?" in his line of antics.

V-L-S-E SCHEDULE.

"Big Four's" Releases for Balance of Year Exceptionally Strong.

WITH two powerful war plays, already attracting widespread attention, Vitagraph's "The Battle Cry of Peace," and Lubin's "The Rights of Man," the producing companies making up the V-L-S-E are offering during the next quarter three other dramas of strife which are said to be unusually strong in their drawing qualities.

The first of these, an Essanay extra, is called "The Crimson Wing." It differs from its contemporary productions in that the heart interest of the present war is emphasized, rather than some sociological phase of it. The first review of this production had probably the wealthiest audience ever assembled at an entertainment, other than that of the opera, the combined capital of the spectators aggregating some $200,000,000. This is due to the fact that many of the sets and accessories used in the production of the feature were supplied by the elite of Chicago.

Following this war play, Lubin will release through the V-L-S-E a drama of preparedness against war called "The Nation's Peril." This is scheduled to appear November 22d. It will probably be in five reels, featuring Ormi Hawley and Earl Metcalfe. The entire Atlantic Squadron, including battleships, torpedo boats, submarines, destroyers and a marine corps were utilized in making this picture. It was directed by George W. Terwilliger.

Selig is the remaining manufacturer of the Big Four to capitalize upon the public's interest in the question of international argument. Its release scheduled for December 13 will be a Red Seal play entitled "I'm Glad My Boy Grew Up To Be a Soldier." As is apparent it is an answer to the popular song. "I Didn't Raise My Boy To Be a Soldier." The production will probably be in five reels. Harry Mestayer, the notable stage star, will enact the leading role. He will be supported by Miss Eugenie Besserer and an all-star cast. Gilson Willets is the author of the drama and Mr. Frank Beals the producer.

"The Raven" is to be released November 8 by Essanay, through the V-L-S-E, with Henry B. Walthall as Edgar Allen Poe. Essanay will follow this feature with a five part drama, to be released December 6, called "The Alster Case," featuring Bryant Washburn and Ruth Stonehouse. On December 20th, "A Daughter of the City," in five parts, showing E. H. Calvert and Marguerite Clayton, will be released. Mr. Walthall again makes his return on January 3d, with Edna Mayo, in a six part drama from the Broadway success "The Misleading Lady."

Selig's contribution to the V-L-S-E program for November will be an idyllic production of Charles Major's story, "Sweet Alyssum," in which Tyrone Power and Miss Kathlyn Williams will be starred.

The next Lubin release after that of "The Nation's Peril" will be on December 6th, when the story of sea-life captioned "The Man's Making" will be released. This was produced by Jack Pratt, with Richard Buhler in the leading role, Rosetta Brice supporting. It is in five parts. On December 20th this company will show Edgar Lewis's first production for the Lubin Company, dramatized from Henry Vaughn Moody's "The Great Divide." It was produced at the Grand Canyon, Arizona, with Ethel Clayton and House Peters. Others of the cast are Mary Moore, Warner P. Richmond and Hayden Stevenson. This also is in five parts.

In January Raymond Hitchcock will be seen in a Lubin comedy in five reels, probably, called "The Wonderful Wager," based on the story of "The Ford Flivver," written by George V. Hobart, and adapted for the screen by Mark Swan, In this picture, the entire Washburn Circus will be used.

Three V-L-S-E releases are announced for November by the Vitagraph Company. "The Turn of the Road," a five-part feature produced by Tefft Johnson, in which Virginia Pearson, Joseph Kilgour, Bobby Connelly, Naomi Childers and Robert Gaillard, will be seen in the portrayal of the principal roles, is the first released, November 1st.

A Cyrus Townsend Brady story "Heights of Hazard," that contains every known thrill, will add additional interest to the month's program. It will be released November 15th. "Heights of Hazard" is also a five part feature and will introduce Charles Richman, Eleanor Woodruff and Charles Kent in the leading characterizations.

Robert Edeson, Fay Wallace, Lillian Burns, Charles Eldridge, John T. Kelly and a special cast of Vitagraph players will be seen in "The Cave Man," on November 29th, produced under the direction of Theodore Marston.

On December 13th, there will be released "A Price for Folly," one of the strongest dramas on the Vitagraph program. It was written by George P. Dillenbeck, and produced in five parts by George D. Baker, with Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno, Harry Morey, Charles Kent, Louise Beaudet, Ethel Corcoran and Arthur Cozine.

Frank Daniels, the inimitable King of Comedy, whose first Vitagraph release "Crooky," established him as a screen comedian in a class by himself, will round out the year's Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Features, on December 27th, in "What Happened to Father," written especially for him by Mary Roberts Rinehart.

GETTING A SCENE ON FIFTH AVENUE.

Fifth avenue, New York, on a Sunday noon recently, had one lively spot. Harry A. Pollard, one of the Equitable directors, was busy getting some scenes for "The Dragon" in which Margarita Fischer is the star, and when the little woman, carefully keeping inside the camera lines, was looking into the windows of a big department store and comparing the articles in the window with a list she carried of things she wanted, finding what she was after and darting into the store, she was closely watched by an interested throng, even automobiles stopping in the street, and a bus hauling up near the curb so that the passengers as well as the driver could watch the proceedings.

A touch of realism was added to the affair by one man with a big heart who saw a blind beggar (also inside the camera lines) to whom the star was to give some money. He broke through the crowd, and without thinking that the beggar might not be in real need dropped a dime into his little tin cup, and walked off down the street. The dime is to be mounted on a piece of red velvet and placed in a frame by the "beggar" as a memento of the occasion and a reminder that there is still charity left in the big city.

Another incident which interested the crowd was the attempt on the part of a big, husky Irishman to stop a gunman who had knocked down a bank messenger and was making his "getaway." The robber pushed the man outside the lines and then explained, the result being "Begorra, that was good. The drinks is on me, come and have one."

JOHN DALY MURPHY IN GAUMONT COMEDY.

"A Tangle in Hearts" is the Casino Star comedy Director Richard Garrick is putting on at the Flushing studios of the Gaumont company. The star is that favorite comedian, John Daly Murphy. He appears in a dress suit.

COMPLETES "THE NEW ADAM AND EVE."

Director Garrick of the Gaumont Company has just completed "The New Adam and Eve," a Rialto Star Feature, in which Miss Grace Valentine had the lead. Miss Valentine was chosen because of her beautiful hair as well as for her histrionic ability. In the three-reel photodrama are thirty-three scenes with double exposures.

"THE LONEDALE OPERATOR" (Biograph).

Here is another Biograph subject that exhibitors will recall without much difficulty, and which has been reissued by popular request. Although originally released in 1911, it is apparently as fresh in the minds of the older exhibitors today as it was at that time; and there is no reason why this one-reel railroad story, with its suspense and thrills, should not hold the audience as well today as it did then.

Blanche Sweet, as the operator's daughter, calls at the railroad station where her father is ill and persuades him to go home for a rest. Before he leaves the station he offers her a revolver for her protection which she refuses, remarking that nothing will happen to her. She is notified of a shipment of money for the payroll of the Lonedale Mining company which she is to place in the express safe over night. On the same train with the money shipment two tramps arrive and set out to rob the station. The operator telegraphs to the junction for help and a special engine is dispatched with a posse in search of the robbers. In the meantime the operator holds the robbers, who have not broken into the office, with what they thought was a revolver. In record time the special arrives and the robbers are covered by the engineer and fireman. Before they are lead away the operator shows them the wrench with which, to their surprise, she held them off until help came.

Blanche Sweet, Wilfred Lucas, Francis Grandin, Eddie Dillon, George Nicholls, Joseph Graybell and Dell Henderson complete the cast directed by D. W. Griffith. It is released Friday, November 19, on the General program.

ARNOLD DALY PLEASED WITH "THE MENACE OF THE MUTE."

As Arnold Daly looked at the finished print of "The Menace of the Mute," his second Gold Rooster Play, he remarked that the picture made him think of the advertising slogan used in connection with a certain product—"more than a little better." "This picture," he said, "is a distinct advance on my first, 'An Affair of Three Nations.' If I can continue to improve that way with each picture I shall be well pleased." "The Menace of the Mute" has a strong cast, including besides Mr. Daly, Sheldon Lewis, Louise Rutter, Charles Laite, Martin Sabine, and Wm. Harrigan. It will be released November 5th.

AN EYE TOO MANY (MinA).

"An Eye Too Many," the MinA release of Nov. 11 is another comedy with a plot. It has been the aim of MinA comedies to make every story have a logical action, and this last is no exception.

Margot Williams, well known for her excellent work in the part of Frailty in "Experience," takes the role of the young girl in this picture, and is said to play the part admirably.

SAYS TERRISS PICTURES FAVORABLY RECEIVED.

The Picture Playhouse Film Co., Inc., which has long given promise of becoming an important factor in the business of distributing features to renters throughout the country, has been unusually active during the season which is just getting under way. The company has been averaging one release a week for some time and there is every indication that there will be little if any let-up for some time to come.

Although the company is not depending upon any one producing organization, most of the pictures released this season have been the creations of Tom Terriss, well known legitimate actor, and his associates in the Terriss Feature Film Co. "The Pearl of the Antilles" and "The Flame of Passion," two of the biggest Terriss features, were made in Jamaica, West Indies, a few months ago. "Papa's Wife," "Love and War" and "The Blackmailers" are comedies which have been made in the New York City studios of the Terriss company. "A Woman of the World," the latest of the Picture Playhouse releases, which has just been prepared for the market, is also a Terriss dramatic subject. Like the comedies, it was made in New York City.

M. D. Metcalfe, president of the Picture Playhouse Company, says that the new releases have been received with great favor throughout the country and that the business of the various branch offices of the company in ten of the most important film cities of the country has been showing a healthy increase during the past few weeks.

NOTES OF THE TRADE

A REAL shipwreck in a real storm is the latest bit of realism procured by Director Charles Bartlett in his latest picture of Alaska entitled "A Key to the Past," an American (Mutual) release of the near future. Following the shipwreck, the cabin in which the rescued party takes refuge is struck by lightning. Through it all, Winnifred Greenwood, Ed. Coxen, Nan Christy and Walter Spencer play their parts like stoics.

David Horsley has appointed Bert Von Klein as business manager of his studios in Los Angeles. Mr. Von Klein has been with Mr. Horsley since July as assistant to Director Frank E. When Mr. Millarde was placed at the head of his own company, Miss Hollister was added to this company at the new director's special request.

Rollin S. Sturgeon, managing director of the Western Vitagraph Company, announces his next feature will be from the pen of James Oliver Curwood and entitled "God's Country and the Woman." To get the backgrounds necessary for the topographical realism, he will take a company to Alaska. A pack of fifty wolf dogs will be a prominent feature in a number of the most exciting scenes. "God's Country and the Woman" will, when completed, be a Blue Ribbon Feature in five parts.

* * *

Otto Nelson, playing characters for the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company Associated Program who began his career as an actor at the age of fourteen in a dramatic company in Sweden, has since been trooping in different countries of Europe and in the United States. He has had several years' experience in the pictures, his last engagement being with the American Film Company, distinguishing himself in "The Divine Decree," a picture produced by Henry Otto. New House in Bucksport

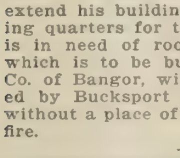
Cashier H. O. Henry of First National Bank of Bucksport Preparing to Build Handsome Picture Theater in His Town—Site Is Where Emery Hall, Recently Burned, Stood—Theater Needed.

By John P. Flannagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CASHIER H. O. Hussey, of the First National Bank of Bucksport, is to erect a new theater building in Bucksport which will be the first structure to be built in that town since the $75,000 fire which devastated an entire block recently. It will be a handsome building, of two stories on the front elevation, with a flat roof, and will be situated on Main street, on the site of Emery Hall, which was destroyed in the fire.

The entrance to the theater and the auditorium itself will be on the ground floor and it will be a spacious structure, the outside dimensions being about 77 by 100 feet. It is said that later Mr. Hussey will extend his building operations by providing quarters for the Masonic body, which is in need of rooms. The new theater, which is to be built by the Otto Nelson Co. of Bangor, will be greatly appreciated by Bucksport people, who have been without a place of entertainment since the fire.

NEW MANAGER OF PARK AT BANGOR.



A. P. Bibber.

A. P. Bibber, who has just assumed the management of the Park and Bijou theaters at Bangor, Me., succeeding Stephen Bogrett, has the distinction of having conducted what was either the second or the third moving picture house in the State of Maine, and that was the Opera house at Augusta. The Nickel theater at Lewiston is said to have been the first and either Mr. Bibber's house in Augusta or a house in Portland was second.

Mr. Bibber is a native of Lewiston and has been a theatrical man for 35 years. He has occupied every position in the theater except playing in the orchestra, and has even played parts behind the footlights. He has been manager for several stock companies, including the Chas. K. Harris Company and the Elmer Stock Company. He was manager of Music Hall, Lewiston, for four and a half years and made a splendid record while there. Mr. Bibber is a man of most congenial ways and those who have met him in Bangor feel that he will make good here.

RUMFORD'S NEW THEATER.

It is rumored that Rumford, Me., is to have a magnificent new theater, which will cost around $40,000. It will be constructed of brick and all the equipment and furnishings will be elaborate and up-to-date. The seating capacity will be large. Manager Walters of the Cheney opera house has interested a number of prominent business men with capital in the project and a stock company is being formed. Ground will probably be broken in the spring and the theater will be ready for occupancy in the fall. Mr. Walters was in New York last week on business connected with this proposed theater.

"NATION" FILM DRAWS EXHIBITORS TO BANGOR.

More road men were in Bangor this week than at any other time for months. They came here to meet the exhibitors who flocked from all over this part of the state to get a look at "The Birth of a Nation," thinking perhaps that they may secure it for their theaters at some time in the future. "The Birth of a Nation" was presented at the Bijou to crowded houses all the week, and although Bangor people have never before paid more than 50 cents to see a moving picture, they readily parted with 75 cents to $1.50 to see this marvelous film spectacle.

KEITH NOT INTERESTED IN OLD TOWN'S NEW THEATER.

For some reason not given out, the Old Town Amusement Co. and the Keith interests have been printing statements to the newspapers, or rather advertisements, stating that neither is connected with the other. The Old Town Amusement Co. asserts that reports have been circulated that the Keith interests and the United Booking Offices are interested in the present New Central theater and the new theater now being constructed in the Masonic building, Old Town, Me., and this method is taken of denying the statement. The leases of both theaters are controlled by the Old Town Amusement Co. and every share of stock in the company is owned by residents of Old Town. This company and no one else will continue to retain and maintain sole management.

Business Notes—Educational Travel Films—Personals.

S. Schultz, of Boston, representing the Alliance Film Corporation, was in Bangor this week on his return to Boston, after a most successful trip through eastern and northern Maine. He reports that competition in selling films is getting keener and keener all the time, but that good stuff can always find a market. Even in towns of from 700 to 1,000 population, exhibitors are insistent that they shall have the very best and the latest on the market. Among the theaters that have recently contracted for Alliance service are: Music Hall, Lewiston, Stephen Bogrett, manager, for Mondays and Tuesdays; Bijou theater, Pittsfield; New Central, Old Town; Bijou, Ellsworth; Star, Skowhegan; Pastime, Madison; Pastime, Norridgewock; Star, Bar Harbor.

Forty-five hundred teachers of Maine were in Bangor this week to attend the Maine Teachers' convention, and while here the Park theater featured the Paramount travel pictures, advertising them as an educational attraction that should not be missed. The Park was liberally patronized.

D. Roy Craig, one of the old time picture men of Maine, has leased the Grand, at Dexter, and is fixing same up prior to the opening, which will be one of the most auspicious held in the state for some time. Mr. Craig is using an equal split of Mutual and United films changed daily. The opening feature will be Ethel Grandin in "The Stolen Will," a United film.

FILMS AID HEALTH CAMPAIGN.

Moving pictures will play a proment part in a state wide campaign to improve the health of Massachusetts residents about to be inaugurated by Dr. Allan J. McLaughlin, State Commissioner of Health. Dr. McLaughlin has long recognized the value of the silent drama from an educational standpoint and the far-reaching effect of the film in cases where ordinary methods of promoting the welfare of the state would prove unavailing.

Several films, each of which is a complete story with a health moral, have been prepared. Lecturers will interpret each film as it is exhibited.

Dr. McLaughlin plans to give these lectures and exhibitions in every city and town in the state. A large number of cities have already applied for the films.

It is planned to use a large number of light automobile trucks and deliver and collect films within a certain radius of the city of Boston. BALTIMORE NEWS LETTER.

Reasons for Proposed Theater Permit Ordinance.

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS of Baltimore are very much interested in the proposed ordinance noted last week of the City Council which will void ordinances issued for the erection of motion picture theaters when the projectors fail to take advantage of the privilege thus granted them within a period of six months. It seems that real estate owners and operators have been in the habit of securing such permits on desirable property and when a man actually desires to build a theater he finds the property in the neighborhood tied up and that he must pay far more than he would if the permit had not previously been granted. In reality, this gives a false value to the property under consideration. In the past, a large number of ordinances have been adopted granting firms and individuals the right to open motion picture theaters, but many of these have never been taken advantage of.

There is also before the City Council an ordinance providing for the mapping out of the city in sections wherein theaters may and may not be established. These two subjects, as well as that which is to grant permits to one or two companies to erect theaters in certain sections, are keeping the members of both branches considerably stirred up. The meetings of the council are devolving themselves into motion picture debates.

At its meeting last week the ordinance authorizing the Linden Amusement company to establish a motion picture theater at 845 and 847 West North avenue was favorably reported to the Second Branch of the City Council by Police and Jail Committee. An ordinance granting this same company the right to open a moving picture theater at 902 and 904 South Linwood avenue was introduced in the First Branch and sent to the Committee on Police and Jail.

The Committee on Police and Jail was divided on the ordinance authorizing the Howard Amusement company to establish a motion picture theater at 404 and 406 North Howard street.

Marion S. Pearce Goes South.

Rumor Says Triangle Will Open the Belmont.

It is commonly rumored throughout the industry in this vicinity that the Triangle Film is about to open the Belmont theater, Fifty-second and Market streets, formerly conducted by Samuel Wheeler. It is claimed that Mr. Jacobs of the Imperial will manage the theater for the Triangle company and that he will give up his other interests. However, no confirmation of these rumors can be obtained, both parties neither affirming or denying the statements.

Many Parades Hurt Business.

Exhibitors of Philadelphia are troubled by the number of parades taking place in this vicinity. Last week witnessed several large processions, that of the Women's suffrage interests and also that of the Stoneman Club, both of which utterly demoralized business upon the evenings of their having taken place. It is a remarkable fact that the moving picture exhibitors should suffer in this manner from two monstrous parades in one week.

New Amusement Company in Trenton.

"Melodramatic Movies" is the title of the film recently exhibited at the Arcadia theater, 16th and Crescent streets. The picture is a sure enough thriller, made under the auspices and direction of the Charlotte Cushman Club, which numbers among its members, in addition to its president, Mrs. Otis Skinner, some of the most prominent women of the city. That the picture was a success is shown by the large audiences which attended its exhibition.

Philadelphia Business Notes.

Louis L. Swaab announces that he has obtained the agency for the Newman ticket chopper, something new in the way of economizing, and invites the exhibitors to visit his establishment, 1327 Vine street, and give the new machine the once over.

Federal Censorship

President Harry Crandall of District of Columbia League Sends Through Moving Picture World Warning to Picture Men Over the Country—Must Get Busy—See Your Congressman Before He Leaves for Washington.

By Clarence L. Lonz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IT IS pretty generally believed in Washington that an effort will be made soon after Congress convenes the first Monday in December to reopen the fight for motion picture censorship. This subject has been one of considerable discussion among the exhibitors in Washington, but in a large measure they feel themselves helpless by reason of the fact that they are not represented in Congress and it is a very difficult matter for residents of the District of Columbia to bring about any favorable legislation or to make their influence felt in combatting proposed laws detrimental to their interests. They must rely entirely upon their fellow exhibitors in the states.

It's Up to National League.

In an interview with the correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, Harry M. Crandall, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia, declared that the National League should lose no time in preparing its side of the story. "The exhibitors," he said, "should co-operate with one another more closely and each should feel that the matter of censorship is something that will vitally affect his interests. What is everybody's business is generally nobody's business and thus it is that each person should take it up as a personal proposition. Unless every exhibitor in the country will combine with his neighbor and form a solid mass representing the industry, I am very much afraid that motion picture censorship will be thrust upon us. It looks to me as though Mr. Crafts is about the only person who is really active in the endeavor to secure this very undesirable legislation and surely the thousands of exhibitors of the country should be able to defeat his activities. The burden of proof, however, will rest upon us, therefore, we must present a solid front and not try to go before Congress unprepared.

Good Graft in Censorship.

"Personally," continued Mr. Crandall, "I would rather welcome a national board of censors as a government institution if the towns and villages, to say nothing of the cities, would be content to accept the judgment of the members of such a board as their own. But with the possibility of securing additional revenue so easily, I doubt very much if the officials of such places would be willing to waive their rights to tax exhibitors or manufacturers for the privilege of being told what they can and what they cannot exhibit. Further, I am sure that if the National Congress enacts the legislation so badly desired by Mr. Crafts, it will serve rather to encourage even the little villages where there are but one or two theaters to get on the band wagon and obtain their share of what is to me, graft, pure and simple.

Get at Representatives Still at Home.

"I do hope that the exhibitors will take time by the forelock and get busy. In many of the districts the members of Congress have not yet left for Washington. This offers a golden opportunity for the exhibitors to get in touch with them and make known their views. But I wonder how many have done this, or who will do so after they have seen the suggestion in the columns of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

"Another thing in this connection must be borne in mind, and that is that a majority of the members of the Committee on Education of the House of Representatives, before which the matter of censorship comes, are favorable to the proposed legislation."

SALUTED FLAG—WAS PUT OUT.

The local courts have refused to extend protection to those who from patriotism stand in a theater during the rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner" if the management of such theater objects to demonstrations of this nature. Such was the decision of Justice Gould, in Circuit Court No. 1, while hearing the case of one Frank Wahl, who said he had been a member of the National Guard, against the Washington Theater company for $10,000 damages for forcible ejection from the theater.

The ruling was based on a New Jersey case and on decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, holding that a theater company through its manager or other person in authority has the right to revoke the license given by the ticket sold to a patron at any time and remove him from the theater, provided only reasonable force is used, and Justice Gould, in rendering the ruling, expressed himself as not in sympathy with the law, but only legislation can change it, he said. He declined to submit the case to a jury, and directed a verdict for the defendant.

According to the statement of Mr. Wahl, he stood as had been his custom when "The Star Spangled Banner" was played, out of respect to the flag, and refused to sit down when other patrons of the theater called upon him to do so. Counsel for the defense asserted that the plaintiff was creating a disturbance, was boisterous and that he refused to comply when asked to be seated by the special officer and ushers.

NEW EIGHTEENTH STREET AUDITORIUM.

Plans have just been completed by Reginald W. Geare, architect, for the erection of a handsome building at the southwest corner of the intersection of Eighteenth street and Columbia road, northwest, which is to contain an auditorium capable of accommodating 1,800 persons. The building is to have a frontage of 150 feet on Columbia road and 173 feet on Eighteenth street. It is to be of the Georgian style of architecture and three stories in height. The base is to be of limestone and the upper section of light brick.

The main entrance, which is to be on the Eighteenth street side, is to be quite elaborate in design, being ornamented with stone columns with carved pilasters above. Within the entrance there is to be a wide lobby with doorway leading into the auditorium and into a store which is to occupy the corner of the ground floor with frontage on both streets named. At the south end of the lobby will be a grand stairway of stone construction leading to the auditorium.

The auditorium is to have a unique ventilating system. Under each seat there is to be an opening in the floor through which warmed air will be forced in winter from a heating plant located in the basement. During the summer months cold air will be forced through these openings. The air is to be cooled by means of a refrigerating plant which will also be located in the basement.

The ceiling is to consist of a huge skylight, so arranged that it can be rolled to one side, leaving the entire top of the auditorium open. With this arrangement the auditorium will have all the desirable features of an open air theater during the summer months, and yet it can be covered at a moment's notice should there be a sudden shower. The auditorium is to be used for high class motion picture exhibitions, as well as for lectures and travelogues. It is to be artistically decorated, and the equipment will be modern in every particular.

Ten office rooms are to occupy the Eighteenth street side of the second floor, and on the third floor will be rooms designed for use as art and music studios.

A permit for the erection of the building has already been issued. George T. Smallwood and John A. I. Cassedy are behind the project. Contract for the erection of the building will soon be made, it is stated.

VIRGINIA NEWS LETTER.

Consolidation in Charlottesville.

AT a meeting held in Charlottesville on Monday, October 25, the stockholders of the Virginia and Victorian theaters in that place consolidated their interests and incorporated under the charter name of the United Amusement company, the officers being Major Thomas Peyton, president; A. S. Yancey, vice-president; Captain E. I. Johnson, treasurer; Mrs. A. S. Yancey, secretary, and J. W. Johnson, manager of the theaters. The charter authorizes a maximum capital of $15,000. Each of these houses is comparatively new and very well equipped. The Virginian has a seating capacity of 400, while the Victoria can accommodate 385. For the immediate future, the former will continue the showing of feature productions and will maintain a five-piece orchestra, charging a general admission of ten cents, while the Victoria will adopt the regular program with an admission charge of five cents. Charlottesville is a wide-awake Virginia city and it is rumored that this new corporation is contemplating the erection of a new and modern motion picture theater which will have a seating capacity approximating 1,200. It is said that a suitable site has already been selected and that ground will be broken for the construction of the new theater on the corner of one of the busiest thoroughfares in the city.

How Two Small Town Exhibitors Got Together.

It is only too often evident that where there are more motion picture theaters in a small town than the limited population can possibly support, a fight ensues between the respective proprietors for an existence which works to the detriment of the box office receipts. In the town of Culpepper, Va., which has a population of about 2,000 people, there are two theaters, the Eclipse and the Fairfax, each under excellent management. R. A. Tredway, who operates the former, and J. L. Fray, owner and operator of the latter, have always been good friends in a social way, but when it came down to business, the sporting instinct of both is aroused and consequently there was considerable excitement in town when each tried to outdo the other.

The fight between the two houses lasted for about a year and both lost money. Each had a four-piece orchestra to support and considerable of the box office receipts went to pay for film rentals amounting to more than is conducive to carrying on of a healthy business. Mr. Tredway then secured a lease to the Fairfax and later closed it down. This did not meet with Mr. Fray's approval and he personally reopened it. It was suggested that they get together on a scheme to settle their difficulties and the meeting of the two exhibitors resulted in an agreement under which the Fairfax is open for a week and then remains dark for a like period while the Eclipse is in operation. In alternating in this way, the exhibitors have things now going very smoothly.

The Eclipse is a downstairs house with a seating capacity of about 360, while the Fairfax, which also utilizes road shows occasionally, is located on the second floor of an adjoining building and has a seating capacity of 500. Both have adopted a general admission charge of ten cents but a much higher charge is made when it is felt by either that the picture has enough merit to warrant an advance. Messrs. Tredway and Fray are now operating their respective enterprises on a very firm basis and are doing that which the houses in many of the larger cities dare not do—charge a quarter and even thirty-five cents for photoplay production.

NEW AMBRIDGE HOUSE TO OPEN.

S. J. Goldstein, as manager, announces that the Regent theater, a handsome house in Ambridge, Pa., with a seating capacity of 600, will be opened to the public November 8. Nothing but high class feature pictures will be run.

Messrs. Vollmer & Huhn, of the Idle Hour, at 221 Diamond street, Pittsburgh, purchased a Wurlitzer Theater Orchestra, style U Duplex.

William A. White, of the Colonial theater in Beaver Falls, Pa., was a visitor in the Steel City last week and while here called on the W. F. Frederick Piano Company and purchased a Wurlitzer theater orchestra, style K, costing $4,500, to be installed in his theater.

The Carrick theater in Carrick, near Pittsburgh, Pa., is being remodeled and more seats installed. The capacity will be increased from 300 to 450.

Friedberg & Adler, owners of the Alhambra theater in East Liberty, Pittsburgh, Pa., are going to take out the new front which they put in during the past summer and which helped to entail an expenditure of $6,000 and put in a new one in its place. It is expected that this new addition will make it one of the most attractive in this section.

Al. W. Cross, manager of the Hudson Feature Film Company of Pittsburgh, Pa., announces that he will book at the close of its engagement "The German Side of the War," which is being shown this week at the Alvin theater in this city.

Candidate Wants Support

Pittsburgh Man Running for Seat in City Council Writes to Exhibitors to Assure Them He Is Not Antagonistic to Picture Business—Says He Is and Always Will Be Friend of Film Shows.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

THE following letter is a result of the Pittsburgh exhibitors co-operating in an effort to inquire into the views of the different candidates for city and county offices on the motion picture business, before they endorsed them:

To Motion Picture Exhibitors,
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Gentlemen: Since I have announced my candidacy for city council, I have been asked on several occasions as to my attitude toward the moving picture business. This question has suggested itself because some persons have made representations that during my term in council I had assumed an attitude antagonistic to the interests of the exhibitors. In this answer to all such questions I desire to say this:

I have always regarded the moving picture business as a legitimate one; entertaining and educational in its general character and entitled to the just consideration of every branch of our government, being, as it is, the poor man's theater.

I have never sought to do anything that would do an injustice to the business or discourage its legitimate development.

The misunderstanding as to my attitude is the result of my having voted against a general amusement, some of the provisions of which were not satisfactory to me, but which in no way effected the picture business so far as the objectionable features were concerned.

At the time that this matter was disposed of I appeared at the meeting of the two exhibitors' organizations, prepared to fully explain my position to the members assembled, but was denied the opportunity to do so at the suggestion of some men who for political reasons did not want the truth known. I am now, always was, and always expect to be a consistent friend of the poor man's theater and have never by word or action done anything effecting the business that I am not willing to justify in the presence of those interested who have an unprejudiced and open mind and who want to speak the truth and hear it spoken. You are at liberty to give this letter such circulation as in your judgment, circumstances warrant. Thanking you, I am,

Very truly yours,
(Signed) P. J. McARDLE.

Editor's Note.—This "poor man's theater" talk is tiresome cant.

POLICE MAY USE MOVING PICTURES OF CRIMINALS.

Moving pictures as a sure means of positively identifying criminals are contemplated for the city detective bureau of Pittsburgh, Pa., by Superintendent of Police W. N. Matthews, Acting Captain of Detectives Homer E. Crooks, and Detective Joseph Linden, Bertillion operative.

The present system of taking bust photographs, front and profile, of criminals, with their measurements and finger imprints, is intricate and unsatisfactory from the police viewpoint, although the measurements and finger prints are considered infallible for identification purposes.

The claim is made that motion pictures, thrown on a screen, are much more satisfactory, showing all of the peculiar characteristics, facial expressions and gaits of criminals. It is also the belief of the police that victims of robbers, highwaymen and pickpockets will much more readily identify a suspect when the prisoner is seen in action in the moving pictures.

The police say it frequently happens that a much-wanted criminal escapes justice because posed pictures fail as means of identification.

The plan Superintendent Matthews has under consideration, the expense of which will be included in his estimate for the 1916 budget, is to have a moving picture camera, to be operated by Detective Joseph Linden. An ideal place for a "walk around" on the roof of the public safety building is available. It will be enclosed with a heavy glass roof.

It is even possible that criminals confessing will be photographed for evidence. The police say that once adopted in other cities, with whom films will be exchanged at frequent intervals, the liberties of expert criminals will practically be a thing of the past, as it will be impossible for them to escape detection.

To Remodel Homestead Theater.

R. T. and H. W. Meyers, of the Palace theater in Homestead, near Pittsburgh, Pa., announces that arrangements are being made for remodeling and enlarging the house. When the repairs are completed this theater will have a seating capacity of 1,000. It now seats 515. This house was erected about two years ago by a corporation composed of Pittsburgh business men. Last July it was taken over by Henry Polk, who with his able managers have succeeded in making it a winner.

"Carmen" to Celebrate Theater's Birthday.

The Regent theater, East Liberty, Pittsburgh, Pa., one of the handsomest photoplay theaters in the country, owned by Messrs. Rowland & Clark, was one year old November 1, and the occasion was celebrated by the running of the Paramount's "Carmen" at 20 cents admission. This increase in price of admission will be permanent hereafter and the policy of the theater will be 10 cents in the afternoon and 20 cents in the evening.

During anniversary week a special musical program was arranged and 15,000 photos of Geraldine Farrar were given out as souvenirs. Prof. Charles Graninger, organist at the Sixth U. P. church, was engaged for the occasion and will hereafter be the organist at the Regent.

Grelle Exchange Moves.

The Grelle Feature Film company, which has been located at 212 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., has moved to Room No. 1, second floor, at 121 Fourth avenue. This firm has been obliged to make this move in order to secure more room and more suitable quarters to take care of a steadily growing business. Mr. Grelle announces that he has purchased "Les Miserables," the nine-reel film based on Victor Hugo's story, and that he is booking it nearly solid.

Pretty Celebration at the Belmar.

With the interior beautifully decorated with autumn leaves, foliage and potted plants that made a pretty appearance, the Belmar theater, in Homewood, one of the Messrs. Rowland & Clark's chain of theaters, celebrated its first anniversary last week.

Sunday Cases Appealed

Chattanooga Exhibitors Carry Their Case to Supreme Court at Knoxville—Will Be Heard Before the Court's Adjournment—No Sabbath Shows Now, Pending New Hearing as Adverse Decision Bars Them.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NO time has been lost by the Chattanooga moving picture men in rushing the Sunday closing test case to the Supreme Court. A transcript of the criminal hearing by which several moving picture exhibitors were recently convicted under the nuisance law for operating on Sunday has been prepared, and has been rushed to the Supreme Court, sitting at Knoxville, so that action may be had on the matter at once in order to have a hearing on the subject before the adjournment of the court. Both sides of the controversy are anxious to arrive at a conclusive settlement so that it may be determined whether moving pictures may be shown on Sunday without waiting a year until the Supreme Court may again convene at Knoxville.

In the test case Judge McReynolds' decree was in favor of the state and a small fine was assessed in one case. On Sunday, October 24, there were no motion picture houses in operation in Chattanooga, the exhibitors having decided on second thought that it was a violation of the law to operate in the face of the court decree, and so have closed pending a decision of the higher court. It had been announced that the theaters would continue operations.

NO MUSIC ON SIDEWALKS.

At Knoxville, Tenn., E. D. Connor, Chief of Police, has issued some new orders which have a direct bearing on the operation of moving picture shows. This order states that hereafter such theaters as operate musical instruments on the sidewalks in front of their places of business shall have to place the instruments inside. The order also states that public work by corporations must cease on Sunday, but no new action outside of the instrument order has been aimed at the theaters. The police have also been given orders to break up mashing on the streets, and arrest all young men found loafing in front of theaters and other places of amusement and ogling the girls and women who pass. The entire order is a good thing for the better class theaters which do not have musical instruments on the sidewalks, and which are very much annoyed at times by the would-be masher.

Sunday Services in Theater

At Clarksville, Tenn., Joe Goldberg, manager of the Lillian theater, has made arrangements whereby sermons are delivered every Sunday evening in the theater by Dr. Charles E. Diehl, of the First Presbyterian Church. Two hundred and eighty-six people were in attendance at the sermon given on Sunday evening, October 24, and it is stated that the congregations are increasing weekly. The large orchestrion is used in delivery of the various hymns, etc.

Helpful Articles in Local Paper.

The Knoxville Sentinel, one of the dailies of Knoxville, Ten., has been aiding the moving picture people considerably in educating the masses in connection with the higher art now displayed not only in film producing, but in exhibiting high class photoplays. The Sentinel plays up articles dealing with presentation of big productions and among some of its recent articles was one concerning the tin pan piano and bass drum of the earlier days, and the high grade instruments which are now played in connection with the unwinding of the reels. Another article dealt with the "Silent Language of the Screen," according to the ideas of Douglas Fairbanks, who is connected with the Triangle Film corporation. These articles are read by the public, are not only enjoyed, but are remembered.

Children's Films at Alcazar.

The management of the Alcazar theater, of Chattanooga, Tenn., was very much pleased with the patronage received at the opening of its juvenile performances when the "Wizard of Oz" was shown at the suggestion of the Chattanooga Woman's Club. On the following Saturday that dearly beloved hero of story book days, "Little Lord Fauntleroy," was the attraction at the theater, and the management has decided to run a series of pictures especially for the enjoyment of children if the patronage warrants. The shows run for two hours on Saturday mornings, starting at 9 o'clock.

"Damaged Goods" at Parthenon.

The Parthenon, of Nashville, Tenn., recently put on the Mutual production of "Damaged Goods" for two days, every seat in the house being placed on sale at twenty-five cents. The management of the theater included a line at the bottom of its advertising in which it said: "Ask your doctor, your preacher; they will tell you by all means to see this greatest drama of sin's consequences."

Played Up Local Interest.

George N. Shorey, manager of the Queen theater, of Knoxville, Tenn., anticipating the great interest which would be shown by students of the University of Tennessee, at Knoxville, who were unable to attend the annual football game at Nashville between Tennessee and Vanderbilt, made arrangements whereby a private leased wire was brought into the theater. Reservations were made for the students between the hours of 3 o'clock and the conclusion of the game about 4:30. During this period no pictures were shown, but all who assembled to hear the game returns were allowed to remain for the regular show. Prices were advanced to twenty-five cents for the reserved seats.

German War Films in Nashville.

The Vendome theater, of Nashville, Tenn., starting October 24, showed the Chicago Tribune's moving pictures of German battlefields for four days to large attendances. Prices were maintained at twenty-five cents for all seats during the entire exhibition. Fifty per cent. of the profits derived from the shows were turned over to the Crippled Soldiers' fund. Four shows were given daily, starting at 2:15, 3:45, 7:15 and 8:45. The pictures were later shown at Columbia, Tenn., on October 29 and at Murfreesboro on October 30. The Vendome has been catering to some extent to stage productions this season, but is also showing a few of the large film productions.

The Crescent theater, of Nashville, recently exhibited the first of the Frohman company's Gold Rooster plays which consisted of "John Glayde's Honor."

IN BATCHES OF FIVE.

Majestic, When Crowded, Waits Till Five More Can Enter.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

IN complying with the anti-overcrowding regulations of the city of Louisville, Louis J. Dittmar, manager of the Majestic Amusement Company, has adopted the rather novel idea of selling but five tickets at one time after the house has become filled. The girl in the ticket office watches the exit and as soon as five persons leave the full to capacity theater she opens her window and sells five admittance tickets. On Sunday evening, October 24, while Blanche Sweet appeared on the screen in the photoplay "The Secret Sin" the house was packed, and a big crowd congregated in the lobby waiting turns to purchase tickets.

Instead of becoming "peeved" over not being able to purchase without delay, the crowd thought very favorably of the idea. People realized that this meant they would not find after entering the theater that it was impossible to obtain even standing room, and if they did not care to wait they were at liberty to try out one of the theaters which did not enjoy such a heavy patronage.

TWO CARMENS IN COMPETITION.

For the first time in the annals of moving picture theaters of Louisville, two theaters will show picture presentations of the same photoplay, with different stage favorites at one and the same time. These productions will be of "Carmen," which will be shown at both the Mary Anderson and the Majestic theaters. The Majestic will show the "Carmen" production in which Geraldine Farrar takes the leading role, while Theda Barra will appear in a similar production of the same subject at the Mary Anderson theater.

It is expected that a great many persons will attend both theaters to criticise and compare the two offerings. Manager Lee Goldberg, of the Mary Anderson, has made arrangements whereby the entire music score will be played on the big Wurlitzer orchestra, and the songs will be rendered by means of a Victrola placed in the wings of the theater. A number of the records, made by members of the Boston Grand Opera Company, have been secured and will be played with the pictures.

PRESSY BACK FROM DENVER.

C. A. Pressy, president of the S. & P. Film & Supply Company, returned recently from Denver, Colo., where he is figuring on starting a new film exchange. He was in the western city for several weeks.

G. H. MILLIKEN FOR PARAMOUNT WEEKLY.

G. H. Milliken was recently appointed to represent the Paramount Weekly in Louisville. Mr. Milliken's first work in this connection was that of filming a "Gymkhana," an automobile comedy meet which was held at the Kentucky State Fair grounds, and which was said to be the first ever held in Kentucky, and one of the first in the country. The sports consisted of various contests for skilful driving, etc., speed not figuring in the results.

R. W. CONANT TO REPRESENT MUTUAL WEEKLY.

R. W. Conant, of Louisville, manager of the Children's Feature Film company has been appointed the Louisville representative for the Mutual Weekly, and wil hereafter have a camera present at such times as anything unusual may transpire

BRADLEY STANIFER BUYS REX OF LONDON.

James West, of London, Ky., has sold the Rex theater to Bradley Stanifer, who took charge at once. Mr. West will shortly leave the city for his home in Tennessee, after which he will go to one of the Western States, where he expects to go back into the moving picture business.

M. G. WEISIGER GIVES MISSION BENEFIT.

M. G. Weisiger, manager of the Colonial of Danville, Ky., recently ran a specia show at the theater the entire proceeds of which were turned over to the Christian Endeavor Society of the Kentucky School for the Deaf. This society has been doing a good deal of work in China, and its supporters packed the popular little playhouse.

TOM TRAKES TO BUILD.

Tom Trakes has just taken out a building permit for a brick motion picture house to be erected at 3723 West Broadway, in the center of a district which is rapidly building up. This theater will be on the western outskirts of the city, and in a district where a very good class of business is to be obtained. The theater will cost about $8,000. The theater will have a seating capacity of 500 and will be the "Shawnee."

Prominent Visitors.

Edward Bingham, of the Empress Film company, of Indianapolis, Ind., was in Louisville last week calling on the film exchange men, and local exhibitors.

Mr. Birdsea, a representative of the Cincinnati office of the Pathe Film Company, was recently in Louisville, where he looked over the field with the intention of locating a branch office.

George Bleich, manager of the Empress theater, of Owensboro, Ky., was in Louisville recently. While in the city Mr. Bleich closed a contract whereby he will show "Damaged Goods." He also closed a deal for the Chicago Tribune war pictures which have been shown at the Masonic theater, of Louisville, at twenty-five cents a seat.

A. C. Farrell, manager of the Central Film Service, was recently in Lexington, Ky., where he spent two days looking over the field. J. I. Schnitzer, manager of the Indianapolis office of the Central Film Service company, recently visited the local office.

H. B. Strube, proprietor of the Empire theater, was recently in Cincinnati for a few days where he had conferences with some of the leading film men concerning some new service.

Business Notes.

Since George Hackett took over the active management of the Sun theater, at Eighteenth and Gallagher streets, business has been so brisk that he has been forced to stand his patrons up on many occasions. The theater is adhering strictly to Universal service.

Louis Shapinsky, one of the owners of the Crystal Amusement company, on East Market street, has disposed of most of his business holdings in Louisville and has located at Nashville, Tenn., where he has become connected with a newly incorporated quarry and a large real estate concern.

The Majestic, Alamo, Walnut and Mary Anderson theaters of Louisville are all using more newspaper advertising than they have been in the past. Theater managers apparently have discovered that the local newspaper is the quickest and best medium for reaching the public, and advertising space is being increased steadily. The houses are all doing an exceptionally fine business at this time and there is really very little keen competition to be noted. The theaters are all showing good service, and are obtaining patronage on the merits of their offerings.

In connection with the special children's programs being shown every Saturday morning at the Mary Anderson theater of Louisville, the theater made arrangements with Levy Brothers, one of the leading clothing concerns of the city, by which that concern gives away tickets for the children's shows with every purchase of goods made in the various departments carrying children's clothing or furnishings. A ticket is given with each purchase regardless of whether it may be for a nickel or a dollar. In order to accommodate the crowds that resulted from the free tickets the management of the theater arranged three shows on the first day of the free tickets. These shows were of one hour's duration each and started at 9:10 and 11 o'clock in the morning. The house was filled at each performance. Hour shows as a rule are sufficient for children, as they become restless if the program is too long.

The firm of Ewing & Russell has joined hands with Ben Cocke, at Elkton, Ky., for the purpose of taking over the lease on Damon's opera house, held by Harry White, and expiring June 1, 1916. Mr. White's lease for the intervening time has been purchased. Mr. Cocke will have charge of the projection department of the theater, while Ewing & Russell will attend to the business end of the deal. Mr. White reports that he will become connected as a traveling representative with one of the big film exchanges.

A. B. Barkley, of Georgetown, Ky., has reopened the the Alamo, which was closed at the time the Alamo theater was taken over by the Opera House. Manager Barkley reports that hereafter moving pictures will be shown at the theater every afternoon and night.

The management of the Star theater, of Clinton, Ky., has decided to diversify its program somewhat by the use of a few good vaudeville acts. The first of the vaudeville acts was the "Melnottes," an attraction which had been playing at Metropolis, Ill., during the previous week.

"The Movies," the new theater at New Haven, Ky., was recently closed for a few days on account of an epidemic of diphtheria. The authorities granted the theater the privilege to reopen the theater, but no children were admitted to the shows for the first few performances. There were four cases of the disease in the town at one time.

The Pastime, of Winchester, Ky., recently made arrangements with the Cincinnati Motion Picture company to take some motion pictures of Winchester in order to show pictures in which local color appeared.

The Pineville Building and Amusement company recently advertised that it had decided to sell the Pineville, Ky., Opera House at public auction.

The Gem, of Henderson, Ky., has succeeded the old Nickelodeon which was one of the pioneer theaters in the city.

Union Gives Instruction

Ottawa Moving Picture Operators' Union Inaugurates Class for Benefit of Its Members—Made Compulsory for Assistants Who Will Have to Pay but a Small Fee —What Will Be Taught.

By Carl J. Ketchum, Ottawa Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WITH a view to qualifying more assistant operators as first-class machine men, the Moving Picture Operators' Union here, which has jurisdiction over a number of towns in the Ottawa valley, has inaugurated an instruction class for the benefit of its members. The union, to assure success in this venture, has decided to make attendance at these classes compulsory for all the assistants, credit for such attendance to be given. The first of these classes was held on Sunday last, with President W. Hays and Mr. Felix Montreuil as the instructors. A regular series of special lines of instruction will be carried out, first dealing with the simpler difficulties which confront the junior operator, and gradually improving his knowledge of the machine, until he becomes, finally, competent to take charge. The assistants to take this course will only be obliged to pay out a small additional monthly fee.

FILMS OF BIRD LIFE.

The Canadian Government is now making use of the moving picture machine in a number of its departments. The latest branch of the service to experiment in taking pictures for preservation as Government records is the Canadian Geological Survey. Mr. P. A. Taverner, zoologist, has just returned to Ottawa with 1,500 feet of moving pictures of the bird and wild life on islands, including Bonabenture Island and Perce Rock, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, which he has handed over to the Geological Survey. He has succeeded in securing many beautiful and rare scenes. His pictures included also some hundreds of feet of film of wild geese in their breeding places in Southern Ontario. The Government officials here are highly pleased with the success of the pictures.

ENFORCING CROWDED AISLES ORDINANCE.

The municipal rule against crowding the aisles of moving picture theaters, in the past honored in the breach rather than in the observance in Ottawa, has during the last few weeks been strictly enforced, and as a result managers of several of the leading houses have been summoned for permitting infractions of this law. The Family was the first of the larger houses to be taken to task. Next came the Imperial. This is the first conviction of any kind in the history of this theater. The management had secured a special Mary Pickford film and had engaged the services of Miss Laura Wilson, a popular Montreal vocalist. The result was very gratifying from a box-office point of view—but too gratifying, since the resulting crowds attracted the unfavorable attention of the police authorities.

BETTER BUILDING LAWS.

While the anti-crowding regulations are being more strictly enforced here of late, however, a recent modification of the building by-laws governing theaters of all kinds has been decidedly to the advantage of the proprietors of moving picture houses. Formerly a theater had to have side exits, no matter how situated. Now, however, if there is an open lane at the back, such exits are not obligatory, which enables the construction of new houses in locations hitherto impossible.

WOMEN AS CENSORS OF FILMS.

Ottawa managers do not look altogether with favor upon the suggestion of the National Council of Women, that women be placed on the Board of Censors of Ontario. At the session of the organization in Toronto this week a resolution was passed urging the appointment by the Government of one or more women on the Board of Film Censors.

POPULARITY CONTEST.

The Family theater here, one of the leading moving picture houses, has inaugurated this week a big popularity contest. Patrons are handed slips entitling them to ten votes for the lady or gentleman whom they would like to see in moving pictures. The contest is open for a month. The successful candidates, to the number of twenty-five, twenty ladies and five gentlemen, when the contest is over, will be asked to take part in a photoplay, the production of which will take place in Ottawa under the supervision of Manager Elting, and when completed will be shown here for a week.

Exchange Notes.

Mr. Frank S. Dart, representative of the Paramount, New York, was in Ottawa this week, and has appointed Mr. Erroll Eltin, manager of the Family theater, to cover Eastern Ontario territory for the new Paramount News, to be released on November 8.

Mr. James Finch, of the Universal Exchange, well known in Ottawa, has been appointed manager of the Vancouver office of his company.

Screen Club in Montreal

New "Moving Picture and Theatrical Club" Formed by Local Amusement People—Will Serve as a Protective Organization—Great Need of Local Co-operation and Big Things Are Expected of Club.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ONE of the best and most interesting actions of local theatrical men has been the formation of a social club which will be known as the Moving Picture and Theatrical Club. Primarily a social affair, it will also act as an organization to protect moving picture exhibitors, exchange men, and theatrical men. Every exhibitor, exchange man and legitimate theater manager has signed his name for membership. Mr. F. H. Wright is the promoter.

It is the intention of the executive body that when a certain sum has been obtained active operations will be proceeded with. A house will be taken and a club in every sense of the word will be conducted. Mr. Wright has shown the representative of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD his roster of names, and, judging by these alone, it will be a live, effective organization.

The Montreal representative of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has been advocating organization here for weeks and has been steadily encouraged by many exhibitors to persevere—for there is great need of efficient co-operation right now. This new club is social, but it will also be found to be useful. It offers a big opportunity to exhibitors and exchange men. Boost this new club, for if you do, it will boost you and your business interests. It is time to wake up.

Readers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will know that exhibitors in Vancouver are not asleep. Perhaps we need a tonic here in the east. Perhaps we are now taking it. There are bigger things coming; but boost the new club. That is the thing to do now.

GRIFFITH FILM SCORES.

"The Birth of a Nation" came and has left this city, and also left behind it an attendance record which will take a long time to be broken. It played three weeks at the Arena, which is equivalent to at least seven weeks at any of the larger houses. We are informed on fairly good authority that a conservative estimate of the attendance for the three weeks' run would be 75,000 people.

BUILDING OPERATIONS, REPAIRS AND ALTERATIONS.

Although Canada is taking a very active part in the present war, the moving picture trade in Montreal, comparatively speaking, is doing very well. Big things are happening in local film circles, particularly among the west end theaters.

In the first place, two out of the ordinary theaters are now in course of construction. Working men at the new St. Denis theater, on St. Denis boulevard, now have a roof over their heads, and work is going on with such speed that the house is guaranteed to open by Christmas. Then there is the Regent up in the north end, which, although work was hindered for some time by blasting operations, is being reared against the skyline with amazing celerity. This house, too, will open in late December or early January.

Out in Lachine a new house has been opened, and represents a good investment. Besides this, it has come to our ears that a third house is contemplated for the North End. It is estimated that it will seat 1,500 people. We expect to be able to give more information about this at an early date.

In the way of alterations, the Crystal Palace, one of the pioneers in the local field, has been changed so that it is hardly recognizable. It is now under the direction of Mr. Charlton Howard. Other alterations are reported on another part of this page. This is just to show that "things are not what they seem," and that the business locally is not as badly off as some imagine it to be. There are good opportunities for the hustlers in Montreal.

WORLD FILM TAKES OVER COLONIAL.

To Be Called the Connaught—Will Raise Admission.

An interesting announcement was recently made by Mr. R. S. Bell, local manager for the World Film Corporation, to the effect that his people have taken over the Colonial theater in this city, and will utilize it for the purpose of exhibiting their big features in a suitable manner. The Colonial has already been closed and is now in charge of contractors who will make extensive alterations. A false proscenium is being built around the screen, the seating capacity will be rearranged, the plan of the lobby changed, and a new marquise installed at the front of the house. Besides this the interior decorations will be changed. Already the new theater is being widely heralded as the Connaught theater, "the aristocrat of photoplay houses." All productions will be widely advertised, as the proprietors will not only be giving publicity to the house, but likewise to the distributors of the films. Admission prices will be raised.

MAURICE DAVIS ENTERTAINS HOSPITAL INMATES.

Maurice M. Davis, of Famous Players' local office, entertained the staff and inmates of the Verdun Hospital with a motion picture entertainment recently. With the co-operation of friends at the Mutual and Universal offices, a well-balanced show was screened. A couple of good comedies, the Universal Weekly, a Mutual single reel drama, and a Famous Players feature, Gaby Deslys in "Her Triumph," helped to pass an interesting evening.

Lalumiere Gets Gold Watch.

Chas. Lalumiere, local Pathe manager, was recently presented with a gold watch in recognition of his successful promotion of Pathe films in this locality.

J. A. Block With World Film.

J. A. Block has joined the local World Film forces. He was out on the road recently, and states that in his opinion affairs are better out of town than in the city itself.

W. R. Thompson, New Manager of the London.

W. R. Thompson, the new manager at the London, reports that business is picking up at his house. He is in the middle of a task of making some repairs which he claims will open our eyes. He reports good business is being done with the Pathe Gold Rooster plays.

Personal Notes.

Manager Malone, of Allfeatures, reports that Radium Gold Fibre screens are becoming popular in this district, as he has made several good sales recently.

Some time ago we mentioned in these columns that the entrance to the New Grand had been altered. At the time we supposed that alterations had ceased with the installation of a sloping floor. But no; the management has even gone further and installed decorations beautiful to behold. Congratulations!

Mr. Sperdakos, manager of the Fairyland, is pleased with business. He has a neat, clean theater, and caters to a large "floating" clientele. He has booked Metro releases.

PRINCESS IN VANCOUVER SOLD.

W. P. Nichols, general manager of the National Amusement company, controlling a chain of houses in British Columbia, announced this week that his company had taken over the Princess Theater in Vancouver, and would immediately put in features, using Pathe Gold Rooster plays and others. Some time ago the Princess was conducted by W. P. Dewees, present owner of the Rex, who did a phenomenal business with the house, but the attendance lately has been quite poor. It is stated that Manager Ruocco, who is turning over the Princess to the National Amusement company, will probably assume the management of a house in Victoria.

FILM SHOWS CARE OF WOUNDED HORSES.

"Saved by the Blue Cross," one of the Strand Film Company's War Series, showing the work being done for wounded horses at the front by the Blue Cross Society, was shown at the Globe theater in Vancouver last week in conection with the feature program, under the auspices of the local committee of the society, to whom a percentage of the receipts was given. The ladies of the committee did some very effective boosting for the theater and a substantial amount was secured for the fund.

RED CROSS NIGHTS AT REX.

The first of a series of Friday night Red Cross entertainments was given at the Rex at Esquimault, B. C., last week, under the patronage of Sir Richard McBride (Premier of the province) and Lady McBride, Lieut-Governor and Mrs. Barnard, and Admiral and Mrs. Story. The house was given free by the management, and the courtesy brought a vote of thanks from the distinguished audience. Among the films shown was a special reel loaned by the government for the first time, showing the lumber industry on Vancouver Island. Young ladies acted as ushers, and local musicians and singers assisted in the program.

SOSKIN TO GO TO TORONTO.

To the vast majority of moving picture men in Western Canada, I. Soskin, whose likeness is presented herewith, needs no introduction. Mr. Soskin is probably as well known as any film man in the Dominion, and very probably as well liked. For several years he has been one of the mainstays of the Famous Players Film in Western Canada, and has recently been in charge of the Vancouver office. A few weeks ago he was transferred to the Calgary headquarters of the company, where he is in charge of the premium coupon system in use in many theaters throughout this territory. It is now stated that he is to be sent still further East, where he will become manager of the Famous Players offices in Toronto.

I. Soskin.

AT FIFTEEN CENTS ADMISSION.

That the public will pay fifteen cents to see a good moving picture show as willingly as they will pay ten, is being proven conclusively in Vancouver at the present time, where every first-class downtown house except one is charging the larger price. Manager Pilling of the Orpheum, who raised to fifteen cents last month, states that he is playing to more people than formerly, having put on a higher class of pictures at the time of the change in price. It is the show that counts with the public, and not the extra five cents, says the managers. It is a fact that never before have the people of this city been offered photoplays of such a high standard throughout.

WHAT CENSORS BANNED.

The September report of the Manitoba censors, just issued at Winnipeg, reveals a wide range of reasons for cutting out scenes. Of 561 reels inspected, 20 were rejected, while the cuts—(241 pieces out of 118 reels)—were as follows: Gun scenes, 44; poisoning food, 1; tieing man to railway track, 1; disgusting, 3; gruesome, 9; gambling scenes, 5; cruelty, 3; shooting, 20; scuttling boat, 1; duel, 1; sub-titles, 37; drowning scene, 1; knife scenes, 4; vulgar, 7; attempted suicide, 1; theft, 2; abuse, 2; throwing man over cliff, 2; robbery, 1; cheating cards, 1; German scenes, 8; stealing, 4; letters, 8; dagger scene, 1; saloon scene, 1; hold-ups, 14; child desertion, 2; burglary, 9; murder, 2; infidelity, 1; suggestive, 6; breaking up stolen jewels, 2; dividing stolen goods, 3; suggesting suicide, 5; suicide, 2; suggesting murder, 2; opening safe, 1; fighting, 3; attempting murder, 2; kidnapping, 1; lighting fuse, 1; snake scenes, 3; tampering with electric wires, 3; assault, 10; stealing government papers, 1.

CHANGES AT WINNIPEG GLOBE.

It was rumored in Winnipeg last week that the Globe on Portage avenue was to be taken over by a mysterious coast-to-coast chain said to be forming with the object of acquiring a leading house in each city. H. A. Roubert, lessee and manager of the Globe, was non-committal in his statements, but admitted that the policy of the house will be radically changed immediately, and the admission price raised from five cents to ten cents.

J. J. Macdonald, booker for the National Amusement company's theaters, is one of the busiest film men in Vancouver just now. The company is operating ten houses at present, and all programs are personally reviewed and selected by Mr. Macdonald.

American Film in Canada

Pictures of Things Very American Not Drawing in Canada Just Now—Conscious of Great Deeds in Recent History, Canadians Feel Lack of Adequate National Expression—America's Expression Contrasts with Canada's.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE following newspaper editorial serves to illustrate the attitude of apparently the majority of Canadians toward American manufacturers of moving pictures, and indicates their desires regarding productions for the Canadian market:

"There has lately been much criticism in Canadian papers of the character of the films. Not that they are vicious, but that they are too exclusively American, glorifying American military and naval deeds, American character and American personages. The complaints are just and timely. It is to be noted that so far as the 'movies' are concerned, Canada is an 'adjunct' of the United States, and probably we shall not be able to declare our independence until this country is populous enough to make it pay for film-makers to cater exclusively to Canadians. However, under present conditions an improvement could be effected. The managers of 'movie' theaters will be careful not to show films that their patrons don't like, and their patrons have it in their power to show their dislike of films which are too obstreperously American."

A further indication of this feeling is shown by the following editorial comment, which has been reproduced in Vancouver with expressions of approval:

"Just now it should not be necessary in any Canadian moving picture show to put on the screen pictures of American soldiers doing anything. There are too many films of this kind put on here. They should be put off. We have soldiers of our own who are really doing things, and if our moving picture people lack the enterprise to secure Canadian military films, they ought to be precluded from using second-hand substitutes imported from across the border.

Is "Judy Forgot" Pro-German?

Universal Film Foolishly Censored in British Columbia—Old Heidelberg Scenes Taken as Praise of Germany.

The British Columbia censor last week contributed another ridiculous decision to a list that has already been allowed to become too long. The Universal Broadway Feature, "Judy Forgot," brought in to be shown at the Colonial in Vancouver, and the Variety in Victoria, was rejected as being a "pro-German propaganda film." A private showing of the picture was given the same night at the Colonial, and it was discovered that the "pro-German" tendency of the film lay in the fact that the bride and groom go to Heidelberg on their honeymoon, and that several of the scenes consequently show German students and German police. The fact that they are Germans, however, has no bearing whatever on the story, and Manager S. B. Taube, of the exchange, even offered to change the sub-titles so as to lay the scenes in Switzerland, but without avail. Assuredly, as was pointed out by several of those present, a "pro-German" film has no place in Canada, and should not be tolerated for a moment, but it was the unanimous opinion of those who saw the picture that no such construction could possibly be placed on "Judy Forgot," and the fact that it has been shown in other Canadian provinces without objection, indicates how little there is in this contention.

Said a man who attended the private showing, "The supposed Germans depicted were merely a part of the background of the story—a part of the scenery. If the censor's idea was followed to its logical conclusion, practically every Canadian and English newspaper or magazine should be suppressed. No one would be allowed to mention Germans, let alone print pictures of them. No; a still picture is quite all right. But the minute it begins to move, it is "pro-German."

A statement made by the censor after the rejection of the film serves to show the calibre and mental breadth of this official. "That picture was made since the war began," said he, "and it was made with a purpose." This would seem to put the matter up to the Universal Film Manufacturing company.

As only one copy of these features is used in Western Canada, and all the others were in use in other localities, Manager Quagliotti, of the Colonial, was forced to be content with a program of one- and two-reel pictures.

FOX FILMS IN WESTERN CANADA.

William Alexander, represnting Fox Features, visited Vancouver last week, and plans were discussed for bringing the pictures of this company into Western Canada. If negotiations now under way are completed, the Fox productions will be shown throughout this territory in the very near future. On his way East, Mr. Alexander also stopped for two days each in Calgary and Winnipeg. C. St. John Brenon, formerly a Winnipeg newspaper man, has been appointed Canadian representative for the Fox people and will establish headquarters in an Eastern city.

TAUBE LEAVES UNIVERSAL.

James E. Finch Will Take His Place as Manager of Exchange.

Another important change has taken place in a Vancouver exchange. S. B. Taube, manager of the local office, and for a long time in the service of the Universal, tendered his resignation and on Oct. 18 handed over the reins to James E. Finch, formerly the Universal's special representative in Eastern Canada, with headquarters at Toronto. Mr. Taube is considering two offers, and may become involved in a rather startling development projected for the near future in Vancouver. There is no more popular man in Western Canada film circles, and his many friends are hoping that his future connection will be a local one.

S. B. Taube.

He is a believer in pleasing customers, and rejoices in the unofficial title of "Exhibitors' Friend." He began his theatrical experience in 1902 at the old Bijou theater in Toronto. In 1909 Mr. Taube toured Canada with a "cinematographic show." A year later he became associated with the Calgary office of the old Canadian Film Company, and in 1911 came further West as manager of the Vancouver branch. In May, 1914, he assumed the management of the Globe in this city, and at the same time handled the British Columbia distribution of the Famous Players product. After an Eastern trip late in the year Mr. Taube returned to his old position in charge of the Universal exchange in Vancouver, which he has successfully managed up to the present time.

Probably to a greater extent than any other exchange manager in this province, he has kept in close personal touch with the exhibitors throughout his district, and it is to this fact that he attributes a measure of his success.

RECEIPTS TO PATRIOTISM.

On a recent date the Royal, New Westminster, B. C., was turned over to the ladies of the St. John's Ambulance Association, who conducted special performances for the benefit of the association. Various local singers and musicians contributed to the program, and a substantial amount was raised. "Helene of the North" was the picture shown. A few days later the Edison, in the same city, gave 25 per cent. of its receipts to the Prisoners of War Relief Fund.

T. Bailey, manager of the Rex, Victoria, B. C., has just arranged to loan the house to the Esquimalt branch of the Red Cross Society every Friday for an indefinite time. On these days moving pictures, special music and vaudeville by local talent will be given.

Capacity Business with "Damon and Pythias."

Manager Nagle, of the New Star theater at Rossland, B. C., ran the Universal six-reel feature, "Damon and Pythias," for one night at 25 cents admission, and did capacity business. The head of the Rossland Lodge, K. of P., was induced to insert a notice in the local paper, calling attention to the picture, and to the fact that the Supreme Chancellor of the Order had advised every Pythian to see it.

Lobby Light and Lively

Cincinnati's Grand, a Legitimate House, Gives a Mid-Season Bill of Pictures—Two Big Features Treated Like a Legitimate Show, Draw Crowds and Are Praised in Daily Newspapers.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent Moving Picture World.

A FACT of peculiar significance, in some respects, although it might not seem so at a glance, is that a big double moving-picture bill, "Salambo" and "Salvation Nell," World Film productions, held the stage at the Grand last week. Moving pictures have been at the Grand, as well as at every other theater in Cincinnati, but hardly, before now, in the regular theatrical season.

Several big dramatic and spectacular productions of the usual sort have already inaugurated the season at the Grand, and now a big moving picture bill, of a sort that has attracted big houses, takes its turn as if in the ordinary course of affairs. Moreover, prices were maintained for this engagement at the highest level yet seen in Cincinnati for moving pictures, fifty cents being charged at night for the best seats. The theatrical critics gave the bill their usual attention, and the public evinced a high degree of appreciation of the attraction of eleven reels.

"Salambo" was compared by the papers with "Cabiria." Seats were sold in advance, in the usual manner, the full house orchestra was in attendance at every performance, and in no respect did the manner in which the film offering was handled differ from that of any of the dramatic "legitimate" attractions at the Grand. In a word, it may be said that Cincinnati saw for the first time a moving picture bill offered in the same manner as other theatrical performances, and apparently liked it; and this is the reason why last week's bill at the Grand may be considered as marking an epoch in photoplay exhibitions in the Queen City.

STAR PRESENT AT RUNOFF.

By a fortunate coincidence, which was promptly taken advantage of by Manager C. E. Holah, of the Cincinnati Pathe exchange, C. Aubrey Smith, who played the lead in the Pathe "Gold Rooster" play, "John Glayde's Honor," was in Cincinnati at the time the production was received for local release. Mr. Smith was appearing opposite Margaret Illington in "The Lie," and consented to be present at the private exhibition of "John Glayde's Honor" for the benefit of the attending exhibitors and press representatives. Several other members of the company also attended, lending the occasion a festive air. The Pathe projecting room was appropriately decorated with poster pictures of Mr. Smith himself, and he enjoyed the experience very much. "John Glayde's Honor" had its first run in Cincinnati at the Alhambra.

FOOTPADS CAUGHT A TARTAR.

Showing decided gameness under circumstances which would take the average man's nerve, Christopher Popp, vice-president and secretary of the Main Amusement company, operating the Main photoplay house on Main street, and general manager of the local offices of the Postal Telegraph Cable company, beat off a pair of footpads who attacked him one evening last week. The pair held up Mr. Popp while he was on his way home, demanding his valuables at the point of a revolver. Instead of complying, the picture man sailed in with both fists, and the highwaymen attacked him viciously, beating him over the head and face with the revolver, and cutting and bruising him severely. He fought back until they took flight, however, without getting any of his valuables, and then sought the police. His wounds were dressed at the general hospital.

"Damaged Goods" at the Alhambra.

The moving picture production of Brieux's much discussed play, "Damaged Goods," drew such large crowds at the Alhambra during its recent run that Manager Weigel put it on for a second week, with equally good results. The fact that the picture passed the supersensitive Ohio Board of Censors shows that it contains no objectionable features, while press comments emphasize the forcefulness with which it portrays the lesson sought to be conveyed. It is one of the few pictures which have been successful in a second week's consecutive run in Cincinnati at the same theater.

Feature Hits at Strand.

The Strand has been scoring heavily lately with its first-run Paramount pictures, as the attractions released have been of unusually interesting character, even for this program. Blanche Sweet, appearing in a dual role in "The Secret Sin," and drawing in a manner which proves her continued popularity, was followed by Blanche Ring in "The Yankee Girl," in which she made such a hit on the stage a few years ago, this being a Morosco production; and this was succeeded in the latter part of last week by Hazel Dawn in the Frohman production of "The Masqueraders," with the climax of all, Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen," in the first half of this week. While the censors cut out some of the film, it was not damaged, at least to those who had not seen it complete, and the name and fame of the great operatic star pulled the biggest houses of the season at the Strand for this picture.

Cincinnati Picture People Busy.

The five conpanies of the Cincinnati Motion Picture company are all engaged, as they have been for some time past, in a phase of moving picture work which has attained great popularity. A play devised for use in any town desired, entitled "The Mystery of the Double O," is produced by the various companies, with local people appearing in the various roles, and with the usual amount of newspaper publicity helping the thing along. The production has been successfully handled in a number of towns, and the company has found it profitable, as stated, to employ its entire forces, with the exception of the local news camera, in this work.

MICHIGAN THEATERS HELPED STATE HEALTH BOARDS.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THE Michigan State Board of Health echoes the sentiments of Dr. W. S. Rankin, secretary of the North Carolina Board, who said:—

"About the newest feature of the motion picture theater is its recent interest and activity along the line of public health work. The moving picture theater managers have aided in health work by running pictures on good health matters free of charge for the various health officers and civic leagues, upon request, and in many instances have taken the initiative and asked the State board for slides and lectures, and have exhibited them to the people free of charge.

"The posibilities of the moving picture show for health and information cannot be overestimated. It is probably the greatest modern day amusement and is capable of rendering a great good."

The Michigan Board comments:—"To all of which we say, Amen, with a loud voice. The writer has recognized the force of ocular demonstrations in public health work for years, and during the last eighteen months has secured several excellent films which are being used with good effect."

Pretty good for a heavily taxed business that many would like to have obstructed to the limit.

PLAN EXCHANGE IN HANCOCK.

A film exchange to supply the Copper country is to be opened in Hancock, Mich., it is reported. Sam Friedman, manager of the Savoy theater, has been offered a position as manager.

SPECIAL PROGRAMS IN GRAND RAPIDS.

Special Saturday morning moving picture programs for children and high school pupils, under the auspices of the Drama League of Grand Rapids, started with "Hansel and Gretel" at the Majestic Gardens. It is the plan of the league to cater more to the grown-up children this winter, and each month there will be shown two industrial films for the benefit of the Junior Assoication of Commerce, and two science films for the benefit of the science departments of the high schools. Also there will be two stories each week, one a fairy story and one especially for high school pupils, along the line of the "The Lady of the Lake." On each program, too, there will be a comedy and travel picture. Main floor seats will be 10 cents and the balcony, 5 cents.

Michigan Changes.

John Conners, manager of the Gem, at Hartford, has purchased the New Epoch theater, at Watervliet, and will operate both houses. Announcement has been made that he will erect a new theater in Hartford and also contemplates erecting a new theater in Watervliet.

Ed. J. Butler will call his new theater in Ishpeming the Butler, instead of the Ideal, as originally planned.

The Frank Farrington company has been granted a permit to erect at 315 Genesee avenue, in Saginaw, a brick and hollow tile theater, 60x90 feet, for the Hippodrome Amusement company. It will cost $30,000.

Archie Stinchcomb is preparing to start a moving picture show at Sunfield.

Francis Horn has re-opened his moving picture theater at Olivet and will conduct shows throughout the winter on Wednesday and Saturday nights.

James Overton, of Grayling, will discontinue the Star theater at Gaylord, which he has conducted for more than a year. It is reported that another moving picture show will be established in the village by other parties.

The Bellamy opera house at Boyne City is closed temporarily for repairs. When it is re-opened it will be conducted as a photoplay house.

William E. Jahr has opened a theater at Sabewaing and will conduct shows on Tuesday, Friday and Saturday evenings.

H. W. Beecher plans to erect a moving picture theater in Grand Rapids, at Leonard street and Alpine avenue, N. W. The theater will have a seating capacity of 500.

Michigan Short Notes.

Howson & Porter, of the Atheneum, at Jackson, have a new policy of playing big features on Saturday and Sunday. A stage setting of a summer porch scene with reed furniture and plants has been devised for the orchestra.

Despite a dark, rainy afternoon, the Temple theater, at Jackson, got some good pictures of the Knights Templar parade in that city, which were shown in addition to the regular program.

The Delmont theater, at Sheboygan, will run a four-reel Mutual feature every Saturday.

DETROIT'S MAJESTIC ATTRACTS ATTENTION.

During the past thirty days the Detroit office of the Moving Picture World has been in receipt of no less than a dozen letters from exhibitors in all parts of the country asking for information about the Majestic theater, its policy, and its weekly shows. The Majestic theater is certainly attracting attention all over the country and is unquestionably the most talked-about theater in the country. This is due to its amphitheater style of seating and the fact that it is a residential house.

Despite the fact that it is located a mile and a half from the downtown section, the Majestic plays features an entire week and draws people from all over town. There is not a Woodward avenue street car from two o'clock in the afternoon until 9:30 at night that does not leave passengers off in front of the Majestic. The writer was there Wednesday night, October 27, and no less than a half dozen limousine motor cars drove up with people dressed in evening clothes and silk hats. There is not a single night in the week that several hundred people do not attend the theater in evening clothes—the women in evening gowns and the men in full dress and silk hats.

The Majestic maintains a liveried man in front of the theater afternoon and evening who handles the people who come in motor cars. It has an elaborate new stage setting, the back drop being of beautiful design and resembling stained glass windows, while on either side of the stage under pergolas are running fountains with colored lights playing on the water. It also gives a wonderful show for the money. First an overture by a large symphony orchestra; then a single reel of current events—sometimes local and sometimes of national interest; then a short educational reel, usually a travelogue; then the feature, and concluding with a short comedy reel.

During the performances are rendered a number of selections by a singer. It has one of the finest organists in the country and he alternates with the orchestra while the feature is on.

Prices at the Majestic are 10, 15 and 25 cents, with 50 cents for boxes. M. W. McGee is manager and he is developing a rapid acquaintance with his patrons. He is a man who knows just how far to go in handling the public—and handling the theater public the right way is one of the biggest assets of a theater. A. Arthur Caille is president of the company. He is also heavily interested financially in the Fine Arts and the Maxine theater.

R. Von der Goltz Assisting Manager McGee.

R. von der Goltz, for some time manager of the Liberty and Garden theaters, is now assistant to M. W. McGee, manager of the Majestic theater.

The Dix Avenue Theater to Open Thanksgiving.

The Dix Avenue theater, Dix and Ferdinand avenues, will be opened Thanksgiving day if present plans do not miscarry. The theater will seat 1,200, and will be beautiful, costing $75,000. A Wurlitzer organ is to be installed.

John R. Lakin Visits Caille Factory.

John R. Lakin, special traveling representative for Caille Bros., manufacturers of the Caille theater devices, spent a few days of the past week at the Detroit factory. "Wherever I went I found the Moving Picture World," he said. "In fact, many exhibitors told me that it was their family bible, and that they could not do business without the World. No matter how small or how big the town, every exhibitor I talked with was a World reader." Caille devices are or have been installed in the Duplex, Globe, Empire, Majestic, Garden and Strand theaters, Detroit.

The Film Business Today

Detroit Picture Men of Experience Talk to World Man on Conditions That Confront Them Today—What People Want—Advertising and Boosting—Features and Short Films—Exchange Service.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

HERE'S what some of the leading moving picture men of Detroit think of certain present time conditions of the industry; and they give some tips that are worth considering.

George Trendle on Films and Audiences

George W. Trendle, secretary of the Casino Feature Film company, and John H. Kunsky, Inc., theatrical enterprises: "Our business is better than it has been, particularly with our theaters. All of them are showing increased attendances every week. We find that photoplay audiences are becoming more critical right along, and are getting so that they know the good stuff. I have yet to see a poor picture do a big business. The large audiences that come on the opening day are the ones who can either make or break your business. If they like the picture, they tell their friends, and if they don't like it, they take pleasure in advising their friends accordingly.

Advertising Should Fit the Films.

"It does not pay to spend a lot of money in advertising and pushing a picture that is just fair. There are two reasons for this; one is that even if the people do come out of curiosity, they go away disappointed and they lose faith in your advertising; the next time you boost a picture sky-high they won't believe it; another is, that they get sore on the house.

"The theater manager today has to watch things a whole lot more than he formerly did. Competition is keener, and he must know his neighborhood, the kind of shows they want, and then please them. It is impossible to get by with "just pictures" any more. Some very fine pictures put out would draw better if the titles were more appropriate. I know of three distinct cases in the last three months of pictures that would have done capacity business if they had better titles. A good title is a 50 per cent. asset to any picture. The title alone draws many people to theaters."

Ralph Peckham on Features and Short Films.

Ralph E. Peckham, of the Detroit Kriterion Film company, says:

"I believe the time will come within a year when there will be less big features and more one, two and three reel pictures. The trouble is that in another year or so all of the books and plays will have been filmed and then new scenarios will have to be written. The public, however, will not flock to see pictures which they know nothing about. Another point against the average big feature is that people have to sit through too long a show which gets very wearisome, particularly if they don't happen to like the story. Most of the features I have seen in six and seven reels are drawn out and draggy, whereas three reels would tell the same story and give the picture action and interest every minute. With a three-reel-feature, then a two-reeler and a one-reel comedy, the public gets a much better show, in my estimation, than a single seven reel feature. Big features are a fad which will gradually wear out, and then we'll be back to the short stuff again.

Exchange Service to Exhibitors.

"The exhibitor today demands more attention than he used to. In the early days when an exhibitor came into an exchange, it was 'Here's what we can give you.' Nowadays the exchange man says: 'What would you like?' The exchange must give service to the exhibitor. Service is just as important to the exhibitor as it is to the public which trades with the retail stores. No retailer can be successful unless he gives the right kind of service, and that's what we are coming to in the moving picture business—service on the part of the exchange to the exhibitor. The exhibitor is getting more particular because the number of exchanges are increasing and he has a better and larger selection offered him than ever."

Arthur Caille on What People Want.

A. Arthur Caille, of the Majestic theater company, and the Michigan branch of the Metro Film corporation says: "People want pictures that have a domestic touch of comedy. They want dramas and they want to laugh; in other words, they want laughs and tears in the same production. They don't want smut or filth in pictures; at least the domestic people do not care for it. They want good music; they like varied entertainment."

A. J. Gilligham on Shorter Offerings.

A. J. Gilligham, of the General Film company, says: "There isn't any question in my mind that in time we will be back to the shorter stuff. Occasionally it may be all right to put on big features, but the public would just as well be satisfied with two and three reel productions. It is certainly much easier to please them with short stuff than it is with the big features, for the reason that it is hard to get big features that will appeal to everybody."

SHORTER DETROIT ITEMS.

New House on Genesee Avenue.

The Frank Farrington company, of Detroit, has taken out a permit for the erection of a theater building on Genesee avenue, Saginaw, Mich. It will be 60 by 90 feet in size, of brick and hollow tile and will cost $30,000.

The largest staff of experts in all departments makes the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the one paper in the trade that fully fills the requirements of every reader.

The Fine Arts Theater to Declare Dividend.

The Fine Arts Theater company, Detroit, has decided to declare a dividend of one per cent. monthly. A. Arthur Caille and Henry J. Guthard took over the theater some months ago when it was losing money. They increased the seating capacity, remodeled the front, redecorated, and improved the house in a dozen ways. Now it is making money. This only goes to prove that there are hundreds of theaters today which could be made more profitable under the proper management. Mr. Caille says two things are necessary for the success of a theater; one it must be kept attractive looking and second, it must give the right kind of shows.

Ypsilanti Theater Re-Opens.

The New Martha Washington theater, Ypsilanti, Mich., was reopened Thursday evening, October 22. Mrs. Florence Signor is the owner and manager. Mrs. Signor comes to Detroit every week to select her program.

Frank Coffinberry to Manage the Miles-Detroit.

Frank Coffinberry has been appointed manager of the Miles-Detroit theater succeeding George A. Harrison. Mr. Coffinberry for the past six months managed the Hippodrome theater in Kansas City, and for seven years previous was manager of the Orpheum at Portland, Ore.

Special Shows Growing

In Illinois, Children's Matinees and Other Specially Chosen or Sponsored Programs Are Coming to the Fore—General View Over the State Reveals Much Activity Along These Lines.

PICTURES for children and the show sponsored by churches or societies take leading places in the week's photoplay developments in Illinois. In some places the plan to give regular shows and charge admission has run afoul of city ordinances. The Community Picture Playhouse, at Evanston, has been compelled to suspend operating because municipal authorities found its building would not meet safety requirements. Search for other quarters has been started. Since the Elgin Y. W. C. A. started its regular shows, city commissioners are debating whether they should charge the regular moving picture theater license and demand compliance with the safety regulations.

A number of Illinois exhibitors have been added to the ranks of those giving Saturday morning shows. Manager Erber, of the Fischer theater, at Danville, has inaugurated these matinees. He sells a card good for six admissions for 25 cents and it is punched like a meal ticket. The Civic League, at Robinson, has started a movement for better films for children, and Manager Otey, of the Robinson Grand Opera House, co-operated by showing free an initial program of selected pictures. The Gem theater, at Edwardsville, has started a series of Saturday matinees for children which are free to those up to twelve years of age.

The Apollo theater, at Peoria, makes no charge to the Child Welfare league for its Saturday shows, except the league pays film rental and for help. The league has asked the board of education for a committee of teachers to help select films and for permission to announce the shows in the public schools. The purchase of a machine for the Peoria public schools and libraries is the aim of the league.

At a meeting of the Women's club, in Freeport, Mrs. R. A. Hunter advocated special Saturday shows for children. She also wanted pictures censored more closely. Miss Jessie Entrikin, a social worker said she believed an unlimited amount of good came from the moving pictures to the child with a limited home life. S. E. Raines, speaking in behalf of the teachers, believed the moving picture show was doing more harm than good, and offered his compilation of statistics to show the amount of money the local school children were spending for theaters.

Manager L. W. Giteau, of the Majestic theater, had a representative of the Paramount company present, who spoke on the work being done by the leading producers.

The First Presbyterian Church, of Decatur, has purchased a new model Edison machine, and during the week will show educational, historical, comedy and religious films. School children who attend Sunday, will be given free tickets. The attendance is thus limited, as there is no desire to compete with the local moving picture theaters. "John Barleycorn" was shown at a Sunday evening service by the Congregational church, in Ottawa.

The Woman's club, at Bloomington, has appointed a committee to purchase a machine. The high school, at Taylorville, is contemplating the purchase of a machine.

LOCAL CENSORS IN ILLINOIS.

Quincy exhibitors will be required by the local board to give a view of all films before they are shown to the public. They also wil be required to furnish the board information as to programs several days in advance. The corporation counsel of Quincy has furnished an opinion that the board's power is limited to censoring pictures and not all amusements.

Twenty cents a reel is censorship fee asked of Evanston exhibitors in the latest change in the proposed local censorship ordinance.

The Woman's club of Shelbyville has started a movement for local censorship.

RAY FILM EXCHANGE IN DECATUR.

The Ray Film exchange has been opened in the Suffern building, at Decatur, by Ray Colvin, for several years manager of the Nickel Bijou theater in that city. He will handle the output of the Kriterion Film company, some Pathe releases and some Keystone comedies, a complete line of posters, tickets and other supplies. Colvin will be in charge of the office. A Siegfried succeeds him at the Nickel Bijou.

NO SUNDAY SHOWS IN DANVILLE.

Danville shows will not open on Sundays. A committee of the city council recommended they be allowed to open but an old "wet" and "dry" fight in the council defeated the plan 8 to 6.

Illinois Showmanship in Short Notes.

When the state Knights of Pythias convention was held at Springfield, the Vaudette had the local lodge take charge of showing the film, "Damon and Pythias." The Princess, at Monmouth, admitted students at Monmouth college free to "Dr. Rameau." "Lena Rivers" and "Cinderella" were shown by the Majestic, at Kewanee, as a benefit for the kindergarten schools in that city. A coal dealer in Danville gave a ticket to the Lyric with each ton of coal sold. The Majestic, at La Salle, has installed new fire extinguishers, and to prove their efficiency, a demonstration was held one night in front of the theater. The Edison feature, "Out of the Ruins," was shown at the Harriet, in Pinckneyville, to help the local fire department as the city has no money. The fire prevention film, "Our Burning Dollars," was shown at the Court theater in Pekin, when the members of the State Fire Prevention Association were the guests of the Pekin Commercial club. Manager Sodine has installed a new Bartola at the Family, in Moline. The Gem, at Centralia, has a new orchestra-organ. The Orpheum, at Ottawa, is proud of a new Kimball organ. The Inter-Film Producers at Chicago made "Taylorville Adopts a Baby" for the Elks theater, at Taylorville. The Princess and the Bijou at Monmouth had the big Gas Tractor Meet there filmed for their houses.

J. C. Cook has purchased the interests of his partners, Guhl and Thompson, in the New Orpheum theater, at Freeport.

Jay Fitts, for eight years manager of the Olympic theater, at Danville, sold that house to Charles Shean and Louis Grabbs, who have been connected with it. Alterations and redecoration already were under way by Fitts.

Clarence Heltness, of Rochelle, will open a moving picture show at Byron.

H. Jones, of Chicago, has succeeded H. L. Miller as manager for the Strand Photoplay company, at the Hippodrome, in Peoria. Miller goes to Indianapolis to take charge of the Strand interests there.

Nunn & Kline have sold the Princess theater, at Macomb, to Fred P. Bagby.

WISCONSIN HOUSE REBOOKS "NATION" FILM.

RETURN dates are being booked in Wisconsin for "The Birth of a Nation." Manager Stebbins, of the Opera house at Manitowoc, gets it back early in January, for three nights. It also goes back for four days, early in December, to the Henry Boyle theater at Fond du Lac. The receipts at the two theaters totalled about $7,000. At the Manitowoc house, the average attendance was 875, but the last night much business was turned away. All except a few gallery seats had been sold in advance and these went in fifteen minutes. When the Manitowoc County Teachers' association was in convention at Manitowoc, this show took the place of the Friday afternoon lecture and 180 teachers attended in a body.

The film has been booked for the Grand, at Superior, for two weeks, beginning November 8, and for a week at the opera house in Wausau, starting November 28.

Films of the Beaver Dam fair were shown by the Star, at Brandon. Many Children's Shows

Minneapolis Going In for Special Matinees for Children on a City-Wide Scale—Many Neighborhood Houses Booked in Scheme and Arrangements Made So Children Will Not Have to Travel Far.

By Grace E. Polk, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPECIAL Saturday matinee picture programs for children are to be given in Minneapolis this winter. The move is backed by the club women of the city, by the Parents' and Teachers' Council, which is the representative body of all the various associations, by the Welfare League and other clubs and associations working for city betterment.

The programs are given in the various neighborhood theaters, so that the children can see them without going far from home. The films shown are selected, usually by members of the Parents' and Teachers' Associations of the district in which they are to be shown. They include fairy tales, educational films, and comedies, and an effort is made always to get films that the children themselves enjoy, and that they are not already familiar with. To keep the punch and yet exclude objectionable features has been the effort.

The movement has been endorsed by Dr. F. E. Spaulding, superintendent of schools, who believes in supervised films for children to such an extent that he is making an effort to get motion picture machines into all the schools, and already half a dozen or more schools have installed them, new ones being added this fall.

Similar special children's programs were given last spring and were popular with mothers and children alike. At one of the neighborhood theaters there was an attendance at an afternoon performance of "Alice in Wonderland" of nearly 1,500 children and so great was the enthusiasm of the young audience that a policeman was stationed at the door to keep order.

The first of the programs is to be given October 30 at the New Garden theater, when a three-reeler of "Snow White" (Universal) and a comedy with children actors will be shown.

HIGH PRICED SHOWS BEGIN.

Lyric to Show Triangle and Paramount at 15-50 Cents.

The regular twenty-five-cent picture show will make its bow to the Minneapolis public Sunday, November 7, at the Lyric theater. The Triangle program has been secured by the Saxe Brothers for the Lyric theater in Minneapolis, where it will be shown in conjunction with the Paramount pictures. The theater announces it will present a bill of twelve reels, changing every Sunday and Thursday. On each bill will be a Paramount feature, a Triangle feature and a Triangle comedy.

The admission price to be charged is 15, 25 and 50 cents, the latter price entitling the patron to a reserved seat at night. The theater is being redecorated and the stage has been converted into a black shadow box, after the plan in all the big Triangle theaters. Manager William E. Mick is making elaborate preparations for the inauguration of this new policy. The orchestra is being enlarged too.

The first program will be Dustin Farnum in "The Iron Strain," Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen," and Raymond Hitchcock in "My Valet." The last half of the week will be shown Douglas Fairbanks in "The Lamb," Marguerite Clark in "Still Waters," and James Murray in "A Gay Old Knight."

The opening of the new policy is being heralded by a newspaper campaign made distinctive by quarter-page ads.

"DAMAGED GOODS" MAKES RECORD.

"Damaged Goods," with Richard Bennett in the leading role, played to an audience of 50,000 in Minneapolis during the past week (17th-24th), said by V. C. Calvert, manager of the New Garrick, where it was put on, to be the biggest week's business that the pictures have ever drawn in the city.

A private showing was given of the play before the regular showing, to which were invited some 500 doctors, lawyers, clergymen and representatives of the Minneapolis circle of the Drama la League. Almost unqualified approval was given to the screen version of Brieux' play, and the frequent expression was that the screen version was better than the stage version.

NEW HENNEPIN AVENUE HOUSE.

A new picture house, to seat 1,500, the largest theater in Minneapolis outside the downtown district, has been announced by M. L. and J. W. Cohen, to be located at Hennepin avenue and 29th street.

Ground for the new building, which will also provide space for several storerooms and a large hall, was broken a few days ago and the contractors promise completion of the work by early spring.

The building is fireproof and absolutely modern in design, an especial feature being a ventilating system which affords a vetilator under each seat. The Messrs. Cohen say they have not decided whether to lease the theater or manage it themselves.

New Fire Law in Atlanta

Recent Mutual Fire Likely to Bring Stringent City Regulations of Film Exchange Buildings and Film Storage—City Council Appoints a Committee to Recommend New Ordinance—What Will Be Demanded.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

EVERY motion picture exchange in Atlanta is to be investigated by the city authorities, and appropriate legislation passed which will prevent a repetition of the late fire of the Mutual Film Exchange, at which three lives were lost.

A resolution was adopted in the city council Monday providing for the appointment of three to visit every place in Atlanta where films are kept and then to recommend such an ordinance as will make the exchanges fireproof. The resolution further provides that the committee shall report the advisability of erecting a film exchange building constructed of fireproof materials, where film exchanges and no other businesses shall be quartered. The resolution was introduced by Council Renfroe and unanimously adopted. The resolution was as follows:

"Whereas, on Saturday of last week, there occurred in this city a disastrous fire, the same originating in the stock room of one of the film supply houses, and caused, it seems, by the explosion of certain inflammable material, which is necessary to be carried by such film exchanges, said fire resulting in the loss of life and destruction of property, and

"Whereas, In different parts of the city there are located in close proximity to each other, and often times in the same building, a number of film supply houses, carrying a large stock of films, all of which consists of the same inflammable material as that from which the fire of last Saturday originated, and

"Whereas, It is necessary, in order to protect the life and property of the citizens of Atlanta, to prevent a recurrence of such a fire; therefore, be it

"Resolved, By the Mayor and General Council of the city of Atlanta, That a committee of three be appointed by the presiding officer of this body for the purpose of making an investigation into the existing conditions as above set forth, and recommending to this body suitable legislation which will prevent the recurrence of such fires as above referred to, the committee to consider the advisability of requiring the building of a film exchange building, which shall be of fireproof construction and in which no other offices shall be located, and which shall be used for no other purposes other than the storing of these films. Said committee to report such other legislation as in their opinion may provide for the safety of lives and property."

F. V. L. Smith, ex-deputy fire marshal of Louisiana, and who has had considerable experience in fire investigations in New Orleans, was in Atlanta during the film fire.

Mr. Smith has written the following communication to the municipal board of electrical control:

"Board of Electrical Control, Atlanta, Ga.:

"Gentlemen: After having witnessed the sad, unfortunate film fire of yesterday and listened to statements regarding cause—on the ground—I searched the columns of today's newspapers, but beyond brief reference to the interest of our mayor, chief of police, and chief of fire department, I was disappointed in not being able to find a single expression as to possible real responsibility.

"Therefore, I deem it my duty to respectfully suggest to your board that if:

"Portable or unprotected electric fans, flexible cords or fuses were in use in the vicinity of the highly inflammable films, then:

"Your inspection records should be carefully examined, date and results of last inspection noted, and if these conditions did exist and were not given the absolutely necessary attention, then:

"Your inspector was either grossly incompetent or criminally negligent, or both, and should be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law covering.

"F. V. L. SMITH,

"Ex-Deputy Fire Marshal of Louisiana.

"Atlanta, Ga., October 17, 1915."

Under a resolution adopted by the city council of Atlanta, the city board of censors have been instructed to investigate the picture, "The Birth of a Nation," which is to be shown soon at the Atlanta theater. This action was taken at the request of Councilman Ashley, who said he had been told the picture might "resurrect old war time memories which might well be forgotten." It is understood the negro section of the picture is the objectionable feature.

HARRY KOPLAR AND BROTHERS BUY SIXTH THEATER.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent Moving Picture World.

HARRY KOPLAR has purchased the Novelty, at Grand and Easton avenues, from the Crawford interests, and will begin alterations and decorations on the house immediately. The Novelty was the first large capacity theater to be built outside of the downtown district in St. Louis.

O. T. Crawford built the house, and advertised it to such good purpose that it was the most talked of theater in the city for a long time. At that time it showed vaudeville, and its 1750 seats were filled at every performance; then when other neighborhood theaters sprang up, the Novelty was no longer a novelty and had to meet the keenest competition. Within the last year it was opened for short periods of time, twice as a motion picture house, and once with a Jewish stock company, but all the ventures proved failures, and it has now been several months since there has been any kind of a show in the house.

Mr. Koplar and his three brothers, who are in the real estate business, are expert showmen, and with careful management and a gradual building up of the business, the Novelty should soon be in a highly prosperous condition, for it is in a very thickly settled neighborhood, and is one of the most imposing structures on Easton avenue.

GARRICK COULD BE BOUGHT.

J. J. Shubert, one of the owners of the string of Shubert and Garrick theaters throughout the country, was in St. Louis during the week of Oct. 25th, attending to theatrical business. Mr. Shubert is interested in a West End theater, in which he may invest, as he was rather impressed with the business done in that section of the city. He also let it be understood that he would consider either selling or trading the Garrick, and said that in all probability the Garrick would be used for a motion picture theater after the present run of "The Birth of a Nation" closes.

TWO NEW ST. LOUIS HOUSES.

A new theater is going up at 12th and Clinton streets, which promises to be one of the most up to date show houses in the city. Already orders for the most approved furnishings and equipment have been given, and the house will probably open some time before Christmas.

Another house to open soon is the Ritz, on Sixth street, near Olive. The Ritz, which was formerly Caesar's Cafe, is being remodeled and converted into a very modern and de luxe theater, and advertises that it will open early in November.

LORELEI DOING BUSINESS.

The Lorelei, on Olive, just west of Taylor, opened with an all moving picture program on Saturday, October 30. The Lorelei is the big natatorium that is to be a theater in the winter and a swimming school in the summer. The water is drained from the pool when cool weather comes the floor and chairs of the theater are laid over it and presto! the Nat becomes a theater.

INDIANA TRADE LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

"Birth of a Nation" in South Bend.

"The Birth of a Nation" is being shown at the Oliver theater, South Bend, with $1.50 as the limit. The price looks inflated for Indiana, but there are a lot of folks in South Bend who are game to look in at it.

Why Should Anybody Smile?

Now comes Father McGinn of South Bend and says that the street urchin who is busy smoking cigarettes in imitation of Charley Chaplin and carrying on imaginary flirtations with pretty girls, might otherwise be imitating a Booth or a McCready to his great moral advancement. Why McCready or Booth Why not Bushman or Baggot? Then, again, why smile at all?

Fred Linick and Fred Chipman have both been arrested, the first in Cincinnati and the second in Ft. Wayne, charged with swindling Edward Linn, of Indianapolis. Linn put up $500 to start an exchange. Linick and Chipman went out into the state to get "business" without leaving an address, so the police say.

Censorship Under Fire

Topeka, Kansas, Exhibitor Is Hitting Out Hard at Work of the State Censorship Board—Rulings on Fox Picture "Sin" and on the Lasky "Carmen" Open Way to Bring Conditions Home to People.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

PRESIDENT H. S. MONTGOMERY, of the Iris theater company, of Topeka, Kansas, has donned his armor, taken his spear in hand and mounting Pegasus, is running full tilt at the Kansas Censorship Board. Mr. Montgomery is an old newspaperman and he "wields a trenchant pen." He is using his talents to emphasize some of the shortcomings of the Kansas censorship, with screeds in liberal display space in the Topeka papers, and he is attracting a lot of attention thereby.

Mr. Montgomery is the father of H. G. Montgomery, manager of the Iris theater.

The active warfare was precipitated by the action of the Kansas board in rejecting the film, "Sin." Upon the heels of that rejection came the inspection of the Paramount picture, "Carmen," featuring Geraldine Farrar. "Carmen" was given an inspection by Miss Simpson, of the Board, who recommended some eliminations under the general instructions of the censorship. W. D. Ross, superintendent of public instruction, insisted, however, that he must see the film himself, and when he had viewed it he declared that it must be changed considerably.

Mr. Montgomery had invited a large number of women and men of the city to view the picture, and it is said that they commended it very highly. After Mr. Ross had seen the picture he insisted on eliminating certain scenes and passing it to the Appeal Board; Mr. Ross's declaration of tentative rejection came when Mr. Montgomery declared that he wished to show the entire picture. Governor Capper and Mrs. Capper saw the picture, and both he and his wife are said to have liked it immensely.

Mr. Montgomery is determined that "Carmen" shall be the means of putting the censorship board on record for the people of Kansas. He is going to show this picture without eliminations; and he is prepared to pay the fine of $25 a reel, for the five reels. He had announced the picture for November 8th and 9th, and he will show this picture on November 8th—unless some extraordinary means are taken to prevent it. He will, of course, have an immense crowd at that presentation, and undoubtedly there will be widespread comment as to the particular scenes which the censorship board had insisted on eliminating.

It is said that there is still a chance that the board will pass "Carmen" for use in the state, after certain eliminations are made. One of the cuts demanded is of a close up scene of violence—another of a passionate love scene considered too long extended.

The Fox presentation of "Carmen," with Theda Bara, has not yet been censored, but it is booked for the Iris November 5th and 6th. This film probably will be run after submitting to such rules as the board demands.

Because of Mr. Montgomery's activity there has appeared a tendency to use display advertising space for comments on the censorship and on the fight in general. Mr. Montgomery, in one of his advertisements, displayed the words, "Good morning; have you been censored?" One day Mr. Montgomery added the following, which we print in part:—

"'Carmen,' the grand opera, prize photoproduction, featuring Geraldine Farrar, has been killed by W. D. Ross, State Censor. Like 'Sin,' the great dramatic value of 'Carmen' is entirely too deep for Mr. Ross.

"It is our intention to show 'Carmen' to the people of Topeka and pay the fine provided by the law simply to prove our position and to show intelligent citizens, both men and women, what they are denied; by one man viz: the privilege of seeing the most tensely dramatic photoplay ever shown in Topeka.

"We are told that the Iris must 'get out of the theatrical business.' That is not for any one man or clique to say. The people will decide the question.

"It is well known that the Iris 'does things' and it is the enterprise and liberal policy of the theater, together with its exclusive control of the world's best photoproductions, that engender the petty jealousy.

"We do not believe the people of Topeka are to be bound and gagged by the abuse of privilege at the hands of one man not qualified to dispense a law in itself necessary, advisable and to be upheld per se."

CENSORS NOT OVERWORKED.

The expected flood of films has not yet overwhelmed the Kansas Censorship Board. Apparently the increase, such as it is, is coming from the companies whose pictures have been nabbed as being run uninspected at one place or another in Kansas. Recently 72 reels were presented to the board in one day. Practically all held releases on popular subjects that had steady booking and they had to secure the approval of the board or the bookings would be cancelled. It is presumed that, as the Reverend Festus Foster gets busy the number of pictures brought before the board will be very largely increased.

A SHOW TO HELP A VILLAGE.

Several of the young women of Independence, daughters of prominent citizens, have established a moving picture show here. They decided that they knew exactly what a model picture show should be and made up their minds to run such an institution themselves. They easily raised the funds, leased the Independence Armory, made arrangements for machines and operators as well as films and have started the enterprise. They are giving shows two nights a week, Tuesdays and Saturdays.

The purpose of the young women is not to make money but to do a real service to their community. They have felt that the children and adults of Independence could be benefited in no other way so largely as by being given the best sort of moving pictures. They are cultured young women and therefore have definite ideas on what would serve to improve the minds and simulate the best sentiments of the people of Independence. The names of these young women are as follows: Miss Katherine Mize, daughter of Judge Robert Mize; Miss Mary Crump, daughter of J. P. Crump, vice-president of the Kansas City Title & Trust Co.; Miss Carrie McCoy and Miss Claudine Munday, niece of Mrs. Fred Bergschneider.

CUT-THROAT IN DOWN-TOWN SECTION.

The exhibitors of Kansas City, Mo., especially those downtown, are wishing and wishing that they could get together; and they are wondering what is going to happen to them unless they do. Gradually the competition is forcing more and more reels into even the five-cent houses and the profits are becoming correspondingly smaller. The recent successful effort of the operators to increase their revenue has cut further into the profit of the exhibitors. The operators now receive 50 cents per hour and no longer act as messengers or carry films. There are several five-cent shows in the downtown district which open at 11 in the morning.

Edison Day Pictures

San Francisco and the Exposition Celebrate the Visit of the Great Inventor—Pictures of Edison's Inventions and Discoveries Shown—Palace of Education Gave Whole Day to Them.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THOMAS A. EDISON spent the past week in San Francisco visiting the Exposition and inspecting the rebuilt city, which he had not seen for more than thirty years. Edison Day was observed at the Exposition on October 21 and a crowd of one hundred thousand persons gathered to do homage to the great inventor. In the afternoon special exercises were held in one of the great pavilions on the grounds and Mr. Edison was presented with a bronze plaque by President C. C. Moore. In the evening there was a special illumination of the grounds in his honor, with a display of fireworks the like of which had never been seen here before, together with an illuminated aeroplane flight. Moving pictures had been taken of his meeting with Luther Burbank, of his visit to the historic battleship Oregon, and of his trips through the Exposition grounds, and these were shown during the evening on a huge screen erected on the Marina where a crowd of at least seventy-five thousand persons had assembled. Permission to take pictures on the grounds was granted by George Collins of the Exposition Players' corporation, which holds the exclusive privilege. George Breck, head of the Edison motion picture company agency in San Francisco, was a member of the committee having charge of the plans for the entertainment of the distinguished inventor.

In the Palace of Education one of the largest theaters there devoted its entire attention on Edison Day to moving pictures portraying some of his most interesting discoveries and inventions. Experiments in magnetism were featured in one film, another showed a magnetic ore separator, while still others showed electrical and scientific experiments being conducted in the Edison laboratories, views of his factories and historic scenes of the inventor's early life. The visit of Mr. Edison to the Exposition attracted more attention than that of any other man who has been here since the opening day.

NEW SCREEN CLUB SECRETARY.

Ralph L. Marks, who has been secretary of the Screen Club of San Francisco since its organization, has tendered his resignation, owing to the press of business affairs, and H. J. Gosliner, of the Edison theater, is filling this position for the time being. Arrangements are being made whereby the duties of the secretary will be lessened, it being the plan to have a part of these taken over by the club manager. Mr. Marks' place on the Board of Directors of the Screen Club is now being filled by A. Markowitz.

THE PATHE EXCHANGE RUNNING SMOOTHLY AGAIN.

Manager Harry Oviatt of the local Pathe exchange advises that after eight months of more or less chaotic conditions, during which it has been found necessary to completely revamp the booking and accounting departments, the business of the exchange is on a smooth working basis. H. J. Henrioulle has proven his worth as a system manager and under his direction the office departments have been brought up to a high plane of efficiency. This exchange is now going after business in earnest and G. R. Sirwell has recently been sent on the road to visit exhibitors.

MABEL NORMAND VISITS CITY.

Mabel Normand was in the city last week from Los Angeles to visit friends and spent a very onjoyable time at the Exposition. While here she accepted the invitation of C. L. Williams, of C. L. Williams & Co., to inspect the famous Movca Cartoon Films at the exhibiting room in the Mechanics Bank Building and was delighted with the animated drawings of Charles Chaplin, Roscoe Arbuckle and herself, declaring that these were the greatest cartoons she had ever seen. C. L. Williams & Co., are exclusive agents for the Movca cartoons, which are the production of a local artist, and is now arranging for their distribution in England, as well as throughout the United States.

Exchange Men Make Trips.

J. W. Allen, assistant to manager Herman Wobber of the Progressive motion picture company, is making an extended trip through the San Francisco territory in the interest of Paramount features.

Ernest Bru, manager of the Apex film exchange, is back from a trip through the California territory south of San Francisco, having gone as far as San Diego. He found conditions improving in the southern section of the State.

I. H. Lichtenstein, of the Globe Film Exchange, is making a trip to Los Angeles and the Southern part of the State, and plans to go to New York shortly after his return to San Francisco.

Harry Leonhardt, general Western representative of the William Fox film corporation, was in San Francisco a few days ago from Los Angeles, where he is now making his headquarters for a time.

Louis Hyman, of the Golden Gate film exchange, has returned from a successful trip through the San Joaquin valley in the interests of the Metro and Kleine-Edison branch of the business. He found conditions in good shape, especially in the orange districts of Tulare County where the picking of citrus fruit is now commencing.

Fred. S. Peachy, district manager for the United Film Service, is making a two weeks' trip through the northern part of California to line up business before the rainy season commences and makes traveling difficult.

Exhibition City Newslets.

Col. W. N. Selig is here this week to enjoy the Exposition and the festivities incidental to the visit of Thomas A. Edison.

The Silver Palace on Market street has purchased a Powers Cameragraph No. 6 A and added it to its equipment.

G. A. Metcalfe has shipped the first Baird machine to Seattle, Wash. Plans for opening a branch there have been delayed on account of the slide in the Panama Canal, which has prevented stocks of machines from arriving on time.

The Grand on Mission street has returned to moving pictures, except on Sundays, and has arranged to show the Kleine-Edison service.

The Poppy theater on Sixteenth street is being remodeled and a new photo-player installed. It will be re-opened about the middle of November as a 10-cent house.

The Lincoln on Sixth avenue, is being improved and the lobby made more attractive by the addition of brass frames.

DENVER NEWS LETTER.

By Muriel Lee, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

The Only Dirt Train Pass.

MANAGER H. H. BUCKWALTER, a pioneer in the moving-picture game, and at the present managing the Kleine-Edison film office in Denver, while speaking of unusual experiences he has had while in the film game, reached in his pocket and pulled out a card on which was written, "Admit H. H. Buckwalter to dirt trains. (Signed) Geo. W. Goethals, 4/9/13."

Mr. Buckwalter was then taking pictures for Selig, and had been sent down to the Panama Canal to get pictures. He was anxious to get pictures of the loading and the dumping of dirt. No one had ever been given a pass to ride on the dirt trains, because it was imperative that the train should not be stopped even a second. General Goethals was equally anxious to have the pictures taken, so after convincing the great engineer that he would under no circumstances delay the work, Mr. Buckwalter was given the pass. In the history of the building of the Panama Canal, this was the only dirt train pass issued.

Made Long Run at Strand.

"Destiny, or the Soul of a Woman," the Metro feature has just completed a record run at the Strand theater. It made the longest run of any picture that has been run in a ten cent house in Denver. It played to packed houses for nine consecutive days.

"Damaged Goods" at Paris.

"Damaged Goods," the much talked of special Mutual feature, is packing houses at the Paris theater this week. It is becoming one of the most talked of pictures of any that has ever been run here. It is being heartily endorsed by educators, doctors, ministers, and club women. It will undoubtedly prove one of the strongest pictures ever shown.

Death of Manager Knappen's Mother.

Denver people are delighted to know at last that "The Birth of a Nation" is really coming here. It will be here some time in January, and the length of time it will be here is not as yet decided. With this picture coming the beginning of January, and the "Battle Cry of Peace" coming sometime around the holidays, there are treats in store for the moving picture enthusiast.

TRIANGLE FILMS COME TO THE LIBERTY.

By S. Clark Patchen, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

AFTER hot competition between several local managers of moving picture theaters, F. T. Bailey, of the Liberty Amusement company, has secured the new Triangle film attractions for the Liberty theater. The contract covers the Liberty, in Spokane, and the American, in Butte, Mont.; in which Mr. Bailey is also interested. Mr. Bailey went to Seattle to sign the contract with the northwestern representatives.

Manager Ralph Ruffner states that considerable changes in the house organization and equipment will be made before the first Triangle pictures are shown. There is a possibility that only three shows will be given, one in the afternoon and two at night.

The first Triangle picture, "The Iron Strain," an Ince feature which will be presented November 14, will open the Spokane engagement.

MORE FILMS, LESS VAUDEVILLE AT HIPPODROME.

Since Sunday, October 17, the Hippodrome theater, Spokane, operated by Levy & Brown, under the management of H. J. Brown, which has been operated as a vaudeville house since it was changed from Loew's theater, announced a change in policy of running five reels of moving pictures and cutting the vaudeville part of the program to three acts. Gradually the towns of the Spokane country are being invaded by new moving picture theaters.

With the improvement of conditions at Northport, Washington, where a new smelter is being constructed by large mining interests a new moving picture house will open about November 1. Coulee City, Washington, is also the scene of a new moving picture show which opened October 22.

The new house at Northport is to be opened by B. W. Bickert and Minnie Liebrecht, and is named the Bijou. The couple purchased a Powers 6 machine from the Mutual Film Corporation branch in Spokane, and also arranged for film service with the Mutual.

Lyle Cubbage and R. D. McGath opened the new house of amusement at Coulee City, Wash., which seats 250.

Spokane Brevities.

Seena Owen in "A Yankee from the West," a Mutual master picture, played to large audiences in the Class A theater for three days. Many Spokane friends of Miss Owen, a former Spokane society girl, witnessed the production.

Half page advertisements in two daily papers helped take large crowds to the Majestic theater for a three-day second run appearance of Theda Bara and Edward Jose in "A Fool There Was," a Fox production which played to large audiences in the Liberty theater on the first run occasion some months ago.

Donald Brian, in a Paramount production, "The Voice in the Fog," made a hit with audiences at the Clemmer theater during the week. Hazel Dawn, in "The Fatal Card," was also a good attraction at the Clemmer.

"Up from the Depths," depicting Courtenay Foote and Gladys Brockwell and a Keystone comedy, with Mabel Normand starring, were leading attractions at the Lyric this week. The first picture is a Mutual master picture, which made its first appearance at the Class A last week at 10 and 15 cent prices, as compared with 5 cents at the Lyric.

Dorothy Bernard, in "The Little Gipsy," was the leading attraction at the Casino for the week, from a box office standpoint. The play was shown to capacity houses part of the time.

Seattle's Coliseum

New Half-Million-Dollar Picture Theater Starts New Era—City's Motion Picture Center Moved—Will Seat 2,500 People—Jensen and Von Herberg and Other Well-Known Picture Men of the City Behind It.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ANOTHER move in the way of bigger and better pictures for Seattle motion picture houses is the absorbing of the Coliseum theater, now in the course of construction, by Jensen & Von Herberg, of Seattle, who operate the Liberty, Alhambra and Mission theaters, in Seattle, and the Columbia, in Portland. The Coliseum, under this arrangement, will be rushed to early completion and when completed will seat 2,500 people, and will share with the Liberty the honors of being Seattle's largest and finest photoplay palaces. The Coliseum represents an outlay of $600,000, and will have a number of distinctive features, one that is new in the northwest is an elevator that will carry twenty-seven people and make two stops, one at the lower and the other at the upper balcony. The other features cannot be announced at this date.

With the absorbing of the Coliseum comes a new corporation into Seattle, The Greater Theaters company, which will have a capitalization of a half million dollars. The following officers have been elected: C. S. Jensen, president; J. L. Gottstein, vice-president; F. V. Fisher, secretary, and J. Von Herberg, treasurer. Mr. Jensen and Von Herberg are already well known in Pacific Coast theatrical circles from their previous association first with the Alhambra theater, which they took over less than four years ago, after it had proved a four times failure in drama, stock, vaudeville and pictures and, later, with the Liberty, which was built for them, and later still, when they acquired the Mission, making a chain of three Seattle photoplay houses. The advent of the Gottstein interests into northwest theatrical circles marks the entry of some of Seattles most conservative business men, and certainly puts an end to the question as to whether motion pictures are here to stay.

Not only does this mean a new era in motion pictures in Seattle, but it also practically moves the motion picture center as far as the big theaters showing the first run features are concerned, north of Pike street, for all the theaters of the Greater Theaters company, excepting the Mission, which is a half block south, are north of Pike.

This move realizes the keen insight into the northward trend of the business and amusement centers, of Jensen & Von Herberg, who, as stated in the fore part of this article, took over the Alhambra theater (at Pine and Westlake) less than four years ago when it was considered hopelessly out of the business center and have seen business blocks built and stores move in and around their location until now they are only a few blocks removed from the business center that is still building their way.

Billboard advertising, pages and half pages in the newspapers, and always the best that could be obtained in motion picture features are the keystones of their success.

The Liberty is now the largest house in Seattle, seating 2,100 people. A Wurlitzer Hope Jones Unit Orchestra that cost $35,000, equivalent to a 56-piece orchestra, in addition to the organ tones, a model heating and ventilating system that provides for ice cooling the air in the summer, are some of the features of this photoplay palace.

The Paramount and Triangle services will be used in the Liberty and Coliseum theaters.

RECEIPTS INCREASE.

Raising Admission Price Has Helped Business Markedly.

That the 15 cents admission charge in the Portland downtown houses has come to stay is demonstrated by the box office receipts for the past week after the plan had had a month's tryout.

"Three weeks in October at 15 cents have gotten us considerably more money than a full month at 10 cents, and there is no sign of decreasing business," says Edwin James, of the Majestic theater.

E. J. Myrick, manager of the Columbia, said his house is drawing the biggest crowds in its history. All records for Sunday attendance were broken at the initial showing of "An Alien." The S. R. O. sign was out early in the afternoon.

I. Leeser Cohen, secretary of the Portland Amusement Company, controling the Globe, American and Casino theaters, former 5-cent houses, now charging 10 cents, reports the patronage in his theaters excellent and that the raise to 10 cents is entirely successful.

CHANGES AT THE GENERAL.

Frank L. Hudson, who recently took charge of the General Film Company's Portland branch, has surrendered his office to L. A. Todd, another of the company's lieutenants. This makes the fourth man to occupy the manager's chair within the past ten weeks.

C. S. Alderman has replaced Leonard Clark as booker. Mr. Alderman was formerly booker for Pathe at San Francisco.

NEW METRO OFFICE.

Metro has moved its office from the Northwest Bank building and is now located at 72 Broadway, on the ground floor, where exhibitors will have no trouble finding it. The new office was the stand the Mutual occupied before moving to Oak street. The interior has been thoroughly renovated, modern fixtures have been installed and Portland Metro is now a real businesslike exchange.

Harry Cohen, who has been in the Northwest for some time organizing the offices in the territory, has retained P. E. Noble as head of the Portland branch. Mr. Noble conducted the Metro office under Grombacher and Bailey. C. J. Kerr, formerly head of Mutual's Portland branch, has cast his lot with Metro and will conduct the Seattle office. F. A. Tipton, formerly of the Butte, Mont., office of the General Film Company, was in Portland conferring with Mr. Cohen and will have charge of Butte's Metro office. Mr. Cohen advises that upon the opening day of the Portland office he received many congratulatory messages on the new venture. Mr. Cohen will divide his time between Portland, Seattle and Butte during the next few weeks.

BIOGRAPH.

WEAVER OF CLAYBANK (Special—Two parts—Nov. 9).—The cast: Ivan Christy, Charles H. Mailes, Mary Malatesta, Joseph McDermott.

The schoolmaster's daughter falls in love with Tom Weaver, an eccentric character, who supports himself by doing odd jobs of carpentering, but is always ready to drop his tools and snuffle a prayer or a sermon if he can get a handful of people to listen. Her father disapproves of her choice. Weaver, feeling that he is not wanted, keeps away from his sweetheart, spending his leisure in exhortations to the poor whites of Claybank to mend their ways. To divert his daughter's mind from her lover, the schoolmaster takes her to visit two girl cousins in a neighboring village. He must go back to Claybank, and she says she will walk home. She does not arrive, and a search is instituted. Learning that Weaver is not at his shop, the schoolmaster becomes convinced that the carpenter is responsible for his daughter's disappearance.

In the woods between Claybank and the village, the girl's hat is found. Signs of a struggle are apparent. With a posse of friends at his back, the schoolmaster visits the slums, where Weaver is almost always to be found. A halfwit meets them and says that the girl is in the shack of his brother, the town bully. The schoolmaster knows that his daughter has met the town bully while out walking with Weaver and is afraid of him. Before the door of the shack the posse finds the bully on guard, with an axe in his hand. Believing they are after him, the bully shows fight. As he is swinging the axe, the door opens and Weaver appears. Wresting the axe from the bully, he knocks him down and stands guard over him until the sheriff arrives and takes him to prison.

The girl comes out of the shack and is clasped in her father's arms. She tells how, on the way home, she was seized by the bully and taken to the shack. His halfwit brother had learned of her presence and, to get even with the bully, who had won all his money at gambling, had told Weaver. The carpenter had rescued her just before the posse arrived. On learning how greatly he has misjudged Weaver, the schoolmaster consents to receive him as his son-in-law.

THE LAUREL OF TEARS (Special—Three parts—Nov. 10).—The cast: Versa Sisson, Madge Kirby, G. Raymond Nye, Jose Ruben, Charles H. Mailes.

Esther Bourne, a public stenographer, desires to become a novelist. She realizes that one must creep before trying to walk, and sends short stories to the magazines. They are all returned as unsuitable, and she despairs. But Leonard Ames, writer and critic, who has rooms in the same building, encourages Esther to keep on trying. He warns her, however, that to depict life one must have lived and suffered. One day a girl applies for employment at Esther's office, and, on being refused, faints at the door. Esther revives her and learns her story.

Her recent employer, Mason Downs, a promoter of mining enterprises, had taken advantage of the girl's situation to insult her. Only a knock on the door had saved her from further ill treatment at his hands. Afraid to return for her wages, she had sought employment in vain. Esther takes Dora Thomas home with her and installs her as housekeeper of the little flat. Then she goes to Downs' office for the girl's wages. The promoter takes her card, and later, being still without a stenographer when an important report has to be written, calls on Esther at her office. He also has an employee follow her home to learn her address, because Dora is there.

Dick Stuart, a mining engineer, brings to Esther's office a report to be copied. When it is completed he takes it to Downs, who has engaged him to report on a worthless mine. Downs tries to bribe Stuart to make a favorable report, and, failing, determines to forge a new report above the engineer's signature. He takes the work to Esther, who, recognizing that there is something queer about the transaction, calls up Stuart. He tells Downs what he thinks of him, and the latter, enraged, hounds Esther as a stenographer who betrays the confidence of her employers. As a result she loses patronage and is forced to close her office. Stuart becomes a steady caller at the flat, and Esther sees him falling in love with Dora.

At last Dora discovers the state of affairs and, through gratitude to Esther, determines to go away. She answers an offer of employment and finds herself in Downs' clutches. The promoter tricks her into sending for Esther, who calls up Stuart and goes at once to the house, where, as she expects, Downs tells her: "You robbed me of a fortune and you are going to pay!" Using all her wits, she cajoles him until he is off guard for an instant, then sets fire to the house and frees Dora. Under the title of "The Love That Failed," Esther writes her life story and wins fame.

ROSA AND THE AUTHOR (Nov. 11).—The cast: Augusta Anderson, W. J. Butler, Laura LaVarnie, Charles Perley, Hector V. Sarno.

Rosa, belle of the Italian colony, was still fancy free when the young author came to live under her father's roof. He was totally unlike any man she had known—too deeply absorbed in his work to notice that the Italian girl was dying of love for him. Her faithful suitor, Pasquale, and her parents knew what was troubling her but the author did not discover it for a long time. Then he went away, promising to return. But he never came back. Roaming the streets with Pasquale, who played the concertina while she sang, Rosa attracted the attention of an impresario with her beautiful voice. A stage career opened before her.

In a few years she was famous. Then the author, called upon to write an opera, met her again in the manager's office. He did not at first recognize, in this radiant creature, Rosa of the East Side, but then he fell victim to her charms. Pasquale, insanely jealous, attacked the author with a knife, but was disarmed by Rosa. When the author asked her to marry him, Rosa had her revenge. 'You did not come back to Rosa," she said; "but you are willing to marry the famous prima donna! Is it not so?" And from him, humiliated, she turned to the faithful Pasquale, whose love had remained unchanged by her success.

The woman of the camp implores her lover to marry her, and he promises to do so, but goes away and does not return. Target of the camp's jeers, she lives alone until her child is born—dead. The doctor fears for her reason if she discovers that all her shame and anguish have been in vain. He has another maternity case on the outskirts of the camp, where the Saint, as the trapper's wife is known, dies in giving birth to a child. For the sake of the baby and of the woman bereft, the doctor gains the trapper's consent to a plan, and brings his two patients together.

The woman's quarters being squalid, the doctor insists that she go to the trapper's cabin, and the trapper moves out to make room for her. The sight of his child drawing life from an alien breast has awakened the trapper's soul. And the touch of baby hands the strangeness of human kindness, stir the God within the woman. The doctor hopes to see her marry the trapper. At this moment the woman's former lover returns, bent on making such amends as he can. He, too, has discovered the living God within him. At the doctor's suggestion the woman chooses between the two men. For a long time she hesitates, then places her hand in the trapper's palm.

VITAGRAPH.

SONNY JIM AND THE GREAT AMERICAN GAME (Nov. 15).—The cast: Bobby Connelly, Tefft Johnson, Mabel Kelly, John Cowdick, Johnny Cahill, Edwina Robbins, Logan Paul, Mae Greene, William Lally.

Like all normal boys, Sonny Jim lives, eats and talks baseball, when it is in season, so no sooner does little Heinie challenge his team to a game the following Saturday, when Sonny and all the other little "Christy Mathewsons" begin practicing drops, out-curves, etc., with feverish energy. Sonny carelessly lets a fast one go through Miss Squibbs' window, arousing that lady's ire, and bringing heavy punishment on his head. He is ordered by Daddy to stay in the house every afternoon that week. Sonny feels pretty badly when Saturday comes around and Daddy does not relent. Sent on an errand by his mother, Sonny sees his team manfully battling with Heine's team and being defeated. He plunges into the game and puts new enthusiasm into his teammates. GONE TO THE DOGS (Special—Two parts—Nov. 16).—The cast: Antonio Moreno, Frankie Mann, Donald Hall, Josephine Earle, Harry Handworth, Nellie Anderson.

Willie Buckland, a gypsy, tells his white friend the story of his life and incidentally explains why he and his wife always return each year to that same spot to hear the chimes in the village church. His face working with emotion he tells how, years before, he and little Jane, the gypsy maid were pals and sweethearts. How they grew up together, in the wild gypsy life, until his father died and he went to the city with money in his pockets; how he had met "The Painted Woman," how he spent his last cent on her, and then found she had conceived a pure love for him.

Soon he felt the insistent call of the road, but he promises to stay with the woman until she dies, which will not be long, for she is failing rapidly. One night he stole out into the meadows outside the city, and stumbled upon Jane's camp. He heard her announce her love for him, and, filled with hope, returns to the city, where the Painted Woman dies in his arms. Penniless and ill, he wandered out into the street and thence to the meadows, where he is found by Jane and nursed back to health. From his delirious ravings she fears his love is insincere and when he is well she tells him that if he finds her wherever she may wander, one year from that date, that she will believe him and marry him. If not, she will take it as a sign that he has gone back to the white people.

A long weary year passes, but Buckland has not found her, until, when he has given up hope, he arrives in that very village just as the chimes are ringing, and there he finds Jane. His story finished, Buckland points to Jane and their children with a happy smile, as both men think of how Jane brought back her husband when he had apparently "gone to the dogs."

Unfortunately, the note gets into Dad's hands, and he turns the tables on Jack. Father and Bessie start for the boarding school, and in a lonely spot Dad pretends the gas has given out. He leaves the car, Jack comes up, steals her away, and a short distance beyond the gasoline in his tri-car gives out. Poor Bessie is left in that dark and spooky road while he goes after gas, with the result that an hour later, when Dad shows up in his car, she weepingly begs to be taken home, to boarding school, or anywhere, away from that dreadful Jack! LETTERS FROM A SELF MADE EXHIBITOR TO HIS SON

New York City, October 31, 1915.
My Dear Bill:

The other evening I managed to steal away from business for a couple of hours and your mother and I dropped into the Strand, at Broadway and Forty-seventh St. Lots of big restaurant men delight in strange cooking, you know, and I think it must be this same peculiar twist of human nature which makes me delight in motion pictures which I see projected in some theatre other than my own. The program proved only mildly interesting, and while I sat there I got to thinking of this old problem of equipment.

As you know, the Strand has had them coming ever since it opened its doors—and with good reason. Remarkable attention for the finer details of the exhibiting business has put the proposition over. Everything is of the best—service, pictures, and equipment. As I thought of this it struck me that perhaps the greatest argument in favor of the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN which you have recently installed in your house in Providence is the simple fact that that same screen is admittedly the piece de resistance of all of the Strand's wonderful equipment, which makes for projection results second to none in the world.

People who'd never think of going to the neighborhood picture house are regular patrons of the Strand here in New York, and most of them go because the pictures shown are so soft and velvety to the eye. You know and I know that the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN is the answer. Your RADIUM GOLD FIBRE and mine are giving us the same results and I think we're perfectly safe in sitting back comfortably to await the day when the manufacturer of some other screen can show us something nearly as good.

As you know, we are sailing for Bermuda next week and you will probably not hear from me again for some time. Be good and things will come your way.

Yours,
DAD.

Dr. Carr objects to Rose attending Mrs. King's third function, a Babylonian Marriage Mart, but Rose coaxes her mother to permit her to attend. Herb denounces her and breaks their engagement.

A few days later Mrs. Croll decides to give a function that will eclipse any of those of her rival, and Rose is invited to an indoor surf bathing tea. At this society event, Bayley again demonstrates his affection for Rose. At the minister's home, the Rev. Dr. Carr and his wife discuss the great change that has come over their daughter. There is considerable of the uplift about the position and all Bud is required to do is to man the windlass which raises supplies to Sneeze, who works on the scaffold.

About the same time, Spike steals a pocketbook belonging to Mrs. Sneeze. A limb of the law sees the theft and goes after him. Spike flees until he reaches a spot directly beneath the scaffold on which Sneeze is working. Paint has made the sidewalk slippery and Spike takes a tumble. The windlass hook accidentally catches in Sneeze's clothes. Mistaking the man's effort to free himself for the hoisting signal, Bud man's the windlass. The heavy load causes him to release the crank for the purpose of limbering his hands—and down tumbles Sneeze, landing atop of Spike, the cop and Mrs. Sneeze, who by this time have caught up with the former.

In his blind rage, Sneeze attacks Spike, but is suddenly raised skyward by Bud, who is again manning the windlass. Just as Sneeze reaches the roof, Bud, discovering the identity of the load he has hoisted, again drops the painter atop the struggling trio below and flees for his life.

Later, when Ethel's pa finds Bud innocently stealing a kiss from Marie, the cook, he gets an idea. Bud is confronted by Tempest who offers to present him with $500 upon condition that he wed Marie. Pleased with his idea, Tempest tells Mike all about it, and arranges to have Bud and Marie, and Mike and Ethel married at the same time. On the day of the event, Bud imprisons Marie in the refrigerator, while Ethel dons the cook's bridal attire. While Tempest and Mike impatiently wait for Ethel, Bud's sweetheart, a veil covering her face, takes her place by his side. Bud demands his $500 and gets it. He then informs Tempest of his great desire to be married immediately. Glad to get Bud out of the way, the father agrees and the ceremony is performed. Barely is this over when Pete, a policeman, brings in the real Marie, who has been frozen solid. Then, while Mike and Tempest stare in amazement, Ethel raises the vail, blithely kisses Bud, and then speeds out of the house with him.

Communicating with his pals outside, Daly informs them as to the date upon which he is to be taken from the jail to State's prison. On the day the holdup is to be staged, Kling and his pals abandon their original plan when they see a railroad clerk carrying a moneybag. Knocking the man unconscious, the bandits steal the money. Kling sends his men to raise the Ewing drawbrings and thus hold up the train, while he, appropriating the clerk's handcar, carries the loot to their rendezvous.

Helen, however, learns what has occurred. Derailing Kling's car, the girl seizes the moneybag as it drops to the ground, places the car upon the track and then speeds away before Kling, half-stunned, can pursue her. Traveling at full speed, the girl telegrapher is within thirty feet of the drawbridge when it commences to rise. There is no time to halt the handcar. Helen therefore throws the moneybag aside and leaps for the rising structure just as the car hurtles into the river below. The crooks on the opposite side of the stream see what has taken place and, when Helen climbs down the bridge, attempt to capture her. By this time, the train on which Daly is being taken to prison, approaches. Helen's plight is seen and a number of men go to her rescue. Daly attempts to escape but is speedily subdued. Later, the moneybag is recovered and Kling and the entire band captured.

AN EYE TOO MANY (Nov. 11).—Connie loves a girl. She seems to like him more than a little bit. There is only one thing that stands between them and the chiming of the wedding bells—money, the root of evil. He must get some money if he's to marry the girl.

To make matters worse, the theatrical company of which he is a member is in dire straits (to put it mildly). It is decided to give a benefit at the sailors' home to get some funds together. Connie gets quite a collection of coin from the rich widow, Leigh, who mourns the loss of her darling sailor boy who has disappeared and has not been heard of in many years. Connie sees his photograph and marvels at the wonderful likeness between the long lost sailor lad and himself.

Connie sees light. He'll get the widow's bankroll and marry the girl. The dentist pulls out his four front teeth. The tattoo artist works faithfully on Connie's arms, back and chest. He then returns to the widow—he is her long lost darling sailor boy and the pain is compensated by the rosy picture he visionizes of the future. The widow is excited. Yes, he has the anchor, the pig, the snake, the statue of liberty; he is minus the four teeth. But her son had only one eye. Connie has an eye too many! That is too much for Connie.

A PAIR OF BIRDS (Nov. 19).—Pokes and Runt are in jail. Tired of the lockstep and hard labor, they try many times to escape, but meet with little success. Their latest trial—the rubbish route—lands them back where they started from when Runt gets a bright idea. With the aid of a burlap bag, they scale the walls and make their get-a-way.

Fatty is taking a stroll by the river and, the day being hot, he decides to take a swim. He does so and hides his clothes under a tree. Pokes and Runt pass this spot and, seeing Fatty's suit, decide that "one suit will do in a pinch for two." Fatty finishes his swim and returns for his clothes. By this time guards have discovered the escape and are in hot pursuit of anything wearing stripes. They see an object among the underbrush and fire at it, chase it for some distance, but upon catching it find that it is not their quarry, but Fatty in a suit of striped B. V. D.'s searching for his clothes.

Meanwhile Pokes and Runt have met a couple of fair charmers and, with the money they find in Fatty's suit, they are having a fine time. They go to the summer amusement park and try all the amusements. The guards, still in pursuit, also spy a couple of vivacious chickens and also seek the amusement park. When they see the guards, Pokes and Runt run for all their lives. After many mishaps and a watery plunge they surrender to the guards and are once more happy to receive the protection of the striped suits and stone walls and glad to return to the task of making little ones out of big ones.

Mrs. Whine loves dogs. Hubby Whine loves Wifey Whine all right, but dogs, gosh! but he hates them. Mrs. Whine buys a whoof and Hubby Whine buys a drink. That settles it! A short fight, but a sure one. Wifey Whine leaves home. She goes to a hotel and hires a room to think it over. Not to be outdone, Hubby Whine follows and gets the room next door, but Wifey Whine doesn't know it. Then, oh then, the terrible shock. Hubby hears a man's voice in the next room—"I love only you," followed by a volley of kisses. That is too much for any hubby. The door is smashed and Hubby Whine rushes in to confront the wrecker of his happiness. True, he's a mighty big fellow, but hubby is game and the fight commences.

Hubby was there at the start, but at the finish—ah! 'tis too sad to tell. It's awful when the fellow who breaks your heart sort of tones up the affair by breaking your bones, too. Then—the woman appears. Hubby, or rather what is left of him, collapses. She isn't his wife at all! The hotel manager says that wifey left an hour ago. And hubby never knew it! The people in the room are Mr. and Mrs. Eggley, rehearsing for their new vaudeville act. Hubby enters his home on rubber-heeled crutches. There is wifey waiting for him, ready to make up. Hubby will never again object to dogs—no, not Hubby Whine.

Henry Halstrom, man of wealth, is struck by the beauty of Mary, John Desmond's wife. John, who is in Halstrom's employ, although unable to afford the luxuries of life, is very happily married with Mary and the lives of the two are bound up in the love for Jackie, their little son. Halstrom, accustomed to possess all he desires, decides that Mary shall be his. He sends John to Chicago on a lengthy mission of business. Then, playing on her weakness—appealing to her vanity, offering her all the luxuries and fineries of life, which she has ever craved and been unable to possess—he gradually wins her over to him. Mrs. Barnes, her mother, alarmed at her behavior and the sudden appearance of her wonderful gowns, telegraphs to John to return home immediately. In despair, Mary writes Halstrom of her mother's act. He sends her a note, telling her that she may make her home with him. Fearing John's wrath, Mary goes to Halstrom, carelessly leaving his note behind at her home. Halstrom, anxious to avoid John's knowledge of the truth, hastens to Mary's house to get the note before John's arrival.

Little Jackie is playing with his teddy bear. Teddy has been naughty, and Jackie decides to punish him. He tip-toes to the writing-desk and gets papa's revolver. Unconscious of the deadliness of the weapon, innocent little babe, he aims at teddy bear and pulls the trigger. Halstrom has been spying through the window to make sure of a clear road before coming into the house for his letter. The bullet speeds on and plunges through his brain. John return home. "I have been thoughtless but not wicked," pleads Mary, and for little Jackie's sake and the wholesome love they once knew he leads her back home. The verdict of God has been passed by a child in judgment.

BLACK EAGLE (Nov. 20).—The cast: Margaret Prussin, Richard Tucker, Augustus Phillips, Brad Sutton, Louis B. Foley and Florence Stover.

Barbara Dunbar comes West to visit her uncle Thompson. She gets her first glimpse of Black Eagle when he holds up the stage on which she rides. Once arrived at her destination, she meets Dick Rockwell, and the old saying "East is East and West is West, and never the twain shall meet" goes to smash. The East and the West blend pretty well. It is a case of love at first sight. Dick Rockwell has a mission in life. He sells his share in the ranch and prepares to leave for the city at sunrise. He is going to find the man who has caused his sister's death. Black Eagle hears of Dick's decision, knows of the large amount which he got for the ranch, and arranges to hold him up.

That night, Barbara sees Black Eagle and his band from her window. All the men in her house have left for the round-up, so, mounting a horse, she rides ten miles through the night to warn Dick of his danger. Her love for him outweighs all the stories she has heard from Joe Hawkins about him and "a certain woman who is now dead." Black Eagle enters Dick's cabin, but Dick is prepared. In the struggle, the Eagle is unmasked, and Dick falls back aghast. The Eagle is none other than his chum, Drew. Barbara, however, has met him in the East. "His name is not Drew, it is Richard Childs," she cries. Immediately, Dick recognizes the name his sister breathed when she died.

The chance for revenge has come—Dick springs on Childs. In the struggle, Childs draws a knife and is about to plunge it into Dick, but Barbara has recovered from the first shock of the fight. She grasps a gun and shoots him. Black Eagle, the bandit, and Richard Childs, the cause of the little sister's death, is no more. Barbara has learned the true story about "the woman." She turns to Dick and their embrace brings the East and the West together for all time.

Brown receives the missive and is heartbroken. Johnny, his son, declares it a dirty trick on his father, while Mrs. Brown is moved to tears. Brown becomes filled with determination and, notwithstanding the pleadings of his wife to remain at home with her and their small children, he shaves his moustache, and, lying about his age, is accepted by the recruiting officers. In the months which follow, he and Tom Simms, who are in the same company, see much active service at the front, and upon one occasion Brown saves the life of Tom at the risk of his own, losing thereby his right arm. He receives a medal for valor. The newspaper, however, gets the name reversed and Alice feels chagrined that her brother should have saved Brown's life. When Brown arrives home, however, the truth comes out and Alice begs forgiveness from the man she has wronged. With aching heart Brown learns that Johnny has enlisted and is leaving for the front. Months later Alice, who has enlisted as a Red Cross nurse, comes upon a huddled, broken, youthful body. It is Johnny Brown, and in the pocket of his blouse she discovers the white feather she sent to Brown in her rage. The feather is red with the boy's life blood.

THE MASKED SUBSTITUTE (Two parts—Nov. 14).—The cast: Wm. C. Dowlan, Gloria Fonda, Wm. Quinn, Gladys Johnson, Neil Hardin, Jean Hathaway, L. M. Wells.

June Clay, in her mountain home, is loved by Jim Dexter, a forest ranger. She returns his love, but will not consent to marry him, because she is always longing for the wealth and luxury which she sees displayed at the big hunting lodge near. She has met Earl Metcalf, who lives at the lodge and is a ward of Earl's father. Olive and Earl have been sweethearts since childhood, and a marriage between them has been arranged which is to be announced that night at a masked ball at the Lodge. Olive, in the meantime, has become fascinated by the flattery and suave manner of Victor Melville.

Victor, on learning that the marriage is to be formally announced at the ball, becomes desperate, and asks Olive to elope with him. Olive declines, because of the opposition that will be raised, and says she could not leave as her presence would soon be missed. Just then Victor notices June, who is looking longingly at the gay masqueraders, and wishing she could be one of the them also. Victor tells Olive that as June has the same color hair and is of the same height, she could wear the masquerade costume, take Olive's place, and Olive would be free to go. The exchange is afterward made and Olive and Victor leave in an auto.

June is gracious to Earl, who is delighted, as he loves Olive and he thinks Olive's loyalty toward him is returning. The mother announces the engagement, at which the guests laughingly cry, "Let's unmask his future wife." At that June becomes frightened and starts to run from the room. The guests laughingly chase after her, Earl in the lead. They finally elude the others and Earl takes her in his arms. She then unmasks and tells him what Olive and she have done. He is in despair as he realizes Olive has run away with a scoundrel.

In the meantime, Victor has told Olive that the auto has broken down and gets her to go into a roadhouse, while he has it repaired. She has her mask on, so no one will recognize her and she consents. He becomes insulting and she struggles fiercely to get out of the room. The forest ranger, while patrolling, hears a woman scream. He sees through the window and, as Olive has on June's clothes, he thinks it is his sweetheart. He shoots Victor just as Earl and June break through the door. Explanations follow. Olive realizes the worth of her childhood sweetheart, and June knows Jim Dexter is the only Prince Charming for her.

Jim has known for some time that Frank has been associating with a clique of men who spend much of their incomes on gambling. Frank is heavily in debt to a gambler by the name of Burton. Fearing exposure, Frank forges a check. Jim himself assumes blame for the crime. The enraged father orders him from the house. Jim, thrown upon his own resources, starts to write a play.

accidentally wounded by the gambler, Burton, and believing that he is going to die, confesses to his father that he is the real forger.

The old man is heart-broken at the injustice to Jim and sends for him. Meanwhile Elsie Le Roy, in her true guise, has gone to the producing manager and had Jim's play accepted as a vehicle for herself the following season. Jim is delayed at home several days by the serious illness of his brother. Eventually, the danger being passed, he returns to the lodgings and finds that Mag has gone, leaving no address. The rehearsals of the play progress and Jim is sent for to meet the star, Miss Elsie Le Roy. He meets her at the theater, and she, believing him to be a cad in having deserted Mag, treats him coldly. He, however, admires her immensely, and tells her enough of his story and of his brother's sickness so that she half relents. A few days later Jim receives a note from the lodging house signed by Mag, requesting an interview. He returns to the lodging house. He squares himself with her and in the denouement, when she removes her apron, he finds that Elsie Le Roy and Mag are the same person.

Bill, having decided on a day's fishing, casts his line into the river. A nibble on the line causes him to draw in his line quickly, and, to his surprise, a boot is caught on the end of his line. Violet and a number of girls are off for a picnic, and are scouting around for a desirable spot to spread their luncheon. Bill falls asleep and rolls into the water. He undresses himself and hangs his wet clothes on the bushes nearby. Then he jumps into the water to await the drying of his clothes. A goat from a nearby farm wends its way to the bushes and eats Bill's clothes.

Violet and the girls find the desirable location where the goat has just finished eating unfortunate Bill's clothes. The girls are about to enjoy their luncheon when a snake scares the girls away. Bill, seeing his opportunity, wraps the tablecloth about his body and starts to go home. Twilight having set in, a negro, who has just stolen a number of chickens in a bag, sees Bill dressed in the white tablecloth, thinks he is a ghost, and runs for dear life, dropping the bag of chickens. Bill picks up the chickens and again starts for home. A farmer, discovering his loss, starts on a hunt for the culprit, and sees Bill carrying the bag of chickens. He takes Bill to the sheriff, who, after listening to Bill's plea, starts for the scene of Bill's misfortune. They see the evidence of Bill's plight and release him. Left alone, Bill picks up the boot that he had fished out of the water and discovers a bottle inside containing a note requesting the finder to communicate with the writer at a certain address.

Violet, who wrote the note, is duly advised of Bill's intended visit. She confides in a number of her girl friends, who decide that she must dress herself up as an old maid. She follows out the suggestion. Bill calls on Violet. When he sees Violet in her old maid make-up he takes to his heels, followed by Violet. The chase leads through a field where a bull, angered by the color of Violet's dress, dashes madly after her. She is rescued from the maddened bull by Bill. During the chase Violet has lost part of her old maid's costume. She looks at Bill, who loses no time in capturing his prize.

THOSE KIDS AND CUPID (Nov. 8).—The cast. Ray Gallagher, Billie Rhodes, Harry Rattenberry, Stella Adams, Neal Burns.

Ray arrives at his sweetheart's home fortified with a large box of candy. Billie, the girl, hears him coming, and the kid sister, ever on the alert, announces the arrival of sister's beau. Ray comes in and is bashful in the presence of the family. Thinking to break the ice, he offers the box of candy, which is passed around. Meanwhile, the kid sister has called in a neighbor's kid and the two come in just in time to see the box making its rounds. There is a wild scramble and they make a dent in the candy. Father at once takes his kid to task and gives her a spanking.

All adjourn to the parlor, while Ray and his girl play to fool the old folks, they succeed in getting many stolen caresses under the noise of the music. Finally father decides it is time for him and his wife to turn in and, sending the neighbor's kid home, takes his own upstairs. Before leaving he admonishes the caller that "office hours" are up at eleven o'clock. The kids get together again, and, sore because they got spanked for stealing the candy, decide to play a trick on the caller. They take the silverware from the room and fill Ray's overcoat pockets.

Ray and his girl, left alone, proceed to make love. The kids in the neighborhood are a mischievious lot and they tie the doorknobs of all the doors. The kids make a noise in tying the door of Billie's home—and father asks Billie if Ray is leaving. She says he has gone, and when father has returned to bed Billie and Ray sneak to the sofa, and in trying to keep quiet, both fall asleep. When the cuckoo clock makes a terrific noise and strikes two, they awake. Father hears them and Billie explains she had fallen asleep. Ray tries to sneak out, but the door resists his efforts to open and father thinks he is a burglar. When dad gets his old muzzle loader into action there is some fast action, and Ray breaks out at last but is pursued by the old man.

Just as the boy congratulates himself upon his lucky escape he is taken in by a cop and rushed to the station where the silverware is found on him. He is arrested. Next morning the silver is missed and father calls the station. The sergeant informs him that they have both the thief and the silver, and asks him to come to claim his goods. The kids arrive at this time and confess their trick. When father and the girl arrive at the jail. Ray gladly promises he will never stay out late again, so father secures his release.

Neil is in love with a popular actress. Father, hearing this, remonstrates with his son for being in love with an actress, threatening to disown him if he continues. The actress has a host of admirers and one of the most ardent is the manager. That night Neil attends the show and his lady love looks better than ever. Father, in order to cool his anger, takes mother to the same show and, seeing the flirtation between their only son and the actress, are very much wrought up.

When the act is over the manager meets the actress behind the scenes and tries to "pan" her for encouraging Neil, but she spiritedly tells him to mind his own business. Neil arrives and takes the girl to a restaurant for refreshments. The manager follows them and his jealousy flames up when he sees the attention the girl pays to Neil. The actress, in order not to break with the manager, shows him some attention, and this gets Neil peeved. He leaves her. Arriving home, he and father have it out, and Neil is finally kicked out for good.

Not being a son of the "idle rich," he immediately looks for work. The first place he finds is a job as waiter and upon learning that it is the same place he has been patronizing he is undecided, but realizing his penniless condition he accepts. In order to keep the girl from finding out his low position he decides on a disguise. That night after the show the manager takes the actress to a cafe. It happens to be the one where Neil works. He sees them enter and a scheme to overthrow his rival immediately occurs to him. He takes their order, which he transfers to a brother waiter. The manager is peeved, but the girl insists on Neil joining them. They have a merry party and Neil insists on ordering only the best, and some of the rival's resentment gives way when Neil tells him that he is "standing" the bill.

Neil leaves on a pretext. He then resumes his disguise as a waiter and demands the bill. The manager is flustered and is forced to borrow money from his fair companion. She "gets wise" to Neil's disguise and between the two of them the manager's downfall is complete. Ray decides he will not take any more chances, so he marries the girl the next day. Neil breaks the news to father, thinking that perhaps he will relent, but on the contrary, father is angrier than ever. The actress then decides that she will take a hand in the game. She makes an appointment with father, who, although old, still enjoys a meal with a "chicken." The next night father takes her to the restaurant where Ray is waiter. The actress flirts with father, who places his arm around her. Ray throws the curtains aside and they are discovered. It is up to father to forgive them or take the consequences. He forgives them and takes them home to mother, who receives them with open arms. Father acknowledges that he has had a lucky escape.

INSET ODDITIES (On same reel as "The Prankful Ponies" Oct. 21).—This film shows the tropical members of the insect world the beautiful and the dangerous. It was filmed at the studio of Curator Raymond L. Ditmars of the New York Zoological Park. It shows first the scarabs of Egypt, then the luminous beetle, which, when tapped gently on the head, sends out a ray of light strong enough to take moving pictures by night with. Mexican women use these luminous beetles as ornaments at parties.

Next the cricket is shown at close range and then we see the katydid rubbing its wings together to make the "katydid" noise. These moving pictures of the katydid are very rare and were taken after weeks of the most painstaking "watchful waiting."

Then we are shown the amazing walking stick bug, which knows how to fool the birds

Mathew King is the wealthy owner of a vineyard. He is about to be married to Flora Kellette, a pampered and petted girl. Her mother has bred in her a desire for expensive things, and she urges the marriage, for King is rich. Flora imagines herself in love with Frank Wolff. Frank is poor and she consequently refuses him. Soon after the wedding, Flora begins to find fault with the home her husband has given her. Flora, to lighten the dull life, invites her friends to week-end parties. The automobile parties overrun the place. Wolff, naturally, is a member of these parties, and Flora sees considerable of him. King sees them together one evening and learns that his wife married him for his money and that she is in love with Wolff.

King remains silent about what he has heard. His brother, Alan, a young business man is out visiting him and he discovers King in his grief. King finally tells his brother of his suspicions and of his determination to make his wife pay in full, and to uphold her part of the establishment as a wife should. His first step is to dismiss the guests his wife has at the house. Flora is chagrined and furious. King then dismisses the servant and informs Flora that it is up to her to do the housework and cook for him. The girl, at first rebels, and takes to her room. She even goes so far as to pack, intending to return to her mother; but she remembers that her mother is now entirely depending upon her for support. She finally submits in a grudging manner.

Mrs. Kellete, meanwhile, hears of the treatment her daughter is receiving, and rushes out to interfere. King terminates her interview with him abruptly. She rushes to her daughter again, and brings up the question of money. Mrs. Kellette needs a fresh supply. King interrupts the conversation by explaining that he is ruined. Mrs. Kellette urges her daughter to come with her, but Flora, disgusted with her mother's selfishness, refuses to do so. King takes his wife to live in a neighboring village, where he goes to work as a common vineyard hand. Wolff, meanwhile, has come into some money. He has heard Flora's treatment, and goes in search of her, intending to urge her to leave King and go with him.

King returns home one night to find his wife entertaining Wolff, who has asked Flora to elope with him. Both are fearful when King enters. For the moment King, neither by sign or look, lets on that he has overheard, and smiles and talks as if nothing had happened. Later in the evening King evidently prepares to leave the house, simply saying that he does not know when he will return. When King steps outside the door Wolff moves quickly to her side. She shoves him away and rushes to the door with a cry to call her husband back.

King hears the cry and knows that his wife has finally given her love to him. He turns back and takes his wife in his arms. Back in the room, he bears down upon Wolff and is only prevented from manhandling him by Flora. During this time, King, believing that his wife was learning to love him, and remembering her criticism of his former home, had a new house built. The story ends with him introducing the girl to the new place.

THE BROKEN COIN (Episode No. 20—"Danger on the High Seas"—Two Parts—Nov. 1).—Kitty, Count Frederick and the demented sailor are on the cliff of the South Sea Island, waving frantic signals to the yacht, a short distance out, when suddenly they find themselves surrounded by the blood-thirsty natives. On board the yacht the owner, looking through his glasses, sees Kitty, Frederick and the sailor being tortured by natives. He orders a number of his men to arm themselves and go to the rescue. The sailors succeed in rescuing Kitty, Frederick and the sailor to say nothing of the monkey, and take them on board the Princess.

In Gretzhoffen, Michael and his drunken friends turn the stately old palace into a modern cabaret. Count Sachio, after searching for several hours for both parts of the coin, fails to find the hiding place of the papers and, waiting his chance, succeeds in leaving Gretzhoffen. Upon returning to Grahoffen he reports his failure to his king. King Philip is enraged and orders Sachio to mobolize every available man, woman and child, if necessary, and be ready to take Gretzhoffen within a week.

After securely hiding her half of the coin and the charred papers which she had discovered in the old sailor's chest, Kitty puts on a fresh yachting dress given her by the stewardess, and goes above to thank the owner, Mr. Wyndham, for rescuing her. Arriving in the saloon she finds Count Frederick in one of Mr. Wyndham's suits. She is rather glad to meet Count Frederick again, for Mr. Wyndham's strange glances rather frighten her. In Gretzhoffen the Prime Minister sobers up and looks about for means of getting rid of the drunken guests with whom the puppet Michael insists on filling the palace. In Grahoffen, Sachio begins the mobilization of the troops and citzens of the little principality, and they lay in stores of arms and ammunition.

Alone in the saloon on board the Princess, Kitty is accosted by Mr. Wyndham. Her screams attract Count Frederick, who happens to be nearby. He throws the owner to the floor, and starts to leave the cabin with Kitty when he is stopped by Mr. Wyndham, who calls his sailors and orders Frederick and the sailor put in irons. Wyndham succeeds in locking Kitty and himself into his cabin and starts taunting her with her helplessness, not realizing that at that moment Count Frederick, in the hold below, has succeeded in freeing himself. Disarming one of the deckhands, Frederick leaves him in charge of the old sailor, while he goes above and forces the wireless operator to send a message to the Prime Minister of Gretzhoffen, telling him that he is on board and to send a boat to meet them. This is seen by one of the mates who rushes to the cabin, and, pounding on the locked door, tells Wyndham's of Frederick's escape. Wyndham at once forgets about Kitty for the moment and orders Frederick again put

THE BROKEN COIN (Episode No. 21, "A Timely Rescue"—Two parts—Nov. 8).—Kitty on board the "Princess" is locked in the cabin with Wyndham, the owner. Realizing Kitty's helplessness, Frederick, in the boiler room of the ship, tries to loosen the chains that bind him, in order to get to Kitty's rescue, but to no avail. In Gretzhoffen, the Prime Minister receives Frederick's wireless message and with a few soldiers boards a speedy yacht and goes in pursuit of the Princess. In Grahoffen, Sachio and King Philip succeed in mobilizing an overpowering army and decide to enter Gretzhoffen by way of a channel, to avoid discovery of their intended attack upon the little kingdom.

On board the "Princess" Kitty is forced to submit to the advances of Wyndham. Suddenly Wyndham hears the approaching yacht with the Prime Minister and is forced to give up his hold on Kitty. Boarding the "Princess," the Prime Minister and soldiers demand Kitty's release. Frederick and the old sailor depart with them toward the little kingdom of Gretzhoffen, not realizing that on the same sea within a very short distance of them King Phillips and Sachio are bound toward the same port, bent on the destruction of the town. Kitty, Frederick and the Prime Minister are nearing the port of Gretzhoffen, when the accidentally learn of Sachio's intended attack. They succeed in arriving in Gretzhoffen in time to scrape together what they can of the army and get to the fort in time to repel Sachio's attack.

A battle follows, in which Sachio and his army get the worst of it. Sachio watches his opportunity and leaves the battlefield for the palace of Gretzhoffen, hoping to find the hiding place of the jewels and treasures before Kitty and Frederick arrive there. His departure is noticed by Kitty; she informs Count Frederick, and together they leave for the palace, arriving in time to corner Sachio. Frederick hands Sachio a sword and, taking the other, they start fencing. In the scuffle, Kitty succeeds in getting Sachio's coins. Sachio remarks that they are no good, but she surprises both Sachio and Frederick by taking from her blouse the other half of the coin. Sachio starts for her, but is stopped by Frederick, who allows Kitty to start for the torture chambers with the real coins to find the secret place of the treasures of Gretzhoffen. At this point the episode closes.

A DAY IN MIDLAND BEACH (Oct. 30).—Tweedledum is about to take a bath in his bachelor apartments when he receives a note from Elsie, his sweetheart, asking him to meet her on a certain boat that leaves for Midland Beach. He forgets to turn off the water in his haste, is knocked down by a bicycle and lands on the cowcatcher of a trolley car. The conductor forces him to take a place in the car, where he tumbles all over the passengers, and just as the car is going over a bridge an irate passenger throws him into the water. He sails on his valise to the pier where he meets Elsie.

On their way to Midland Beach the boat is blown up by a floating bomb and Tweedledum and Elsie cling to the life-saving valise till they reach land, where they meet further trouble while Elsie is trying to dry her clothes, having modestly retired for that purpose behind some convenient bushes. A country boob palms himself off as a local sheriff and is only pacified by the handing over of a liberal graft. Finally the couple arrives at Midland Beach, where they take in the sights. They take a ride on a Ferris wheel, from which Tweedledum falls. Elsie insists on going in bathing and after waiting for some time for Tweedledum to join her, she finds him, to her utter amazement, taking an improvised bath in his valise.

Tweedledum suggests they take their lunch al fresco, and improvises a table. He opens the handbag hurled after him from the trolley car and extracts all sorts of feminine wearing apparel. This leads to a lovers' quarrel and Elsie leaves him. Sadly Tweedledum wends his way home, to find the entire bathroom submerged, owing to his failure to turn off the faucet. Despondent and tired of life, he plunges into the water and disappears.

TWENTIETH CENTURY SUSIE (Nov. 6).—The cast: William Franey, Milburn Moranti, Gale Henry, Charles Conklin, Lillian Peacock.

Farmer Stickney receives a letter from his sister, Susanne, whom he has not seen for twenty-five years. Ezra Snuck, the "ladies' man" of the village, happens in as Stickney is reading the letter, and learns that she is coming to take charge of her brother's household. Stickney, pointing to the picture, which was taken a quarter of a century ago, when the sister was only eighteen, says, "That's Susie." Ezra falls madly in love with the picture, and confiscates it. Susie is now an old maid of forty-three. The male contingent of the village have, in the meantime, received a glimpse of the photograph, and are as badly smitten as Ezra. Vinnie, who has held Ezra's heart up to now, suddenly finds herself supplanted by another. The other girls are also cast aside by their sweethearts.

Susanne, with her parrot and cat, alights, but not one of the men who have gone to the station to escort her to her brother's home, pays any attention to her. All are looking for the pretty original of the picture. In the meantime Susanne arrives at Stickney's home. Stickney is surprised at her coming alone, and tells her of the welcoming committee. As they are talking, Ezra and the farmers arrive to report the non-arrival of "Susie." Upon learning Susanne's identity, one look at her suffices them, and they beat a hasty retreat. Susanne is pacified by her brother, who explains that they were "jest bashful." Later that day, Sam Higgins, Susanne's sweetheart of a quarter century ago, returns to the scene of his boyhood. He meets Susanne; their old affections are revived, and she soon consents to become Mrs. Higgins. Vinnie and the girls decide to pay the boys in their own coin, refusing to have anything further to do with them. Realizing that they have Ezra to thank for their predicament, the farmers give him a good ducking in the river. The last we see of Ezra, he is sitting on the bank of the river, drenched to the skin, savagely tearing into bits the picture of his "Susie."

James Cuthbert, a rising young Wall street broker, is so busy trying to make money for his extravagant young wife, that he has forgotten that a woman needs love and companionship as well as clothes and jewels. His wife, not finding the attention she requires at home seeks it elsewhere, and Jack Mason, a supposed friend of Cuthbert with more money than principle, supplies the necessary requisites. The wife, while thoughtless, is not bad, and keeps Mason at arm's length. This only makes the game more interesting for him, and, to gain his point, he promises her that if she ever needs anything to come to him for it.

Cuthbert, in a moment of money stringency, borrows from Mason on a promissory note, payable in a certain length of time. The note falls due, and Cuthbert is unable to pay. Mason sees his opportunity and refuses to extend the time limit. The wife, seeing her husband in trouble, suddenly discovers that she loves him, and recalls to Mason his promise to help her. Seeing his chance, he agrees on condition that she meet him that night at his office. That same night one of the little shadows of the underworld decides that the office may perhaps yield six months' board and lodging, and enters by the most convenient way—by the fire escape and window. He no sooner gets to work than Mason comes to keep his appointment with the wife, and the shadow takes refuge in the closet. The wife arrives, and discovers that Mason's promises are worthless.

In the meantime, Cuthbert receives a telegram from his business partner saying that if he can stall Mason off for another day, all will be well. Cuthbert goes to Mason's home and learns from his servant that he is at his office. He gets to the office just in time to hear his supposed friend making violent love to his wife. Forgetting money, promissory notes, and all, he breaks open the door and denounces both of them. The shadow in the closet then decides to take a hand himself. He opens the door and tells them all what he thinks of them, especially Mason. Then, just to show that he controls the situation, he burns the promissory notes and makes a graceful exit. The result is a reconciliation—between wife and husband, and the discomfiture of Mason.

A fire hose with 100 pounds pressure, some silk hose of summer weight, a theater, the police officer, and two bachelors who flirted to excess, were the disturbing elements in the story. A new wife, who had been an actress and had too many callers, was the cause, and a man shooting up in the air on a stream of water was the effect.

There were other effects just as striking and more numerous. It all started when the actress-wife gave a midnight party to her former associates and Bill and Mr. Jowlish tried to horn in on the revelry. Her husband also thought he was going to have a quiet little party with Violet Vere de Vere, the soubrette, but she invited him to the same one his wife was giving.

As is known, meetings like this lead to murder. The killing started with mere pistols, but rapidly branched out until fire hose, silk hose, cops, explosions, geysers and volcanoes were in the itinerary. Never since have the bachelors flirted, nor the wife given parties. And also never since has the police captain talked to actresses.

FALSTAFF.

TILLIE THE TERRIBLE TYPIST (Oct. 25).—The cast: Violet Horner, Riley Chamberlain.

Tillie, the typist, was beautiful, and had many admirers. Her favorite was a young man whose only duty in life seemed to be to smoke cigarettes; a second was an aged merchant who lived by renting dress suits and fancy ball costumes, while the third was a rich and arrogant plumber. Tillie's mother liked the plumber, and Tillie accepted him; the fact that he bought an enormous diamond ring, such as only plumbers could afford to buy, having some effect upon her decision. He also presented her with a locket, containing his picture and a lock of his hair.

Tillie attended a ball with the cigarette-smoking youth, wearing a gown that the costumer had loaned her free of charge. The young man had a dress suit from the same place, but he had to pay for it. During the evening Tillie told her admirer of her engagement, and to soothe his sorrow handed him a locket, saying: "Keep it to remember me by. It contains my portrait and a lock of my hair." These were the same words that the plumber had uttered, and it was the same locket, for thrifty Tillie had thrown out the plumber's hair and picture and substituted her own. When the dress suit was returned the costumer found her locket and lamented. Then the plumber called to hire a dress suit to be married in, and proudly exhibited the portrait of his fiancee.

The costumer was a wise old owl. He gave the plumber the suit, saying that only one man, the cigarette youth, had worn it, and he slipped the locket back into the pocket. The plumber found the locket, and rushed off to have it out with Tillie, the costumer following. His rival and the girl were chatting at the door of her home. The youth ran for his life, uttering loud cries, and the plumber demanded the return of his engagment ring. He was vociferously indignant when Tillie told him that, knowing him to be an "injun giver," she had "hocked it." So the plumber gnashed his teeth and departed. The costumer, who had watched affairs from the background, now came forward. He gently told the girl that he had come to offer her his heart and hand. The girl looked him over critically. She had lost her job and her other suitors, so Tillie accepted the costumer.

Some of the vaudeville manager's "star acts" had failed to make good, others were still detained abroad. The manager called his press agent in, scolded him and ordered him to secure a vaudeville team, adding that "they must be extremely funny and extremely cheap." Within a short time the agent returned and proudly announced he had found "an absolute novelty, and a joint salary of $15."

"I dodged all the agencies," he explained, "and down on one of the side streets I ran across an old-time ham actor. I followed him. He went into a laundry and tried to get his duds out without paying for them. Well, the woman who ran the joint was a regular comedy queen. She didn't say much, but she certainly was full of 'pep.' She nearly wrecked the laundry with that actor, and I never laughed so much in my life. When I offered them an engagement the man balked, but the woman accepted for both of them, saying he could work out his laundry bill anyhow."

The manager tried the act out, and it made a big hit. The morning papers gave much space to the "Soap Suds Star," Sophie, the laundress. Much to his dismay, however, the press agent found the manager in an extremely bad humor.

"It's all your fault," he said bitterly. "You get me to hire amateurs, and now they are going to be married, and quit vaudeville for the classics."

"I think it a dandy idea," said the agent. "Sophie as Juliet would coin money for any manager. Why not try them out in the balcony scene?"

The manager, impressed, retained his "Soap Suds Star," and his leading man. Sophie's bad temper, however, spoiled her artistic career. She was on the job as Juliet, all right, but Romeo nearly missed the performance, and when he did appear he wore his street clothes, explaining with an alcoholic smile that he had been out with the boys and really had no time to dress. Sophie left her art to chastise him, but after a lively chase he escaped by leaping into the river, and the one-time actress returned to her laundry, believing she was a widow. But her husband came back and Sophie forgave him. Then, finding that his clothes had been well sprinkled in the river, she ironed him out, and gave him a life position in the laundry.

FILM FAVORITE'S FINISH (Nov. 11).—The cast: Louise Emerald Bates, Frank Goldsmith, Frances Keyes, Riley Chamberlin and Lindsay Morrison.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific the players of the Climax Film Company were known as "The Happy Family." Everything went along beautifully until T. Dorincourt Withers, a motion picture idol, joined the company. Women idolized him, and this made him most unpopular with other members of the company. Withers was made leading man and he refused to talk to anybody except "the leads." He paid much attention to the women of the company, and took an interest only in those parts in which he was to appear alone, in "close-ups." An indignation meeting was held, and action decided upon.

It was the character man who rose to the emergency. On a day off he happened to pass a country estate just in time to see its owner, a wealthy society leader, depart, leaving the house unguarded. As she stepped into her auto, she dropped her keys, and an idea struck him as he picked them up, "what a dandy way to bring woe to Withers." The enthusiastic support of the company was easily engaged. An auto drove up to the studio, and the card of Mrs. Van der Gordon, New York and Newport, was brought to the star, who did not recognize in the "footman" one of the members of the company. The star hastened to the auto and gladly accepted the gracious invitation of Mrs. Van der Gordon to take a ride. He did not know that "Mrs. Van" was really the character man made up. She took him to her home, mentioned that she was going away for a long trip, and urged him to take possession of the place. He did so, and was impressed with the calibre of servants she had, two extremely pretty maids and a solemn butler, all members of the picture company but cleverly disguised.

The star moved in on the spot, and unknown to him the servants moved out by the basement door. A little later the police called, having been notified that burglars were in the house. The real Mrs. Van der Gordon came back and repudiated him, and he was led off to jail. He did not remain there long. The authorities let him out, believing the plea made that he was simple-minded, a plea which the members of "The Happy Family" most enthusiastically endorsed. But his brief incarceration had a sad effect upon the star's nerves, and he went to his father's farm in Kansas to recuperate.

THANHOUSER.

THE CONSCIENCE OF JUROR NO. 10 (Two parts—Oct. 26).—The cast: Wayne Arcy, Ernest Howard.

His love for his wife means more to Milton Calhoun than his honor. He racks his brain to find some way of sending her to the mountains where she shall regain her health and be able to care for their baby girl. Then Jacob Morris, director of the Scoville bank, offers Calhoun bribe money if he will help convict Jonathan Moore, the bank president, indicted for false financial statements on the eve of failure. Calhoun does not stop to go into the merits of the case. He sees within reach only the long desired opportunity for Mary, his wife—and accepts the bribe.

Then comes the trial. As the case progresses, it becomes more and more clear to Juror No. 10 that the president is innocent. Still Calhoun holds out doggedly. Telling his counsel that he must get some air, Moore hurries out of the courtroom and down to the river. In the jury room things are at a standstill. Calhoun, gazing from the window, trying to think only of his sick wife, notices a boat drifting down the river. In it lies a sleeping child. Presently the youngster wakes. Her doll falls over the side of the boat, and in an effort to get it she tumbles headlong into the water. With a wild cry, Calhoun flings himself out of the window. But the bank president is before him. Calhoun receives from Moore's arms his half-drowned baby girl. A little later, in the courtroom, Calhoun makes a clean breast of everything. Moore takes pains that Calhoun and his wife shall lose nothing by the confession of the tenth juror.

THE FISHERWOMAN (Oct. 31).—The cast: Inda Palmer, H. E. Herbert, Geraldine O'Brien.

The Fisherwoman was a dominant force on the busy island. Unaided she had built up a large business. She employed many fishermen, and grew wealthier year by year. She sent her son to college, and was delighted when he told her, after graduation, that he intended to help her in the work. Contact with the world, however, had spoiled him for a narrow life. The mother divined his secret, although he tried to hide it. "You have your own life to live, my son," she said, "and I would not keep you here." The son's progress in business was rapid. One day word came from him that he was married, and he sent his mother the picture of his bride.

Time passed, and the son wrote more and more infrequently. The mother believed that the wife was to blame, and although they had never met, she began to hate her bitterly. One day, standing on the beach, the Fisherwoman spied an overturned boat, well out to sea. Clinging to it were a man and a woman. She rowed out to the wreck, but before she could reach them the man had disappeared under the waves. She rescued the woman, however, and on dragging her into the boat recognized her son's wife. The younger woman was exhausted from her terrible experiences, and for several days raved in delirium. The Fisherwoman learned that she and her husband had gradually drifted apart. The wife had gone on a yachting trip with some friends, among whom was a young man who paid her much attention. He had induced her to run away with him. And the man had been drowned.

The husband was telegraphed to, but he was out of town and it was some time before he could be found. The mother's message said the wife had come to pay her a visit, and had been suddenly taken ill. But before he arrived the mother told the wife that she knew everything.

The wife was not wicked—she was simply weak. She had not really loved the other man, she had only yielded to his flattery. She was thoroughly repentant, and pleaded for another chance. And the Fisherwoman saw that she got it. The husband never knew.

The Kidlet wanted a little garden all of her own, just like the gardener's little boy had down in a little patch in a corner of her mother's great big grounds. Her governess told her how big things always grew from little ones, but when she tried to raise a new set of dishes by planting the pieces of a broken dish, she soon found out that this was not always the case. That was all before her big uncle returned from Africa. The uncle gave the Kidlet a lot of pretty things, like dolls and beads and all that. but the Kidlet wondered why uncle and mother made such a fuss over one little bag of beads which they put in the wall safe, and paid so little attention to her own, which were so much prettier. She would have been much enlightened, though had she been able to realize just what it meant when uncle told her governess and her mother one day that "Those South African diamonds are worth many thousands of dollars and represent my fortune." Not realizing this, and having a chance one night when her mamma left the safe open to take them without anyone being the wiser, she took them, intending to plant the diamonds.

There was a lot of trouble when mamma found the diamonds were gone, and the governess, who was left in the room by the Kidlet's mother with instructions to close the safe, was blamed. The governess had closed the safe, but she had not been looking when the little one peeped into it and found the shiny "beads." There was an awful row about something, which the Kidlet did not know about, right beside the little one's garden. She thought that she would stop it, so she told what she had planted.

Mamma and uncle both rushed over to her garden and they didn't leave much of it after they got through digging up the pretty, shiny "beads." Then they rushed off, saying they were going to bring the governess back, and would have left the Kidlet all alone, if she hadn't begged to go with them. They found the governess all alone, and she was looking mighty sad, but got happy when they told her about what Baby had been doing in her garden. Everybody kissed everybody all around, except uncle didn't kiss the governess, though he looked like he wanted to. Mamma hurried Baby off so that the others could be alone, and what do you think? Mamma leaned down and whispered for her not to look around, for uncle was telling the governess she must come home and be his wife. Baby didn't quite understand it all, but anyway, she's glad the pretty governess is coming back to help her make another garden.

AMERICAN.

ALICE OF HUDSON BAY (Two parts—Nov. 8).—The cast: Edward Coxen, Chas. Newton, Winnifred Greenwood, George Field, Lizette Thorne.

John Gale, a trapper, lives in the Canadian backwoods with his daughter, Alice. He discovers Ralph Martin stealing from his traps. A fight follows, in which each recognizes the other as a fellow clerk in the East twenty years before, when Gale was accused of murder. He was innocent, but the evidence was against him and he fled with his daughter, Alice, whose mother was dead.

Martin reminds him of the past and makes his home with Gale. He forces his attentions on Alice and she repulses him, being engaged to Frank Moss of the Canadian Mounted Police. Gale refuses to help Martin and the latter secretly notifies the police of Gale's whereabouts. Frank is sent out to arrest Gale, which he does in spite of Alice's pleadings. She breaks their engagement.

Alice follows them to the jail and manages to release her father. They both make their escape to the distant gold fields. Frank is dismissed for allowing Gale to escape. Gale makes his home in a deserted hut in the mountains. Unknown to them, Martin is placer-mining nearby. One day while out together Gale returns home, leaving Alice, who is discovered by Martin. He forces his attention; she screams and is rescued by Frank. In the fight, Martin is hurled from a cliff and mortally wounded. On his return home, Gale is arrested by the police. Before dying, Martin confesses to the murder of which Gale is accused. Gale is freed. Alice and Frank are reconciled.

Little Sue is treated right except when her guardian is intoxicated. One day while drunk she abuses Sue, who runs away. She comes across Hart, who is leaning against a lamp post, unsteady from the previous night's debauch. Sue sympathizes with him and starts to lead him away from a policeman, telling him that Ed. is her father. The policeman follows them to Ed.'s home, where Sue is taken in. Jenks is astounded. Sue promptly takes a bottle of liquor away from Ed. The two men are perplexed and finally decide to keep Sue, being unable to find her mother. Sue transforms Ed. into a better man.

Mrs. Grumpus was sent to jail for six months, and Sue's mother is unable to find her daughter. She eventually locates the child, but Sue refused to go unless Hart and Jenks accompany them. Hart has a better plan. He proposes that Sue's mamma stay with him. Mamma consents and the new home is made happy.

Sid, the owner of the tents, appears and demands the reason of the unusual situation. Henrietta announces that she and Jack are to be married. Jack is horrified as Sid speaks of arresting him. Sid sends for a preacher, and Jack flees to the beach in a wild attempt to escape, the others following. Jack eludes his pursuers in the water. CASINO.

ZABLITZKY'S WATERLOO (Oct. 31).—The cast: Jean Pierre Pierard. "Budd" Ross, Jennie Nelson, Helen Hart, H. Stanley Marie Wierman, S. Rice, Marie Jansen, Fay Stuben, Jules Cluzetti, A. F. Baus, Cissy Fitzgerald.

Being the wrestling champion, Zablitzky believes that the deference paid him is due to his own great personal charm. He imagines that every girl is in love with him. One girl does lose her heart to the great big mountain of muscle and foolishly sends him a note after seeing him win a championship bout. She says that she will be on a certain bench in the park the next afternoon at three, wearing a white chenille dress. Being a wrestler and not a clerk in a dress goods department, the wrestler has not the least idea in the world what a chenille dress looks like. He knows from his admirer's letter that it is white. Consequently every pretty girl dressed in white who approaches the park bench about three o'clock is the object of his attention.

The first girl has her face hidden by a parasol. When Zablitzky accosts her he finds to his dismay that she is extremely homely. Fortunately his cheap-sport friend, Squid, happens along, and the wrestler unloads the unprepossessing female on the much-disgusted Squid. Zablitzky has led them some distance from his rendevous, and he hurries back to find his charmer. The next two girls in white resent his attentions, and then poor Zablitzky is between two fires. Two pretty girls in white appear, and each takes a seat near him. Squid in the meantime has put his ugly girl on a car and jumped off just as the conductor was closing the safety gates. He arrives and insists on having one of the two girls in white. Zablitzky is unable to get rid of him and finally lets Squid toss up with him to see which gets which. Squid's girl runs away, and Zablitzky has trouble keeping his little friend from stealing the girl he has won by the toss.

The girls whom Zablitzky has accosted return with their "gentlemen friends." These Zablitzky has no trouble in putting to flight. The wrestler is getting along famously with his new girl—who is the one who sent the note—when his wife appears. She is a frail little woman, but she goes after Zablitzky like a tornado. What she does to him makes her wrestling champion of the world. When she has cleaned up the park with him she introduces him to the baby carriage she has been pushing and starts him toward home pushing the carriage. There is a final fight when the girls and their admirers and some followers and even a policeman appear again. Mrs. Zablitzky doesn't wait for her husband to get into action. She seizes the policeman's club and disperses the crowd. Then she starts Zablitzky on his way again.

DOES ADVERTISING PAY? (Nov. 7).—The cast: Mr. and Mrs. Tom Waters, Glenmore "Stuffy" Davis, Henry W. Pemberton.

Whenever an actor doesn't get publicity he makes a howl to the manager that he is going to quit. When Johnny and Emma Murphy descended on their manager and threatened to "blow the show" unless they received more publicity, he thought they were in earnest and immediately insisted that the press agent get busy.

"Stuffy" Davis, the press agent, had a great thought. When he told it to the Murphys, they agreed with him. His plan was to rent a baby and have it sent to Mrs. Murphy with an anonymous note asking her to adopt it. Then the reporters would be tipped off to the story, and the papers would give large space to the kind-hearted actress and her husband, who had taken in the little waif.

From Mrs. O'Hara, a washerwoman, "Stuffy" secured the necessary infant. It was left at the hotel in a basket. The reporters came in droves and gave the Murphys thousands of dollars of free publicity. Trouble didn't start until bedtime. The baby began to cry. Soon the guests in the next rooms began to protest. Then all the guests on the corridor began to telephone the night clerk angrily as the leather-lunged infant made night hideous with its bawling. The Murphys were not used to children. Although they walked it up and down they couldn't quiet it.

At last the night clerk, backed up by the indignant guests, asked the Murphys to leave. A fight started, of course, as the vaudeville team objected to being turned out into the cold at 4 a. m. But out they went when the police arrived. Murphy made such a fuss about it that they were all carted off to the police station.

Mrs. O'Hara was to have had her baby back at nightfall. As it was not returned, she hastened to the police station early in the morning to make a complaint. There she found her baby, and the deception was uncovered.

He saves the life of Bessie Waters, when she loses her oar and her boat is dashed against the river abutment of the new bridge. Joe Benton employs a young local blacksmith (who is in love with Bess) on the bridge. Joe vanquishes the blacksmith in a fight, and marries Bess in the spring. Their wedding day begins in sunshine, but ends in a down-pour of rain that begins during the ceremony. The superstitious country people look upon this as an evil omen. The bridge job being finished, Joe is promoted to the foremanship on the job of erecting a skyscraper in a big city. Matt Kelcey, the disappointed suitor, embittered at Joe, is also employed on the city skyscraper work. He drops a piece of iron on Joe at dusk. Joe is laid up and his savings exhausted. Bess gets work in a store, but her beauty attracts attention and she is offered a position as a cloak model. In the new position the example of some of the other models and the constant temptations cause Bess to permit herself to do indiscreet things.

Matt Kelcey, employed on a job repairing an elevator in the big wholesale cloak house, recognizes Bess as she leaves the show room with an attentive buyer. Bess is now deceiving the convalescing young husband by telling him she has to work at night—one lie leading to another, regarding her new fine clothes, etc. Matt calls at the tenement and affects a reconciliation with the good-natured Joe, who has never suspected Matt was the enemy who injured him. Matt sows the seeds of distrust of Bess in the mind of Joe, and Joe, seeking to verify his suspicion, finds a note Bess has received. Now able to get about and almost fully recovered, he follows Bess to the gay tango restaurant she is taken to by an admirer. On a specific occasion she has told her husband she will be working late. He confronts her and strikes the man she is with. The actions of Bess kills all the ambition in Joe and he becomes a drunkard. As he descends Matt descends with him.

Meanwhile, the contrasting progress of Bess along the primrose path is shown. She prospers in luxury and the gay life she has chosen. Joe finally joins an agitator's "Army of the Unemployed." His rude eloquence, augmented by the fundamentals of his self-sought education, make Joe a leading figure in the demonstrations of the unemployed. He is arrested with the others, and his dramatic recital of the wrongs of the poor and oppressed and denunciation of the sinful luxuries of the unthinking rich, attract the attention of Mark Kingsley, a rich and handsome young merchant and man about town, who is a friend and fellow-club member of the police magistrate. Kingsley becomes interested in Joe and gives him good clothes, money and his card, telling Joe he will secure him employment. Kingsley returns to his apartments and tells his mistress, who is Bessie, of the man he is going to save from one abyss, and tells her his name. Bessie shows signs of agitation and suggests that he be sent to the far West.

In his new clothes, the night before he is to meet Kingsley, his benefactor, Joe meets Matt Kelcey and tells him of his good luck and gives Matt money. But Matt is obsessed with his hidden hatred of Joe, tells some gangmen that Joe has money. The thugs sandbag Joe, taking his new clothes off him, dress him in old ones, and leave a bottle of whiskey beside him. He is sent to prison. When he is released he seeks out Kingsley, but the latter, believing him worthless and a hopeless drunkard, will have nothing to do with him. Joe falls to his lowest. He becomes a shambling wretch on the bread line and a sodden and trembling hanger-on around missions. He becomes converted and labors for good among the unfortunate wretches. He ministers to a dying gunman after a gang battle, who confesses to Joe that he was one of the assailants who sandbagged and robbed him at the instigation of Matt. He also tells him how Matt betrayed to his pals all the evil he had done to Joe. The gunman dies, and Joe searches for Matt and finds him. He strangles the wretched Matt, after a struggle, and casts the body into the tide.

A month later he is again in rags, and seeking a precarious livelihood calling carriages in front of the theaters at night. One night as he opens the door of an auto, he gives a great cry when he sees Bessie, his erring wife, and the fur-coated millionaire is his philanthropic benefactor. The woman screams and faints. The man slams the door and orders his chauffeur to drive on. Joe rushes in front of the automobile out in the street as it turns to dart away, and is struck down. The police halt the car, and the next day a small item in the newspapers tells of the death of a tramp-taxicab caller at the theater, stating further that the tragedy has prostrated "Mrs. Kingsley," and that her husband, Mark Kingsley, well known for his charitable tendencies, will see that the unfortunate man receives a Christian burial.

MUSTANG.

MAN TO MAN (Two Parts—Nov. 12).—The cast: Jack Richardson, Anna Little, Jimsy Maye.

Bill is the foreman of the Diamond "D" ranch, owned by Robert Chalmers, an Eastern capitalist, who visits the ranch, accompanied by his niece, Pearl. Bill accompanies her on many rides and soon falls in love with Pearl. They meet Millie Thompson, a half-demented girl, and Bill tells Pearl that Jim Clawson and Millie were engaged to be married years ago. Jim had a claim and went East to sell it, hoping to marry Millie on his return. Jim was buncoed out of his claim by an Eastern broker and in despair shot himself. The shock robbed Millie of her reason. He told Pearl that if he ever found the man who buncoed Jim, he would avenge Jim's untimely death.

One evening Bill sees Pearl in an evening gown, the center of many admirers. For the first time, he realizes the wide gulf between them and sadly concludes that he has no right to think of her as his wife. He resolutely remains away from her, and she could not understand the change that had come over him. When Pearl returns East, she realizes how much she cares for Bill. Later, Bill hears of Pearl's engagement to a wealthy Easterner. Bill goes to town to drown his sorrow. He meets a cowboy friend, just returned from the East, who tells him he has located the man who swindled Jim Clawson, in the person of Ralph Martin. Bill starts at once for the East, determined on vengeance. He finds Martin and denounces him, grabbing him by the throat.

At that moment, he sees a photograph of Pearl on Martin's desk. He asks what it is doing there, and is told by Martin "that is the girl I am going to marry." Bill releases his hold on Martin and at that moment Pearl breaks her engagement with Martin, who retires, humiliated. A few months later Bill and Pearl find their hearts' desire in the great West, where they bravely and happily face life together.

Professor Barstow, a chemist and college friend of Donaldson's, invites the lawyer to his laboratory to witness the end of an experiment with a mysterious poison which is supposed to act fatally exactly seven days from the time it is taken, leaving no trace or clue. To Donaldson's amazement, he sees the dog selected for the test drop dead at the end of the seventh day. Fascinated he steals some of the poison and returns to his home. There he drinks the poison at twelve o'clock noon, on June 1. Immediately after he engages a suite at a fashionable hotel, and invests a good part of his savings in a wardrobe. Then he enters a high priced cafe. Ellen Arsdale and her brother Ben arrive for dinner. The nervous actions of young Arsdale attracts Donaldson. He scents something unusual and follows him. Arsdale sends his chauffeur into the hotel on an errand, and with his sister in the car, starts away at a rapid speed. Donaldson succeeds in jumping on to the running board and finally overpowers Arsdale and stops the machine. Then he is told by Ellen that her brother is suffering from opium, the curse of several generations of Arsdales.

Donaldson accompanies them home, where Ben succeeds in escaping. At Ellen's urgent request, Donaldson pledges himself to find Ben. He enlists the aid of his friend, Police Inspector Saule, and then begins a search of Chinatown. During the night the home of Ruth Chester, a friend and neighbor of the Arsdale's is robbed. Detectives find a handkerchief left by the thief embroidered with the initals "B. A." This evidence is presented to Inspector Saule and he concludes that Ben is the thief. It leads them to the attic where Donaldson is attacked in the dark. Before he recovers the assailant escapes. Unsuccessful the company returns to New York. Exhausted, Donaldson goes to his hotel and sleeps through twenty-four hours without waking. Arsdale housekeeper, hears Saul give his name and title to the maid and flees to the attic, where her son, Jacques, is in hiding. Confident that Saul is there to arrest him, Jacques attempts to escape. Ben overhears the noise and captures him, with Saul's assistance. The inspector searches Jacques, and finds part of the jewels stolen from the Chester home. Triumphant, he takes Jacques to headquarters and frees Donaldson. Almost crazed with remorse over his act in taking the seven day poison, Donaldson returns to Barstow's laboratory. While awaiting Barstow's arrival, he discovers hiding under a settee, the dog whose death he had witnessed seven days before. Barstow arrives and explains that the poison failed. "Let me have him," Donaldson pleads. "He has taught me the value of life." Taking the dog in his arms he returns to the hotel, and begins packing his things. There Ellen and Ben find him. Ashamed now of his cowardice, Donaldson hesitatingly explains about the poison. Ellen's affection, prompted by sympathy, increases, while Ben begs Donaldson to help him with his strength and determination in his fight against the drug.

Paul Harvard, who is the son of a wealthy Northerner, is invited for an indefinite stay to the Carolina Pines. Arriving at the Pines, he meets Judge Bulstring, who commissions Dr. Sterling Duke to show the young fellow about, and find him a place to live among the mountaineers. Paul forms the acquaintance of Grace Wilson, and the two are mutally attracted.

Another young Northerner arrives on the scene. He is a Federal agent who has come to investigate the fact that there has been much counterfeiting and moonshining. This newcomer is Wilbur Grant, and during the weeks of his stay he simulates drunkenness in order that he may better work himself into the confidence of those whom he suspects. Grant quickly takes up with one Richard Quigg, who professes to deal in real estate, and he actually does hold a mortgage over Magnolia Hall, the name of the Wilson home. This mortgage is fast coming due and Grace is frantic at her inability to raise funds to meet the debt. Quigg offers to cancel the mortgage if Miss Wilson will consent to become his wife. Grace refuses and orders Quigg from the house.

Young Harvard takes up his residence in the mountains with the Tollivers. Caroline Tolliver becomes one of his acquaintances. Paul oversees the girl admiring a frock which an itinerant Jew has offered for sale. Paul gives the girl the money and she makes her coveted purchase. The act is overseen and becomes food for gossip. It develops that Caroline has been secretly married to Richard Quigg and that an interesting event is soon to transpire. Jack Tolliver, Caroline's brother, becomes furious when his sister's condition is learned. She will not reveal the name of the man, and as gossip has linked Caroline's name with that of young Harvard, Jack at once assumes that he is the guilty one.

The scene shifts to the mountains, where the moonshiners are at work. Within the shack that houses the illicit still are Richard Quigg, Jack Tolliver and others. With the men, too, are Caroline Tolliver and her mother. Outside it is pouring rain. There comes a knock on the door. It is Paul Harvard. He is roughly handled, but manages to hold his own. In an apparently drunken condition, Wilbur Grant enters. He is pushed carelessly to one side and at length is locked in an unused chamber. A bolt of lightning strikes nearby. A huge dam bursts and the loosened waters bear down upon the moonshiners' abode. All escape miraculously, and Harvard, casting aside personal enmity, effects the rescue of Jack Tolliver. The Tollivers learn that Paul is not responsible for Caroline's condition. Jack and his sister come, shamefaced, to the house to publicly declare the young man's innocence.

Meanwhile, the mortgage has fallen due on Magnolia Hall. Richard Quigg has come to collect. Paul Harvard seeks to buy over the head of Quigg. His check is refused, for the document stipulates cash is to be paid. The hands of the clock creep toward the appointed hour as Paul gallops away over the hills to the nearest bank. He obtains the cash and arrives barely in time. All are astounded, however, when Quigg overbids the young millionaire. The multitude is plunged in gloom; then Wilbur Grant takes a hand in the affair. Tipping the wink to men who secretly are his aids, he jumps in and arrests Quigg in the name of the Federal Government. The fellow is branded as a counterfeiter and moonshiner and submits to shackles on his wrists. Amid waving of hands and dances of joy, Magnolia Hall is sold to Paul Harvard, who promptly presents it to the wide-eyed young gril, Grace Wilson, who stands at his side. The two gaze in each other's eyes. Harvard's strong arms encompass the girl, and all is happy ever after.

THE JITNEY SUBMARINE (Atlas—Rel. wk. of Nov. 8).—This comedy is founded upon the latest rumors of the Ford submarine. Prof. I. N. Tinker, an inventor, is called upon to make plans for the defense of this country, and he invents a submarine that would cost this country something like fourteen cents to build. In the making of this great submarine things begin to happen. They occur too fast for the writer to describe, so the surprises are left unmentioned until the picture is unfolded to the audience.

THE BOND BETWEEN (Santa Barbara—Three parts—Rel. wk. of Nov. 8).—The cast: Raymond House, A. G. Ferguson, Otto Nelson, George Phillips, Clara Vail, Nathalie Sawyer, Eva Marius Paigne, Felix A. Walsh.

Ruth, the daughter of Joe Garstone, the latter a gambler and adventurer, arrives during vacation with her friend, Clara Blair, from the Villa Maria Convent. She is met at the depot by the mother and brother of her chum. Jack Blair, the brother, and Ruth conceive an immediate liking for each other. He leaves on the outgoing train bound for the goldfields. Later Ruth, who has never had a home or parental care, learns that her father is a desperado and that he and his gang are sheltered in Devil's Canyon near Eldorado goldfields. The girl leaves for the West and learns that the statements made about her father are true. Ruth's arrival at Devil's Canyon frustrates an attempt made by Garstone to kill Blair. Blair has struck it rich at the Canyon, and in an attempt to oust him from his claim Garstone inflicts injuries on him which result in his losing his memory and becoming an innocent associate with Garstone's gang in many of their depredations.

Jack and Ruth subsequently marry and five years later we find them in the possession of a comfortable home and a boy. Jack's memory of his early life is still a blank and life holds nothing for him but his wife and son. The arrival of Jack's mother and sister in search of tidings of their loved one precipitates a climax in the story. The stage on which they are riding is held up by Garstone's gang and among the loot stolen and taken to the camp is a satchel belonging to Mrs. Blair. On opening it the outlaws discover a family group picture. They are about to throw the photo into the fire when it is seized by Jack, and his dawning reason tells him that he is gazing upon the features of those near to him. The father of his wife is brought wounded into the camp and lives long enough to entreat forgiveness of his son and daughter.

Jack, believing that Ruth has wilfully deceived him, parts from her and presently meets his mother and sister. They are about to leave camp when they are attracted to the cries of the little boy standing on a lofty eminence, his arms outstretched. He offers an irresistible appeal to the father and presently Ruth and her child are folded in the loving arms of the man to whom that baby boy had proved "The Bond Between."

SCHOOL DAY MEMORIES (Banner—Rel. wk. of Nov. 8).—The cast: Harry Fisher, Dorothy Brown, Lottie Case, Charles James.

Harry is a middle aged benedict, comfortably well off and married to a charming lady. In his home there is every evidence of material wealth and happiness, but a long-forgotten photograph of an early sweetheart starts him off on a train of reminiscences, which, as they unfold in his mind are depicted on the screen. The first of his day dreams shows him "Creeping like a snail unwillingly to school." Presently there follows a tender love passage with Doris, the school belle; then comes a battle royal with the school bully which culminates in the bully being immersed in the village duck pond. The tread of the well trained valet arouses Harry from his dream, but presently his eyes close again and he sees again himself as the leader in the school room pranks which brings him to logger heads with the sorely tried master.

The vision changes to early manhood at the college, where the irrepressible Harry leads a midnight charge. A falling jar of molasses and a suspicious college scout lands the bold Harry and his companions in further trouble, notwithstanding which he emerges from college with his degree and commences the serious occupation of life. Harry wakes from his reverie to recall the sudden inheritance from a rich aunt which placd him among the ranks of the idle rich, and now he dreams of the tennis match where a wild ball brought him to the side of his old sweetheart, now grown to charming womanhood and still with a warm place in her heart for the lover of the long ago.

When Harry's dreams are ended the material element of life, in the person of his wife, comes to tell him that dinner is served and as he embraces the partner of his joys and sorrows he dismisses memories for realities and prepares to enjoy the gifts that God has given.

ALL BALLED UP (Liberty—Rel. wk. of Nov. 8).—The cast: Ann Kromann, Belle Nelle Widen, Art Howard, Jack Leroy, Ed Gambold, Pat Wheelan, Sydney De Grey.

Syd and Pat are two men about town and as the story opens they are bathing in the sun in Central Park. Judge happens along and stumbles over the projecting foot of the slumbering Pat. In the mixup that follows the Judge is forgotten when the two sun bathers catch sight of Ann Blaum, who is taking an early ride through the park. Syd distracts the attention of Pat and hies himself to the side of the fair equestrien. He finds that she has broken a stirrup leather which an obliging cop is in vain attempting to repair. While Syd is doing the needful repairing, Pat arrives and he and Ann are immediately smitten with each other. Both gallants engage in a struggle with the officer, during which Ann returns home and on arriving there gives the repair job over to the faithful Chink. Chink repairs the damage, but the cook comes out and attempts to mount, and being a heavyweight she breaks the stirrup leather.

Pat and Syd hire a couple of livery horses and, leaving them at a nearby post, seek Ann in order to invite her to accompany them on a ride. She consents, but in the meantime the Chink has stolen Syd's horse, so Pat and Ann ride away, leaving disconsolate Syd to follow on a burro. Failing to overtake the riders, Syd engages three hoboes to abduct Ann. The abduction is successful excepting that the stout cook, who has stolen a ride on Ann's horse, is taken instead of Ann. Syd, learning that the fair captive is a prisoner, secures the services of the Judge to marry him and secures a license also, and then presents himself before the astonished cook. Learning of his mistake, Syd calls the matter off, but the romantic heavyweight clings to him, and it is only after a general fight involving all hands that Syd succeeds in breaking away.

Later he finds the tramps slumbering beneath a tree, and, setting a slow match to work, he leaves them as he supposes to their fate. In the meantime Pat and Ann come to an understanding and one of the tramps wakes, sees the lighted fuse, throws it so it lands in Syd's hat under a tree where he is slumbering. Explosion, exit Syd.

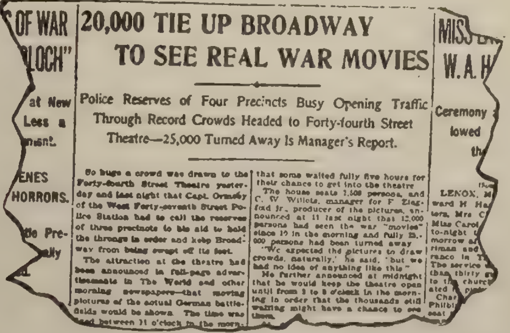
NEWS ITEM FROM
N. Y. WORLD, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1915:



20,000 TIE UP BROADWAY TO SEE REAL WAR MOVIES

Police Reserves of Four Precincts Busy Opening Traffic Through Record Crowds Headed to Forty-fourth Street Theatre—25,000 Turned Away Is Manager's Report.

So huge a crowd was drawn to the Forty-fourth Street Theatre yesterday and last night that Capt. Ormsby of the West Forty-seventh Street Police Station had to call the reserves of three precincts to his aid to hold the throngs in order and keep Broadway from being swept off its feet.

The attraction at the theatre had been announced in full-page advertisements in The World and other morning newspapers—that moving pictures of the actual German battlefields would be shown. The time was between 11 o'clock in the morn-that some waited fully five hours for their chance to get into the theatre.

The house seats 1,500 persons, and C. W. Willets, manager for F. Ziegfeld Jr., producer of the pictures, announced at 11 last night that 12,000 persons had seen the war "movies" since 10 in the morning and fully 25,000 persons had been turned away.

"We expected the pictures to draw crowds, naturally," he said, "but we had no idea of anything like this."

He further announced at midnight that he would keep the theatre open until from 3 to 5 o'clock in the morning in order that the thousands still waiting might have a chance to see them.

THE TURN OF THE ROAD (Vitagraph—Five Parts—Nov. 1).—The cast: Joseph Kilgour, Naomi Childers, Virginia Pearson, Bobby Connelly, Edwina Robbins, Robert Gaillard, Mabel Kelly.

Helen King, a devoted wife and mother, spends most of her time in the care of her little son, Jack. Her husband, John, although loving her dearly, feels slighted because she does not care to become a part of the social life of which he is a prominent member, and when the temptress comes, in the person of Marcia Wilbur, an old school chum of Helen's, is susceptible to her charms. Marcia is a born coquette and begins her heart conquering campaign on Doctor Bright, the King's friend and physician, whom she leads on, only to cast aside when he proposes. Marcia, unable to restrain her propensity to flirt, exercises all her arts on John. Helen hears the whole town is gossiping about the intimacy of her husband and Marcia, but laughs at the idea.

John gives way to his infatuation and the two elope. Helen, returning home, finds Jack in a high fever and phones Dr. Bright. The runaway couple meet the doctor on his way to the King home, at a turn in the road, and veering to one side are forced over an embankment. Dr. Bright finds John but slightly hurt, while Marcia is terribly wounded in the head. The doctor takes them to the King home. Helen blames Marcia, but when the doctor announces the accident has robbed her of her reason, hatred turns to pity and she insists on nursing her old friend back to health.

A delicate operation is performed; it is successful, and Marcia recovers. Marcia accidentally overturns a lamp and sets fire to the bed clothing. John and Dr. Bright rush to their assistance, rescuing Marcia just in time, and later the two fall in love, while John is happily reunited with his wife.

THE HEIGHTS OF HAZARD (Vitagraph—Five Parts—Nov. 15).—The cast: Charles Richman, Eleanor Woodruff, Charles Kent, Hattie De Lara, Frank Holland, J. Bloomer, George Debeck.

Miss Olivia Martindale, at a dinner, announces: "There is no longer any romance in American life," and immediately arouses a storm of protest. Nevertheless, she describes to the assembled company the days of old when men had to scale the heights of hazard to win their women, adding that that is the way she would wish to be wooed. That evening, while strolling in the grounds, a muffled figure steps out, seizes her, and forces her into a waiting racing car. At the Bermuda Apartments The Unknown unmasks and proves to be a handsome gentleman in immaculate evening clothes. He quietly escorts her to a chair, hands her a police whistle and a pistol to reassure her, and begs her to listen to what he has to say. He bids her call up her anxious relatives and simply tell them she is safe, asking them to come and get her without the police.

Attracted by the man's magnetic personality and the glamour of the adventure, she obeys him. Then he tells her how he had seen her in the far west, how her face had been his guide through all the rough gold mining camp life, and now that he had wrested his fortune from those hills he had come East to meet her. His narrative takes them right up to the present, then as the girl, swayed by overpowering emotions, arises, he pleads his suit eloquently and passionately until she surrenders, and he sees in her eyes the dawn of love. Sweeping her into his arms, he kisses her—just as the door bursts open and Mr. Martindale and the others enter. Olivia calmly introduces "Mr—er er" (she has to ask the gentleman his name) Billy Williams, the well known millionaire, to her speechles papa as her fiance.

THE CRIMSON WING (Essanay—Six parts—Nov. 1).—The cast: E. H. Calvert, Ruth Stonehouse, Bryant Washburn, Betty Scott, Harry Dunkinson, John Cossar, Grant Foreman, Beverly Bayne.

Count Ludwig von Leun-Walram, a German army officer, meets Marguerite Clairon, an actress, while at a watering place on the border line of France. She falls in love with him and reveals her feelings. He rejects her in such a kindly way that she only loves him the more.

Later, the count meets Marcelle de Lembach, daughter of a French general, whom he had known in childhood. He falls deeply in love with her. While he is still courting her, however, war breaks out between Germany and France and he is called back to his command. Marcelle is intensely patriotic and goes to the front with her father. She leads a troop of soldiers against a German scouting party when the officer is killed. She is captured by the count, who sends her safely back to the French lines.

Paul D'Arblay, a spy, is one of the suitors of Mlle. Clairon, whom she hates. He swears that he will get her into his power. She joins the French army as a Red Cross nurse. On the battlefield she finds the count wounded and nurses him until he is almost recovered. She then arranges to send him back to his command. D'Arblay discovers this and threatens to denounce the count as a spy unless she yields to his wishes. She consents in order to save the count, promising to meet him at the home of her aunt nearby. He goes there that evening and finds her dead. She has kept her promise, but takes poison rather than submit to him. The count meets Marcelle after the war is over and they are betrothed.

TRIANGLE FILM CORP.

THE SABLE LORCHA (Nov. 21).—The cast: Tully Marshall, Thomas Jefferson, Charles Lee, Elmer Clifton, Loretta Blake, George Pearce, Hal Wilson and Raymond Wells.

Robert and Donald Cameron are twins in a Scottish family which is separated by the death of the mother. Robert is brought to America by his father, and Donald is adopted by a family named McNish. Robert prospers in the new land, but Donald goes to the bad, runs away to sea and becomes a smuggler of Chinese to America. On one of his expeditions he scuttles a junk, or Lorcha, and a hundred Chinese perish. The only survivor is the cook, a half-breed, John Soy. Soy and an Irish soldier of fortune, Murphy, aid the kinsmen of the dead in a world-wide search for McNish. One day Murphy sees Cameron, mistakes him for his brother, McNish, and puts the avengers on his track.

Cameron, who has a fine Connecticut estate, receives a warning from the Chinese, the only signature being a silhouette of the Sable Lorcha, or funeral ship. Apparently before his very eyes his portrait has been beheaded. A second warning is received. Cameron at once sends for a young friend and neighbor, Phillip Clyde, who is in love with Cameron's niece and ward, Evelyn Grayson. The second threat is carried out by the crashing to atoms of a mirror by unseen hands. Cameron and Clyde are mystified as a third threat comes, declaring that before the morning of the third day Cameron will pass from sight of man. The two men go to sea in a yacht, but the avengers follow in a fast tug, drop Soy in an open boat in the yacht's course and put their man on board when he is picked up in the belief that he is a cast-a-way fisherman. Soy now uses a Chinese anaesthetic with which he has performed the other two mysteries. Cameron and Clyde are rendered unconscious and the former is taken off to the tug. In a box the doomed man is taken to Chinatown, where revenge is to be obtained.

Later Clyde comes ashore, meets Soy by chance, and follows him to a Chinatown cellar. There a box is found similar to the one in which Cameron is being taken from the yacht. It contains nothing, however, but Chinese merchandise, and while Clyde goes to seek aid from the police the box containing Cameron is taken away. Meanwhile, in front of Cameron's Fifth avenue mansion, appears an unkempt and sickly individual who later is found to be McNish. He has escaped from two Chinamen who thought he was Cameron. The police follow one of the avengers to a house in Chinatown, where a large tank has been prepared and Cameron is to be bound while the water rises and brings slow torture and death. They arrive with McNish in time to reveal the error of the Chinese and McNish, the guilty one, dies. Thus is solved the mystery of "The Sable Lorcha."

THE DISCIPLE (Nov. 21).—The cast: William S. Hart, Dorothy Dalton, Wedgwood Nowell, Charles K. Franch, Thelma Salter.

Jim Houston, the "Shootin' Iron" Parson, comes to Barren Gulch to reform the morals of the frontier community. He receives the support of "Birdshot" Bivens, the sheriff of the county. Jim's wife, Mary, however, is a weak character. She falls a prey to the seduction of Dr. Hardy, the village gambler and saloon keeper, and elopes with him. Jim Houston, forsaking the ministry, goes to the mountains and cares for his child in a log cabin home.

Later the child falls very ill. Mary, in a mountain storm, comes unwittingly to their door. Dr. Hardy is sent for as the only physician in the district. He ministers to the child and confronts Houston, who intends to kill him. Mary is asked to make her choice between Houston and Dr. Hardy. She points towards the child and goes to its bedside. Houston forgives his wife and instead of killing Hardy permits him to go unharmed.

A GAME OLD KNIGHT (Nov. 21).—The cast: Charles H. Murray, Harry Booker, Slim Summerville, Louise Fazenda, Cecile Arnold, Edgar Kennedy.

In days of old when knights are bold a Game Old Knight seeks the royal castle of King Mike the thirteenth in quest of romantic adventure. The King bids the Game Old Knight marry his elder daughter, the Ugly Princess, but the Game Old Knight refuses as he casts loving eyes upon the younger daughter, the Pretty Princess. The King, enraged, orders the Knight and his valet thrown into a dungeon and tells the executioner to sharpen the axe for decapitation.

The Knight and the valet pass through several chambers of horror and meet the executioner, who sees them gloatingly. The Ugly Princess, however, secures their reprieve. Subsequently they are placed on a swiftly moving treadmill where they have to race for life to avoid being impaled on gleaming knife-blades behind and in front of them. Again the Ugly Princess comes to the rescue. She stops the old mill wheel by attaching her body to the spokes, which drag her round and round until her weight causes them to quit moving. In the melee the King and his court all receive a ducking in the mill pond. Robbers attack the castle, but they are defeated. In the end the Game Old Knight, in recognition of the Ugly Princess saving his life, marries her anyhow.

PARAMOUNT.

MASQUERADERS (Famous Players—Five Parts—Oct. 28).—David Remon loves Dulcie a bar-maid, not by choice but by force of circumstances, and attempts to persuade her to marry him rather than to submit to a life of drudgery. But Dulcie is thoroughly independent and prefers to earn her own living. Life at the inn, however, soon becomes irksome to Dulcie, who grows so tired of it that she is ready to accept the first wealthy man who proposes to her. A charity auction is held at the inn, to help the family of a poor man and Dulcie auctions off a kiss. David, bent upon preventing anyone from kissing her in public, bids every cent he has in the effort to gain the prize himself. But Sir Brice, a bon vivant, doubles his offering and adds his hand in the bargain.

Dulcie accepts the proposal, but soon finds that her husband is a toper and, when under the influence of liquor, is a very ugly tempered man. As the years drag on, Sir Brice becomes more and more intolerable, until at last he openly humiliates Dulcie and insults her guests at a reception. He demands that someone gamble with him, and grows abusive when they refuse.

Finally, David, who has remained faithful to Dulcie through all the years, in a desperate game, stakes his entire fortune against Dulcie herself. Sir Brice is penniless, having squandered his fortune, and he gladly offers his wife as the prize. After a nerve-wracking battle of wits, David wins. It is not before Dulcie, thoroughly disillusioned, accepts the verdict of the god of chance and finds a new happiness with the man whose love has remained constant.

CARMEN (Lasky—Five Parts—Nov. 1).—Carmen is a half-wild, fascinating creature—a gypsy by birth—and living with a band of smugglers in the mountains near the coast of Spain. The smugglers are foiled in their attempt to get their illegal goods into the little town by Don Jose—an officer in the regiment stationed there. Carmen is sent by Pastia, the leader of the smugglers and the local tavern keeper, to fascinate Don Jose and make him forget his duties and give the smugglers an opportunity to bring their goods into the city.

Carmen secures work in a tobacco factory near the city wall, to account for her presence near Don Jose, and it is also announced that she will dance at the tavern in the evenings. The night Carmen dances in the tavern, she is the center of attraction. She is wooed unsuccessfully by Morales, a brother officer of Don Jose's, and also by Escamillo—a young toreador on his way to Seville to enter the bullring there. Escamillo has loved Carmen for a long time, but she, while attracted to him, has clung to her liberty. Escamillo asks Carmen to accompany him to Seville, and she is tempted to listen to him, but Pastia reminds her that her beauty is at present for Don Jose and she must carry through their plans. Don Jose, after Carmen's wild, sensuous dance, loses his heart to her; and that night when she passes by the breach in the wall where he is on guard, he follows her off while the smugglers enter the city.

The following morning Carmen gets into an altercation at the tobacco factory and cuts one of the girls after a fight in which the whole factory is involved. The soldiers are called, and Don Jose and some of his men arrest Carmen and start to lead her away. As they pass the tavern, Carmen persuades Jose to let her have a word with Pastia before she goes to prison, and Jose, leaving the soldiers outside, accompanies her in the tavern. Morales, who is drinking, makes some insulting remarks to

ONE MILLION DOLLARS (Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.—Five Parts—Nov. 22).—The cast: William Faversham, Henry Bergman, George LeGuere, Mayme Kelso, Carlotta De Felice, Arthur Morrison, Charles Graham and Camilla Dalberg.

Richard Duvall, a noted English criminologist, while touring in India, saves the life of a Budhist priest who rewards him with the presentation of a wonderful crystal globe. By gazing in it the priest demonstrates that Duvall can fall into a cataleptic state and his astral body is released and is free to roam at will. Leaving the temple, Duvall collides with Grace Ellicott, who is touring the far East with her aunt, the Countess D'Este and the Count. A mutual admiration between Grace and Duvall results from the accidental meeting.

Later, in England, the mistress of Count D'Estes makes financial demands which he cannot meet. With his housekeeper, Mrs. Cooke, he plans to put his wife out of the way and thus obtain her fortune. Poison is put in candy which the Countess eats. Her sudden death arouses the suspicion of her niece. On his return to England, Duvall experiments with the magic globe. He is surprised and pleased to see the face of the girl he met in India. Further experiments, while in the cataleptic state, discloses part of the plot that resulted in the death of Grace's aunt, which has cheated her out of the fortune.

Duvall seeks out Grace to explain his strange experiments. She tells him that previous to the death of the Countess she had seen her will and that the entire fortune, which included one million dollars in cash, was to be left to her. But after the suspicious death of the Countess, Grace is puzzled when the Count produces a new will in which he is named the sole beneficiary. Duvall succeeds in having his East Indian servant, Purtab Gar, secure a position in the Count's home. Then he proceeds to unravel the mystery and at the same time recover the one million dollars for Grace. Count D'Este is driven to distraction by finding, everywhere he turns in his home, cards that read: "I want One Million Dollars. Victor Gerard."

Disguised as "Victor Gerard," Duvall pays a visit to the Count. He insists that the one million dollars be ready for him at midnight, when he will call again. D'Este notifies the police and the chief calls in Duvall to assist in solving the mystery and apprehending "Gerard." Duval outlines a plan in which the Count is directed to have the money ready as demanded. He assures him the premises will be well protected and that "Gerard" cannot escape. "Gerard" arrives at the appointed time and mysteriously disappears, together with the money, as the police close in. Duvall walks out of a room where they think they have "Gerard" trapped. Count D'Este accuses Grace of stealing the money and attempts to strangle her when Purtab Gar saves her. Duvall succeeds in obtaining a confession of the murder from the housekeeper, when he traps her as she is attempting to poison Grace. Duvall explains everything to the mystified police. D'Este is carried off under arrest and Grace and Duvall are left happily together.

We make more fans than all of our competitors combined.

No "TIRED EYES" AFTER THIS SHOW!

INDEED NOT, these "bright eyed," happy people have seen some corking good pictures on a corking good "Minusa Gold Fibre Screen," which has been scientifically "BUILT BY BRAINS" to fit the particular theatre they came from.

You never hear any "Grumbling" from the patrons after the show where a "Minusa" is used, because the "Picture Light" is so natural that their eyes NEVER GET "TIRED."

If you want a FULL HOUSE of satisfied "regulars" EVERY DAY, send us your specifications NOW.

Gundlach Projection Lenses

You can not get the BEST results without them, so what's the use worrying along with ordinary lenses when there is absolute certainty that these lenses will make your picture as sharp and brilliant as it is possible to make it. You can not afford to have a poorer picture than your competitor and nearly every theatre in the country is using Gundlach Projection Lenses now, so if you are not you are behind the game and badly handicapped.

There is no string attached to Gundlach Projection Lenses. They are sold subject to approval and you decide with your own eyes whether they improve the picture or not. They can be obtained promptly for any operating condition.

UNITED STATES WAR DEPARTMENT SPECIFIES
GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES

New York, May 15, 1915.

Gundlach-Manhattan Optical Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Gentlemen: Your letter of May twelfth, with reference to the advertising in connection with the Government's specifying Gundlach Lenses for the sixty-six machines, received.

There is no objection to advertising any of the facts in this matter, and in this connection we might state that both Gundlach Motion Picture and Gundlach Stere Lenses were specified, after exhaustive tests had been made.

The sixty-six machines were shipped to the Chaplains of the various army posts and were sent to China, the Philippine Islands, the Hawaiian Islands, Perto Rico, Canal Zone, and all over the United States.

Yours very truly,

Release No. 1 Was a Hit!

Premo has little to say because Premo believes that all the talk which is issued by every newcomer in the field has little value until the pictures appear on the screen and speak for themselves. If you want to know what Premo quality means, we refer you to our last success, "The Master Hand," with Nat C. Goodwin.

If you want to see the type of work that will appear under the name "Premo" every six weeks, with eminent stars in plays adapted to their particular abilities, we would like to talk with you, to answer any question you may put to us. Almost completed now is the eminent English actor whose "Grumpy" shall ever stand as one of the classics of the English speaking stage. Supporting Mr. Maude is an all-star cast which on Broadway or on the legitimate stage could be advertised as such. Mirroroid Is An Investment, Not An Expense

The ANTIQUE DEALER

Starring CYRIL MAUDE

An investment that will pay you 100% in results obtained, and will insure your future success as an exhibitor.

Why have over 9,000 exhibitors installed, and continue to use, the Mirroroid Screen?
Why do we publish more unsolicited testimonials than all other screen manufacturers combined?

Don't take a manufacturer's word for it. He has goods to sell, but it's you, Mr. Exhibitor, who has to foot the bills. Remember, it's not only the first cost you must consider, but unless you buy a screen like Mirroroid, of known and proven value, the cost to you in decreased receipts in the future will be pretty dear expense, and you cannot afford to experiment.

Mirroroid is not an experiment. It has brought success to thousands, and can do the same for you.
Do not hesitate, send for free samples now, and prove that Mirroroid is the screen for you.

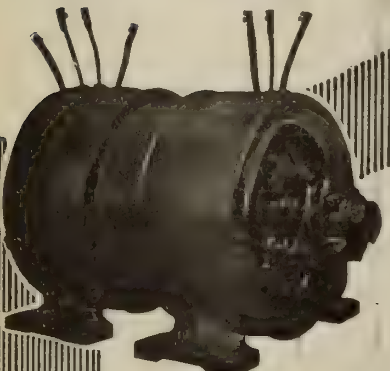
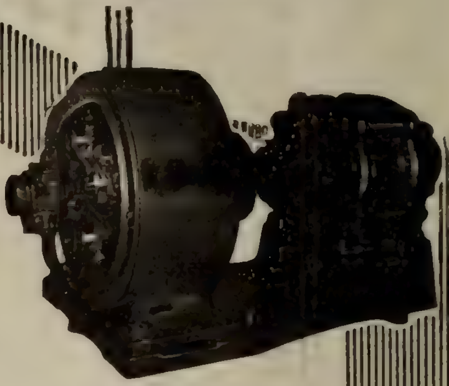
BETTER LIGHT

LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.



The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have—Alternating or Direct—or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

Compensarcs are so commonly found in motion picture theatres that many people now call all current saving and transforming devices by that name.

The Distinguished Artiste and Beloved Idol of the American Stage

Henrietta CROSMAN

Known to millions of people in her great stage successes

"Sweet Kitty Bellairs"—"Mistress Nell"
"Nance Oldfield"—"All of a Sudden Peggy"
AND MANY OTHERS,—IN

"The Supreme Test"

Produced under the direction of
Edward J. Le Saint at Universal City.

IN "The Supreme Test," Henrietta Crosman has a splendid opportunity for displaying those sweet, womanly charms and finished dramatic ability which have endeared her to millions. It is a fascinating comedy-drama of a wealthy woman devoted to work in the slums, who finds herself forced to live there later after the loss of her fortune. Then comes the "supreme test." If released by any other feature producer this picture would cost you in rental a prohibitive sum. Released at a reasonable advance on the regular Universal Program, this fine film drama will pack your house, and AT A PROFIT. Arrange to book it, advertise it and profit by it.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Read what the press says about it:

Evening Mail:
"And now that she has given herself to the screen she seems likely to add all the 'movie' fans to her admirers. For Miss Farrar can act. Act better before the camera in fact than on the stage at the Metropolitan."

New York Tribune:
"It is a pity that Geraldine Farrar can sing, for she is a remarkable movie actress. Undoubtedly Miss Farrar has never acted so well as she does in the screen version of 'Carmen.'"

New York World:
"Miss Farrar makes her part vivid and red blooded. It is real acting."

New York Times:
"As for Miss Farrar, let it be said that among movie actresses she is one of the best. When, if ever, she appears in another picture, the movie patrons will crowd to see it because they cherish her as one of their own. There is every indication that new millions will soon be calling her 'Our Geraldine.' This new movie star 'registers,' as the film folk have it. There is no doubt at all about that. She brings to the richly colorful performance a degree of vitality that animates all the picture and offers a good illustration of the difference between posing and acting for the camera."

New York Press:
"The Strand Theatre, wherein the film version of 'Carmen,' with Geraldine Farrar in the title role, is being shown this week, was the centre of a veritable mob all day yesterday. As a screen actress the beautiful Geraldine leaves little to be desired."

Motion Picture World:
"It goes without saying that such a Carmen as that of Miss Farrar will be enjoyed and admired everywhere. The entrance into the motion picture field of an artist of the renown and talent of Miss Farrar is bound to raise the prestige of the screen; it will benefit the industry generally."

Motion Picture News:
"In 'Carmen' Miss Farrar has established herself as one of the most remarkable actresses thus far seen in motion pictures."

Preliminary to the awarding of franchises on a regular release, this production will be sold outright on a state right basis.

A photoplay embracing a theme never before attempted in cinematography, and stupendous in its execution!

The action is laid in the semi-tropics of Florida, the desert wastes of Arizona, the awe-inspiring mountainous regions of interior Georgia, the canyons of Colorado, the decks of a three-masted schooner, and an ocean-going liner, and the parlors of refined New York.

As a standard by which all our releases may be judged, it was made without regard to cost, with an incomparable cast of stage and film stars, and is the last word in dramatic intensity.

RELEASED NOVEMBER 20TH
PROVES OUR CONTENTION

Mrs. de Marigny, a widow, without funds, leaves her little daughter, Grace, at a foundling asylum. That same day, an unidentified waif is brought to the asylum, and through the carelessness of a nurse, the babies are wrongly tagged. Several weeks later Mrs. Marigny returns for her baby, but learns it has been adopted by the wealthy Van Dorns, with whom she lets her stay. The real Grace has been adopted by a couple named Whitfield, who set her to work in a dressmaking establishment when she is fourteen. The Van Dorns have named their adopted child "Beatrice", and at fourteen she shows signs of inherited criminal tendencies. Her foster parents are willing to return her to her supposed mother, Mrs. de Marigny, now Mrs. Burleson, but through the absence of an identifying scar on the girl's arm, it is discovered that Beatrice is not her daughter. Meantime, the Whitfields are having a hard time and Grace is the sole support of the household. Beatrice goes from bad to worse, and spreads ruin and misery among those who come in contact with her. She finally runs away with a crook, and becomes a woman gangster. A political crook recognizes in Beatrice the daughter of his dead wife who had run away. On finding he cannot reform her, he kills her, then shoots himself, while Mr. and Mrs. Burleson, learn from Mrs. Whitfield and the Foundling Asylum authorities that Grace is their own daughter

Facts and Comments

ONE of the most gratifying returns of the recent election is the crushing defeat of Assemblyman Harold C. Mitchell, of New York City, who proclaimed on the platform and in the press that censorship of motion pictures was one of the issues in his campaign. Mr. Mitchell was perfectly frank about his intention to renew his attempt to fasten censorship on the industry in this state. It gives us no little pleasure to be able to say that the organized exhibitors in this city brought about Mitchell's defeat. They turned his majority in 1914 into a minority of more than seven hundred in 1915. Mr. Ochs, the president of the local organization, was most active in his opposition to Mitchell. There is no doubt whatever that the motion picture exhibitors brought about the defeat of this man who foolishly craved the distinction of becoming the father of legalized censorship in the Empire state. We are sorry for Mr. Mitchell. He is a young man with laudable ambitions and a clean record. He showed very poor judgment in wantonly attacking the freedom of the screen. He admitted that he knew next to nothing about motion pictures and that his wrath against the pictures was due to some terrible posters he had seen near his home. When he went on record with the statement that the "motion picture had superseded the Elmira Reformatory as a school for crime" he showed such narrowness of mind and such pitiable ignorance as to seriously impair his usefulness as a legislator. Censorship of motion pictures is getting more unpopular every day.

* * *

THERE are too many corners in Canada where the people are slowly traveling back to the middle ages. The British Columbia censors and all the ministers in that section are anxious to have films burned under the gallows by the public hangman and to have the wicked exhibitors and producers put in the stocks. They have honored The Moving Picture World by a fierce denunciation. Because we said that the "motion picture men know how to strike back at reactionary politicians" and that "the screen was no pulpit" we are accused of being in the "sinister conspiracy which has reached even British Columbia." These poor men still live in the days of Cotton Mather, who is now dead for something over two hundred years. The motion picture is distinctly an agency of enlightenment and must, therefore, be prepared for the opposition of every one who lags behind in the great procession of human progress.

* * *

THE Moving Picture World has prepared a complete summary of the legal status of the Sunday entertainment in the state of New York. Every decision by the courts is reported in full. We have prepared this summary because of many requests from exhibitors all over the country. They wanted to know just what the courts had decided. These decisions are of the utmost importance not only for the exhibitors in this state but for the motion picture men in the whole United States. The decisions of the courts in New York will undoubtedly be cited as precedents in other states. As the decisions cover twelve typewritten pages it was deemed advisable to issue them in a separate publication instead of printing them in the columns of the paper. We will send the pamphlet free of charge to any reader who will write for it. The publication contains much excellent material for a campaign in favor of a rational and legal motion picture entertainment on Sundays.

SHIFTING mixtures of features and programs are causing much chaos and confusion in exhibitors' circles. The process of fermentation that has been going on for a long time shows but little sign of clearing. One thing, however, stands out with alarming distinctness: There are altogether too many padded features and the public are positively getting sick of them. The writer himself in the course of twelve evenings spent at different motion picture theaters has witnessed atrocious cases of padding. The exhibitors will not stand it much longer. The public are beginning to long for the return of the old-fashioned single reel, which as a rule was entirely free from padding.

The Final Process*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

AS MANY a novelist has learned how to tell his story through assistance of a very practical nature from his publisher, and is indebted to that help for no small part of his success, so would the author of a screen play be benefited by contact with the editorial brains of a concern producing motion pictures. It is, however, rare for a publisher to concern himself with any kind of a script that requires general revision, whereas there is a tremendous labor of clarification, alteration and correction imposed upon the producer of visualized stories. Few authors deem it necessary to sit back and scan their scenario in an imaginative way, scene by scene, just as it is to be presented before an audience knowing nothing about the characters and their relations to one another, nothing about what is being said in conversation not imprinted, nothing about the significance of action that does not lucidly reveal its own motive.

One attitude of the average writer of screen stories is that of the literary nomad who has "plots" to sell. He will divide with any novelist who will incorporate one of his plots in a book, or make a similar generous arrangement with a dramatist for a play. He proposes to furnish the "idea" and let George do the rest. "George" used to be no one but the director, but there are craftsmen in the scenario departments of big concerns nowadays who select, eliminate, adapt and transform until the crude thing supplied by the author is prepared for work in the studio and field. George in the scenario department is often the real author, though unknown to fame. Then George the director has his innings.

George, the director, has learned from hard experience not to run short of material. If he has a five-reel feature in hand, he will take little rolls of negative summing up from seven to ten thousand feet. Some of this is interpolation, some of it continuity stuff, movement of characters between places, some of it is made by overplaying scenes, some of it little odds and ends that might come in handy This mess is sent to the scientific department and printed in positive. A certain degree of congruity is attained by matching up the positive rolls, and they are run off for preliminary inspection. There are some keen eyes and active hands required in the first expert collation, verification and elucidation, but the supreme test comes when several thousand feet of positive are to be cut out with no loss of interest and a gain in vigor. George, the director, often abandons the child at this point, leaving the final process to George, the editor.

George, the editor, has an absolute limitation staring him in the face. His task is only comparable to that of a publisher required to completely revise a 150,000-word novel in a few hours, so that it will be printed in 100,000 words, bearing all the marks of a highly finished work of art. Small wonder he fails so often! When Clara in a white negligee at the breakfast table suddenly jumps to Clara in her furs and flivver, it is because mercantile limitations compelled the elimination of intermediary scenes, showing Clara's progress from one to another not even permitting explanatory subtitles. This jumping is most often seen in small photoplays, where negatives have been taken largely in excess of positive requirements, and the effect is one that jars the spectator.

The best editors are those who combine in themselves all that is discerning, careful and sensible, with an admixture of artistic taste, all that knowledge and experience can contribute to good judgment. Editors are not born—they are made in the crucible of varied experience. The editor has less chance than the author to be dilatory and careless about results. Those results are not so far away as from the author, and they mean either profit or loss to capital at his elbow. An author may be serenely unconscious of his own idleness, imagine that he is at work when he is not—he is often unaware of how much he could accomplish until driven by hard necessity. The editor has a release date staring him out of countenance, an imperative demand upon his courage and his endurance. He has to work harder, even when at the top of the ladder, than any man in the studio from top to bottom.

Authors of undoubted creative genius succeed when they master the craft and themselves, but there are authors of undoubted creative genius who are inclined to take things easy, especially when the rent is paid. There is only one kind of an editor. On his rapid and untiring efforts depends the successful elimination of the unfit, provided by the director, and the successful providing for what the careless author has left out. Sometimes it is only a pertinent subtitle to clarify what is obscure, sometimes it means that whole scenes must be taken over again, if the sets are not knocked to pieces and the actors within reach. It is the editor's pure labor of unreciprocated love to readjust awkward construction, correct unpardonable errors and find a logical way out of the labyrinth in which author and director have become entangled.

Given a scenario of haphazard construction, in which there appears the slightest modification of original intention, and the director may succeed in reaching a skilful readjustment, but he usually requires a subject strong enough to warrant such pains. His mission is that of treatment, his to decorate the structure, not to devise it. If he should be tempted to stray into by-paths—he has been known to meander—it devolves entirely upon the editor to restore the semblance of a steady movement in the pictured story. In a few short hours he must rearrange and recombine while bringing the bewildering array of unmatched and incongruous positives down to fixed dimensions. It can be readily imagined, considering the limitations of his time, that his problems are too much for human ingenuity to solve with any hope of a polished result.

It is for the author to do one thing and do it well, the director to do another and apply more system to his work and the editor to see that the story is so unrolled before the spectator that the mechanical work is not visible. It is also imposed upon the editor to clarify wherever the audience needs information with brief explanatory subtitles, a few words and nothing more. This requires skill rarely found outside of those who are constantly studying and using the language. It helps greatly if the author offers subtitles of his own at the intricate places, if only by the way of suggestion. There is a new office coming into existence, one which involves an unusual combination of constructive imagination and selective taste, the Supervisor. From his skilled supervision we may expect a more satisfactory exposition, one that is "straightforward and swift and clear."

FATHER KNICKERBOCKER'S purse getting constantly thinner it is now proposed to banish fiction from the libraries as a measure of public economy. Well, come to think of it, a goodly lot of the worth while fiction has been put on the screen.

Freuler Extends Holdings

President of Mutual Film Corporation Takes Over $720,000 of Stock Formerly Held by H. E. Aitken.

A FINAL step in the realignment of offices in the Mutual Film Corporation is indicated in the announcement made during the week of the purchase of $720,000 of the stock of the corporation by John R. Freuler, president of the concern. The stock acquired by Mr. Freuler was that held by H. E. Aitken, former president of the Mutual, and by the Majestic and Reliance companies.

This constitutes an important addition to the Freuler holdings in Mutual stock. It is a financial sequel to the operations which culminated in the election of Mr. Freuler to the presidency of the corporation, succeeding Mr. Aitken in June.

Marked changes of policy in the Mutual film service to exhibitors have been instituted by the Freuler administration, with resulting extensions of the business calling for the establishment of seven new branch offices in the United States and renewed activity in Canada.

The Mutual now has a total of sixty-eight branches in the United States and the Dominion of Canada. The field forces of the company have been practically reorganized and the service to the exhibitors all over the country has been placed in direct connection with the home office in New York. Many of the modifications and readjustments made may be traced to the experience of Mr. Freuler as an exhibitor of motion pictures. He is still an exhibitor, beside holding large interests in the distribution of films. He controls a number of theaters in important centers. He began in the motion picture business with a small theater in the west and has grown up through all the experiences of a successful exhibitor.

Mr. Freuler's increased investment in the Mutual is taken by film men to indicate his high degree of confidence in the future of both the Mutual Film Corporation and the picture industry. It is probable that no other man in America has such important holdings in any one film concern.

Julia R. Hurley

WITH the increase of photoplays dependent upon characterization, rather than mere melodramatic action, the demand for experienced players is constantly growing. The thoughtful director casts his pictures with the utmost care, realizing the necessity for like-like portrayals even in the minor roles. He must have some one who looks and acts the part.

Julia R. Hurley.

For several years, now, Mrs. Julia R. Hurley has been known to the producers of the most artistic pictures made in this country as the ideal type for parts requiring an elderly woman. Mrs. Hurley's versatility has been proven times without number, for she is a thorough actress trained in an exacting school. Long before photoplays came into the amusement world, she was recognized as one of the most capable character actresses on the American stage. During the forty-five years of her career behind the footlights she was associated with such renowned players as Charlotte Cushman, Mr. and Mrs. William J. Florence, Mr. and Mrs. Barney Williams, and Harrigan and Hart. She also was a member of the old Niblo Garden company and was in support of Kate Claxton in "The Two Orphans" on the night of the Park Theater, Brooklyn, fire.

With the advent of motion pictures Mrs. Hurley soon showed that she could adapt her art to the new medium and in the early days contributed many valuable characterizations to Reliance and Solax productions. Her Meg Merrilies in "Guy Mannering" is one of the memorable portrayals in screen history. Since then she has worked under many directors with unfailing success. Whether the part be large or small, Mrs. Hurley may be counted upon to give a flawless performance. She is an actress and a woman of whom the profession may well be proud.

Travels Distance to View Serial

UNDER date of October 28 J. G. Conner, representative in Indianapolis of the North American Film Corporation, writes the Moving Picture World as follows:

"Today a traveling salesman, representing a large wholesale house in Chicago, called at this office, stating that up to this date he had been fortunate enough during his travels all over the United States to see consecutive chapters of "The Diamond from the Sky" each week, and desired to know where this day he could see Chapter 25. That chapter will not be shown in this city this week in any of the thirty or more houses showing the production, but will be shown tomorrow in Peru, Ind., which is the nearest town that will exhibit that particular installment. We informed the salesman to this effect, and he stated that he was going to Peru especially to see Chapter 25, even though it was a trip of approximately seventy-five miles out of his regular route.

"This article should have a tendency to convince some skeptical exhibitors and the public in general of the intense interest and suspense carried from one chapter to another."

In filming "Heights of Hazard," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, picturized by Eugene Mullin from Cyrus Townsend Brady's novel of the same name, the realism of an African hunt scene was emphasized by the use of a real lion. Although Charles Richman and Eleanor Woodruff, the principals, did not take part in the scene, they were interested spectators and occupied a position just back of the camera. All during the taking of the scene, the lion appeared restless, and although obeying the commands of his trainer gave evidence that something was wrong. The actors were conscious of the unusual strain on the keeper, but concluded their work without any mishap. When the scene was finished, the trainer turned his back for an instant. The lion gave a mighty roar and, heading for the little group of players around the camera, gave one tremendous spring. The keeper and cameraman both drew their revolvers, but before they had a chance to use them the lion had accomplished what he set out to do. He had demolished the camera. Then, without paying the slightest attention to the frightened and cowering actors, he calmly walked over to his cage and waited for his master to open the door.

FOUR ACRES OF STUDIOS FOR AMERICAN.

Increased demand for the Flying A, Clipper Star Features, Beauty and Mustang photoplays put out on the Mutual program, has resulted in impressive additions to the plant of the American Film Company at Santa Barbara, California.

Within a few days work will be completed on a new glass studio and related structures covering a total of 25,000 square feet, giving the American an aggregate of four acres of studio space on their plant, which has recently been enlarged to cover a plot of ten acres.

The new glass studio covers an area of 80 by 130 feet, and is 22 feet in the clear inside. Adjoining the studio is a great new scenery dock, workshops, property store rooms and transformer rooms.

TOURNEUR AND BEBAN GO SOUTH.

Maurice Tourneur, vice-president and general manager of the new Paragon Film, Inc., and George Beban, his latest star, left New York Saturday night, October 30, for Birmingham, Alabama, where they will produce the original five-reel photoplay, "The Genius," by Mr. Beban. It may be called "Pierre, the Genius," or "The Genius, Pierre." The leading role is that of a Frenchman, which was M. Tourneur's idea. Mr. Beban originally intended to make him an Italian, but the director suggested that as the public knew Mr. Beban only for his work in Italian characters, it might be well to show them his versatility by doing a French part. A large company went with them. They will be gone about two weeks, many of the interiors being taken here.

Kleine Features at Candler

"The Danger Signal," and "Keep Moving," Will Be Shown Positively on Sunday Evening, Nov. 14.

TWO George Kleine productions, recently completed at the big Bronx Studios, will be shown at a private exhibition at the Candler Theater Sunday evening, November 14th. One is a drama, "The Danger Signal," featuring Arthur Hoops and Ruby Hoffman, and founded on the Saturday Evening Post story by Rupert Hughes, "Canavan, the Man Who Had His Way." The other is a comedy entitled "Keep Moving," which, in the opinion of those privileged to witness advance showings, has absolutely no equal in the history of film comedies. Harry Watson, of Bickel & Watson, is the star of "Keep Moving," and he is supported by a galaxy of comedians which includes his famous partner, George Bickel, Cissy Fitzgerald, Snitz Edwards, Maxfield Moree, Tom Nawn and the vaudeville team of Crimmons and Gore.

"Keep Moving," according to advance reports, is destined to prove the comedy surprise of the season. It contains more hearty roars of laughter than any production released under the Kleine standards, which is saying a great deal in view of the popularity of "Officer 666," and "Stop Thief," which were generally considered the Alpha and Omega of their kind.

Harry Watson, who won such wide renown as the tramp in Ziegfeld's early "Follies" shows, is again seen in his old make-up bearing the more or less appropriate name of Musty Suffer and doing all of those inimitably funny bits of business which did so much to popularize the Ziegfeld entertainment. He is unquestionably the greatest tramp comedian in the world. As Bickel, Watson and Wrothe, the original team will be remembered in the three-act comedy. "Me, Him and I," but the later combination of Bickel and Watson is better known in connection with the "Follies" and innumerable vaudeville tours.

"Keep Moving" is five continuous reels of chuckles and roars. How highly it is regarded by the Kleine forces is amply attested by the barren offices when word goes forth that some part of it is to be projected for editing or other purposes. At such times every worker from George Kleine himself to the humblest office boy, slips quietly into the darkened room for ten clandestine minutes of joy.

Bryson Forms Supply Company

Former Universal Manager at Minneapolis Takes Leave of Absence—To Establish New Concern.

JAMES V. BRYSON, who has represented the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at Minneapolis, Minn., for many years, announces that he has asked and secured leave of absence for ninety days from his duties as manager of the Minneapolis Universal Exchange and that he will form a company to be known as the Northwestern Motion Picture Equipment Company, to be located in the new Garden Theater building, 622 Hennepin avenue, Minneapolis. David B. Rogers will be associated with Mr. Bryson. He is known to every exhibitor in the Northwest.

James V. Bryson.

The new company will be distributing agent for the Power and Simplex projecting machines for their territory and will handle everything necessary to equip a modern picture theater. The long connection with the trade enjoyed by both Mr. Bryson and Mr. Rogers should place them in a position to command the patronage of a large majority of the exhibitors in their chosen territory.

In the conduct of the Universal's Minneapolis office Mr. Bryson will be succeeded by Dan B. Ledermann, formerly manager of the Laemmle Film Service at Des Moines, Iowa. Mr. Bryson speaks in the highest terms of Mr. Ledermann and predicts that he will soon become popular with the trade in his new field.

Veritas Photoplay Company

Cincinnati Men Organize a Producing Company—Will Build Studio.

THE organization of the Veritas Photoplay Company, of Cincinnati, has been completed, with the election of the following officers: Andreas E. Burkhardt, president; Otto Luedeking, vice-president; Isadore L. Baer, treasurer; M. R. Short, secretary, and John von Rittberg (Jacques Jensen), general director. These, with the following, compose the board of directors: Alfred Vogeler and J. L. Steele, State Fire Marshal. All of the officers and directors are substantial business men of Cincinnati, and two of them, besides Mr. von Rittberg, Messrs. Burkhardt and Luedeking, are also interested in other moving picture ventures. The company is thus assured of adequate capital for the development of its plans, which include the construction of a studio in or near Cincinnati and the regular production of photoplays, principally features, for the general market.

John von Rittberg.

Winifred E. Jensen.

Director von Rittberg has gone to New York and Chicago for the purpose of arranging for the production of the company's first feature, which will be a nine-reel sociological drama dealing very frankly with certain aspects of life. This is by Winifred E. Jensen, who is the company's editor and scenario writer. She is well known for her contributions to the literature of the stage, and has had considerable experience in writing for the film. Mr. von Rittberg expects to close contracts in New York for the major portion of his cast, and the production itself will be handled in Chicago, as arrangements have been made there for facilitaties for that purpose. It is probable, therefore, that the company's first feature will be out some time before it has completed its arrangements for work in Cincinnati.

Florence Turner in Impersonations

Former Vitagraph Star Will Appear in a "MinA" Release of November 25.

THE fact that Florence Turner is to appear in a MinA Comedy should prove of more than ordinary interest to the moving picture exhibitor. "Florence Turner Impersonates Film Favorites" will be the title of the MinA release of November 25th.

One of the pioneers of the screen who brought the moving picture from obscurity to its present important sphere, Florence Turner is as much in demand today as she was when she first became popular as a moving picture star. It was over fourteen years ago when Florence Turner started to gain popularity as a Vitagraph player and was the first star to be featured by the Vitagraph Company. In those bygone days Miss Turner held an executive position as well (for, in the infancy of the business, "doubling up" was a common occurence), on nice days posing before the camera and on cloudy days performing the duties of cashier of the Vitagraph Company.

Some of the earliest multiple reelers featured Florence Turner and her work in such features as "A Queen for a Day," "Auld Lang Syne," and "A Tale of Two Cities," will long be remembered.

In "Florence Turner Impersonates Film Favorites" she demonstrates her remarkable versatility as a mimic with the following impersonations. The old style Pathe heroine, Ford Sterling, Mabel Normand, the "Divine Sarah," Wild West Billy, the old style Biograph, and others.

Impersonations on the screen are rare. Stars in one reel comedy films such as Florence Turner are even more rare. With this release MinA Comedies can indeed feel that they have added a feather to their cap.

Toomey Joins Mirror Films

Leaves the Triangle Corporation to Become Vice-President and General Manager of New Concern.

W. C. TOOMEY, who came into the motion picture field from the ranks of "big business" when he joined H. E. Aitken in forming the Mutual Film Corporation. Through his previous association with such men as James J. Hill his knowledge of the ins and outs of big corporations gave especial value to his services and much of the success that attended the launching of the Mutual project was due to his peculiar ability.

While with the Mutual Mr. Toomey mastered the intricacies of the film business until today he is considered to be one of the best informed men in that field.

Leaving the Mutual about a year ago Mr. Toomey became associated with Kessel & Baumann and continued with them during the formation of the Triangle Film Corporation. When Clifford H. Harmon, president of the newly formed Mirror Films, Inc., looked about for a competent manager, Mr. Toomey was suggested and subsequently accepted the position of vice-president and general manager. Because of his knowledge of the marketing of pictures he will be especially valuable to the new concern.

W. C. Toomey.

Mr. Toomey is already in the harness and is surrounding himself with a capable staff of experienced men and will be ready to dispose of the product of the new company as soon as the work of production is under way.

Phil. Walsh, Director

PHIL WALSH, director for the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company, of the Associated Program, is a man of varied talents, being an actor, author and director of long standing.

He went around the world with Mr. Brown Potter and Kyrle Bellew on their second world tour, and was with George Rifnold in "Henry V.," "Antony and Cleopatra," and "Julius Caesar." Later he joined Alfred Dampier, opening the Prince of Wales Theater in London with a dramatization of Rolf Bolderwood's "Robbery Under Arms." and toured India, China and Japan with the late John F. Sheridan, in George R. Simm's Drury Lane drama, "When the Lamps are Lighted."

During the South African war he spent 21 months in Africa as special correspondent for the Sydney Morning Herald, and was at the signing of peace at Pretoria. He is the author of "The Swanee River," "The Eclipse of Venus," the "Magic Mummy," the "Substitute," "A Romance of California," "The Irish Detective," and other popular plays.

Mr. Walsh was director and character actor with Harris and Rich, and created the part of Sheridan in Tom Moore with Mack, under engagement to Charles Frohman. He toured Australia with this play and directed all of Mack's productions. He returned to America with Bishop's players, and appeared at Ye Liberty Theater in Oakland.

He joined the scenario staff at Universal City at Hollywood and has written over 100 produced pictures. After a year with the Universal he became scenario editor of the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company and is now their principal director and editor-in-chief of the scenario department.

Police Interfering With Cameramen

Sears of Hearst-Selig and Schmidt of Animated Arrested in Two States When Recording Serious Fires.

TWO instances of police interference with news cameramen have come to the attention of the Moving Picture World this week. In each case the operator was engaged in recording fires, Dick Sears of Hearst-Selig in Peabody, Mass., and Albert Schmidt of the Animated Weekly in Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mr. Sears, within an hour, was three times arrested and twice had his film destroyed. The third time he was permitted to keep his film after a controversy with the local chief of police.

Mr. Schmidt's experience with the police was harsher than that of his brother cameraman in Massachusetts. He was placed in a cell and his film was destroyed. The fire, one of the worst in Pittsburgh in several years, resulted in fatalities, twenty-two girls being trapped by the flames.

Cameraman Schmidt was in Pittsburgh on Government work. He reached the scene of the blaze about ten minutes after the alarm was rung, with a placard on his camera reading "Universal Animated Weekly of New York." Having a police pass he went into the police lines. When he began operations, he says, he was told by a policeman to stop. A big volley of flame was seen shooting out of the top story windows and some girls jumped out on to the telephone and telegraph wires, where they hung on for a few seconds and dropped to the ground. Schmidt had about 150 feet of this scene taken when two policemen seized him and attempted to break his camera, but as he held it firmly they were unsuccessful. However, they took Schmidt and his camera, threw him into the patrol and drove him to the station, where he was locked in a cell while the police opened his camera, removed the magazine, opened it and removed the film, which the moment it was exposed to the light became spoiled, saying as they did so that a film like that could not leave Pittsburgh.

Dick Sears Under Arrest.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company has instructed its attorneys to look into the matter and undertake any prosecutions necessary to obtain satisfaction from this infraction of the rights and privileges of its men, and will fight to the end any unlawful oppression against any of its cameramen.

Premier Program Proposed

Another Company Announces Its Entrance Into the Program Field—Promises Fifty-two Features Annually.

THE Premier Program Corporation, with offices at 126 West 46th street, New York, announces that it is in the field and promises to supply fifty-two features annually, one five-reel feature every week.

G. Blake Garrison, secretary of the Premier Program Corporation, said: "Our organization is founded upon the great modern business tendency of co-operation. We are all firm believers in accomplishing the best results by working together. Our success is dependent on and bound up with the success of the exchange man and the exhibitor and we are all going to work together for the maximum good of all concerned and the Premier Program.

"Each feature is made under the supervision and subject to the approval of the Premier Program Corporation. It must not only meet the standard set by each producer for his own work but must also undergo an examination at the hands of the sales company. For these reasons every picture released on this program will reach the exchange, only after having undergone a double scrutiny by competent, efficient and critical judges.

"Premier pictures will be released through independent exchanges and will be sold outright to the exchange—there will be no percentage of profit sharing schemes offered, nor will there be required any large cash deposits by exchanges."

Busy Bunch of Players

The Equitable Motion Picture Corporation's Production Department Maintains Its High Pitch of Activity.

MARSHALL FARNUM, who has been away in Cuba during the past three weeks completing the production of "Creeping Tides," in which Alexandra Carlisle and an all star cast will appear, returned to New York this week with the finished negative, and immediately began work at the Fifty-second street studio on "The Man Higher Up" in which Frank Sheridan, William H. Tooker, Clara Whipple, Mary Charleson, Frank Beamish, Harry Spingler, Myrtis Coney, Anita Booth, John Booth, and George Arbene will appear.

Scene from "Creeping Tides" (Equitable).

Mr. Farnum, for the production of "The Man Higher Up," has procured the consent of the police department, the New York Clearing House, and several branches of the civic administration's quarters, where many of the scenes will be laid in their proper locale, without the necessity of building studio imitations.

Webster Cullison returned last Saturday from Martinique, French West Indies, where he went early in October to stage the chief scenes in "Idols," in which Katharine Kaelred is appearing. Mr. Cullison is now at the Flushing, Long Island, Equitable studios, and is to start work on "The Chain Invisible," in which Brandon Tynan, the noted dramatic actor, will appear, and which will be the first of Albert Le Gallienne's stories to be visualized.

E. Mason Hopper, accompanied by William Courtenay, Mary Charleson, Arthur Ashley and William Sheer, leave Saturday night for Au-Sable Chasm, where many of the scenes in "Sealed Lips" will be staged. When "Sealed Lips" is finished Mr. Hopper will begin work on "Three Pair of Shoes," in which Julia Dean will make her screen appearance in her first important feature. Miss Dean, who recently appeared in "The Law of the Land" for William H. Brady, has been doing small work before the camera in order to fit herself for the work and now feels competent of doing in the silent what she has accomplished in the speaking drama.

S. E. V. Taylor, formerly with Biograph, and now an Equitable director, will begin work Nov. 12 on an original story entitled "One Night," in which Molly McIntyre will make her screen debut. Miss McIntyre, the original Bunty in "Bunty Pulls the Strings," and "Kitty McKay," was to have appeared in "The Modern Girl," but when Mr. Tavlor joined Equitable he brought with him the scenario of "One Night," and Miss McIntyre immediately selected this for her first camera work.

Edmund Lawrence, directing genius of the Triumph Film Corporation, who is completing his final scenes in "The Senator," in which Charles J. Ross makes his first Equitable appearance, will return to New York from Washington next week and begin work with Mary Boland in "The Ransom," which will be Miss Boland's first camera work.

Joseph Golden, also of Triumph, which concern is one of the chief producing allies of Equitable, will be at work within the week on the production of "Old Clothes," in which Lenore Ulrich, last seen in "The Better Woman," will star.

In addition to the above activities the Equitable announces the acquisition of numerous stars and directors. Brandon Tynan, Mary Boland, Olive Wyndham, Thomas A. Wise, William Courtenay, Mary Charleson, Arthur Ashley, Gail Kane, Molly McIntyre, Julia Dean, Emmett Corrigan, Frank Beamish, Charles Cherry and Carlyle Blackwell have all joined the Equitabe. Gail Kane has been contracted with for exclusive appearance in Equitable films for a period of two years. Muriel Ostriche has been engaged for three years. Molly McIntyre has been contracted with for a long period, to appear in numerous pictures, while Charles Cherry and Carlyle Blackwell will make their appearance in at least six Equitable productions.

Before December 1, General Manager Felix F. Feist expects to have ten directors at work in the three Equitable studios and enough features of merit on hand to offset any emergencies for the following six months.

Equitable now has six productions on the shelf, all of which were shown the World Film sales and division managers at Chicago, last week, and with the ten directors active, it is anticipated by the Equitable heads that they will have, at least, twelve productions ahead before Jan. 1.

Maude George

One of the Newer Universal Players Who is Doing Splendid Work at the West Coast Studios.

ALTHOUGH she has been with the Universal Company but ten months, Maude George has proved herself to be of inestimable value to the West Coast directors. Her services are constantly in demand by a score of producers, but the men who direct the Broadway Universal Feature pictures have been given first preference when they ask for her for roles in their photoplays.

Maude George.

Miss George appears in "Business is Business," in which Nat Goodwin is featured, and finely plays the role of the wife of Isidore Lechet, a particularly thankless part. She played Muriel Evers in the film production of Joseph Medill Patterson's novel, "A Little Brother of the Rich," and showed her histrionic ability in the Smalley picture, "A Cigarette—That's All." When it became necessary for an actress to dive from a bridge over the Universal's artificial lake, in Turner's production of "The Scarlet Sin," Miss George offered her services for the difficult feat. She played the leading feminine role in "Both Sides of the Cross," and in "The Frame-up," featuring George Fawcett. In the latter subject she showed remarkable strength, sharing the honors with Mr. Fawcett.

Miss George was born in Riverside, Cal., not far from her present home in Universal City. She was educated in Los Angeles, and played in the Burbank Stock Company in that city. Then she played in vaudeville with Valerie Bergere and with Conroy and LeMaire. She prefers dramatic roles to comedy parts, and has made her greatest success in them. Her latest screen achievement are her portrayal of the lead in "Tainted Money," and the part of the queen in the second film version of the series entitled "The Adventures of Terence O'Rourke." J. Warren Kerrigan plays the leading part in this serial picture, and the second story, in which Miss George appeared, was called "When a Queen Loved O'Rourke."

CORRECTION OF ADDRESS.

Through error the address of the Broadway Film Co. was given in that firm's advertisement in the Moving Picture World of October 30 as 110 West 45th street. It should have been 110 West 40th street, New York.

Locating "Stingaree"

Great Similarity Between Australian and Californian Topography Helps Producers.

THE natural beauties of California are proving of great advantage to Director James W. Horne who is now working on Kalem Company's new series, "Stingaree." The scenes of the romantic novel from the pen of E. W. Hornung, celebrated as the creator of "Raffles," are laid in far-off Australia, and when the preliminary details in connection with the series were being arranged it was ascertained that the similarity between that country and California is very marked.

Scene from "Stingaree" (Kalem).

Ideal locations were found within a few miles of Kalem's Glendale studios. In fact, the topography of the Pacific Coast readily lends itself to the production of the pictures.

"In going over the situation," said Mr. Horne the other day, "I found that the principal tree of Australia is the eucalyptus. Since California abounds in eucalyptus forests, this point was simplified. In checking off the other points, I found that Australia has a desert—and so has California. One of the principal industries of Australia is sheep raising, and there are large flocks of sheep in this state. All the way down the line I found that the natural advantages of the state were going to make my task lighter.

"In the smaller details, however, it was slightly more difficult. The saddles used by Australians differ very materially from those used here, and so it was necessary to cable to Sidney for as many saddles as were required.

"In spite of the many details that demand attention, I am certain that even the closest observer will not distinguish in the various episodes anything that will differ from the original in Australia."

The first episode of this series, "An Enemy of Mankind," will be released Wednesday, November 24.

EDGAR LEWIS AND LUBIN PLAYERS RETURN.

Ethel Clayton, House Peters and Director Edgar Lewis of the Lubin Company, with the company of sixteen Lubin players, returned from the Grand Canyon of Arizona and Gallup, New Mexico, during the past week. For the past four weeks the company has been encamped at the bottom of the canyon taking scenes for the coming Lubin V-L-S-E feature, "The Great Divide." Director Lewis is entirely pleased with the results his players and cameramen have gotten for him and feels confident that with the completion of the interior scenes of the picture at the Lubin Philadelphia studios a worthy production indeed will be offered to the public. Many wonderfully picturesque scenes of the Canyon, secured with the aid of the Lubin portable auto lighting plant, have been made and seldom have more artistic lightings been seen in a negative than that which "The Great Divide" will present.

CUB COMEDY RETITLED.

"Who's Who?" the title originally selected for the Cub comedy, scheduled for release on the Mutual program for Nov. 5, has been changed to "Twin Brides."

Frederic Arnold Kummer

WITH the increasing demand for authors of photoplays who are especially gifted in this comparatively new profession, it is interesting to note that Frederic Arnold Kummer, the well-known novelist and playwright, who is devoting a major part of his time in writing for the screen, declares photo drama authorship calls into play a more deep and vivid understanding of human emotions than was ever required in any writings of the past. Mr. Kummer has several Broadway plays to his credit, besides scores of books and short stories. Among some of his plays are "The Other Woman," "A Daughter of Eve," "The Brute," "Mr. Buttles," "The Painted Woman" and others. His novel, "A Song of Sixpence," was one of the six best sellers in 1913.

Frederic A. Kummer.

Mr. Kummer was seen at the Rolfe-Metro studio where his latest novel, "One Million Francs," was picturized under the title of "One Million Dollars," and which will be an early release in the Metro program with William Faversham in the stellar part.

"The future of the motion picture has barely been suggested by what has been done so far," he said. "It is useless to deny that we live in an age of mental and material activity, more intense than the world has ever known before. Naturally, action, brilliant, purposeful, immediate in its appeal to the emotions, has replaced to a large extent, the spoken word. The sight of the charging regiment, a moving ship, appeals more directly to the minds of the great public than thousands of words of description, no matter how well written. And it is idle to assert that the big thoughts of life cannot be transmitted directly to the brain through the medium of the eye, instead of by the more laborious methods of the pen picture, which requires a mental effort on the part of the reader to visualize, to make real.

"I have seen motion pictures that have stirred me as deeply—perhaps more deeply—than any play or book depending on the spoken or written word.

"It is true that this putting of big thoughts in the form of action is not an easy task. The public, to a large extent, is forcing the author, the motion picture producer, to do for it what imagination has done in the past. And here we have the author's problem. It is not an easy one. He must grasp, understand, the effect on the mind of the public of action, movement, and he must produce this effect in a few seconds of time. He can no longer take his time, turning out page after page of mere words. He must strike deeply, to the primal emotions, and get his response from the movement of a hand, the glance of an eye, the motion of a crowd. He cannot depend upon the imagination of his audiences. He must appeal to them directly, instead of by circumlocution. That is his problem. It is a fascinating one, and its solution calls into play a more deep and vivid understanding of human emotion than was ever required in any writing in the past.

"I think the motion picture will tend to unite author and public in closer and more vital bonds than could ever have been possible so long as between them stood the barrier of words."

Mr. Kummer began his literary career about eight years ago, giving up a paying position as chief engineer of a large contracting company in New York to devote his time to writing.

Mr. Exhibitor, if you are interested in Sunday entertainments send for our pamphlet, "The Sunday Show and the Law." Sent free upon application.

Mark Twain Works for Motion Pictures

Lasky Company Completes Arrangement with the Owners of the Copyrights.

THE works of the late Mark Twain will be related in motion pictures. Tom Sawyer, Huckleberry Finn, Injun Joe and the scores of other famous characters from the late Samuel Langhorne Clemens' (Mark Twain's) books will be immortalized in photoplay form. Arrangements for the exclusive picturization rights to Mark Twain's works were completed this week by Samuel Goldfish, in behalf of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. The rights were obtained from the Mark Twain Company, in the hands of which the literary affairs of the famous humorist have been placed, and Harper & Brothers, publishers.

Probably no other American author's works have been so eagerly sought for motion pictures as the writings of Mark Twain. The characters of his famous books are household names throughout the English-speaking world, and his writings have been translated into scores of different languages. They have been universally enjoyed, and millions of persons of all ages and all classes have laughed and sobbed with Twain's masterful characterizations. The picture rights include not only America but the entire world.

A few of the important and best-known works of Mark Twain which the Lasky Company will picturize are "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer," "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," "Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," "Captain Stormfield's Visit to Heaven," "Following the Equator," "Innocents Abroad," "Pudd'nhead Wilson," "Roughin' It," "Tom Sawyer Abroad," "Tom Sawyer, Detective," "The Jumping Frog" and many others. There are scores of shorter stories by the late Mark Twain which lend themselves admirably to picturization.

For the purposes of scenic and literary accuracy it is probable that the Lasky Company will send a company of players, a staff of photographers and directors right into the heart of the locality where Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn lived their thrilling lives. Life on the Mississippi River, adventures in the caves, escapades on the islands and other features will be taken full advantage of.

Lubinites Give Party

THE Lubin Annual Beneficial Association presented the Lubin Players in vaudeville at Lu Lu Temple, Broad and Spring Garden streets, Monday evening, November 1, 1915, before an audience of four hundred people. Prof. Hundertmark and his famous orchestra opened the program with a finely rendered overture, following which Wally and Lottie Helston appeared in their racing specialty. Next upon the program came Messrs. Potter and Hartwell, who caused the house to roar with merriment with their funny antics in a European comedy.

Jack Pratt, accompanied on the piano by F. Singhi, next entertained with several well rendered vocal selections. A playlet was next presented entitled "Seal of Silence," in which Walter Law made a most realistic Catholic priest. He was supported by Miss Betty Martin, James Cassady and Frederick Herzog. No mention need be made of the manner in which the audience received Raymond Hitchcock, who next appeared, the name speaking for itself. Mr. Hitchcock brought down the house with funny impersonations of Siegmund Lubin. Mr. and Mrs. George Spink next entertained with several popular songs.

An intensely human drama entitled "Birds of a Feather," next held the attention of the audience throughout, the parts of Roger Mosop, a cracksman, and Crags, a sneak thief, being most ably portrayed by Richard Buhler and Miss Rosette Brice. Miss Carrie Reynolds then sang several popular songs which brought forth outbursts of applause. The entertainment was brought to a close with a side-splitting farce by Billy Reeves and Harry Watson, of the team of Bickel and Watson, who appeared through special permission from his manager, George Kliene. Messrs. Reeves and Watson presented their famous boxing act, which was the score in the Follies of 1908.

Following the vaudeville performance, accompanied by strains of music from Prof. Hundertmark's orchestra, every one repaired to the ball room where dancing commenced. It was a remarkable sight to watch the brilliantly costumed moving picture stars whirling about the floor to the tune of some inspiring one-step or fox-trot. During the dancing, boxes of candy, dolls and many other amusing articles were raffled off by Lubin players; the paddle wheel to the left of the ball room attracted much attention. A still flashlight was taken of the entire crowd and then the dancing was resumed. Merriment reigned supreme and festivities continued up until the wee small hours of the morning.

Much of the success of the evening's entertainment must be attributed to the earnest and persistent work of the entertainment committee consisting of James Cassady, Walter Law, Wally Helston, Kempton Greene, Bartley McCullum, Donald C. Scott, Gus Anderton, Joseph Keegan, Charles Hyatt and James Burn. Mr. Donald Clifford Scott, secretary of the Lubin Beneficial Association, must also be recommended for the interest which he displayed in looking to the success of the affair. Both financially and socially was the ball voted a triumph and the members of the various committees who worked industriously in endeavoring to make such a condition possible, are to be complimented on the manner in which the entire evening's entertainment was conducted.

Not Belasco Play

Famous Players Version of "Madame Butterfly" Is "Something Else Again."

THE filmed version of John Luther Long's story, "Madame Butterfly," which the Famous Players Film Company has announced for presentation, with Mary Pickford in the title role, according to an announcement from David Belasco, is not a picturization of his dramatic version.

Mr. Belasco was prompted to make a statement concerning "Madame Butterfly" for the film by reason of the fact that many of his dramatic productions already have been done in motion pictures, by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. The film version of "Madame Butterfly," however, is not included among the Lasky-Belasco productions.

Under an arrangement made more than a year ago by Mr. Belasco and Samuel Goldfish, executive manager of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, the film rights to such Belasco productions as Mr. Belasco might consent to release for motion pictures were exclusively reserved to the Lasky Company.

"Concerning 'Madame Butterfly'," said Mr. Belasco, "I made a one-act dramatic version of John Luther Long's original short story in 1900, which I produced and in which I presented Miss Blanche Bates in the role of Cho-Cho-San.

"The picturization of 'Madame Butterfly' made by the Famous Players Company has no connection whatsoever with my dramatic version which also formed the basis of the grand opera, but only concerns the story.

"In dramatizing the story I naturally invented and introduced dramatic situations and a succession of scenes that did not occur in the original, and these are my property. Since the Famous Players Film Company did not obtain from me the motion picture rights to my dramatic version, their picturization of 'Madame Butterfly' naturally does not include any of my dramatic situations and inventions, but has to do only with John Luther Long's story."

OPIUM OUTFIT USED IN KALEM FEATURE.

In its production of "The Dream Seekers," the Kalem Company introduces a scene in an opium joint, and it was only through the friendship that an official of the Golden Gate City has for James W. Horne, who directed the picture, that it was obtained. For several years now the federal and state governments of California have had the Chinese quarter under control and practically have stamped out all of the vice that made its ill-repute.

When Mr. Horne was confronted with the problem of obtaining the proper atmosphere for "The Dream Seekers" he went at once to the official of San Francisco and secured his assistance. Then application was made to the United States government for permission to remove a complete outfit that had been confiscated from the warehouses where it had been stored.

This permission finally was secured and then Mr. Horne set about the task of getting a Chinese to aid in arranging the set. Here was a stumbling-block. Nowhere could he find a Celestial who would admit having any knowledge of how an opium joint appeared when in full operation. For three days he searched without avail, and it was not until a Chinese interpreter employed in one of the municipal courts volunteered that he was able to get the effects desired. So the scene as shown in the Kalem picture, which will be generally released in a short time, is an accurate reproduction of an opium joint.

The World-Equitable Convention

In Session at Hotel La Salle, Chicago, November 1, 2 and 3, with a Large Gathering of Officials and Division and Branch Managers in Attendance.

THE World Film Corporation's division and branch managers and the official representatives of that corporation and of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation spent three busy days, beginning Monday, November 1, at the Hotel La Salle, Chicago. The main object of their deliberations was to systematize and standardize the salesmanship of the corporations mentioned, and of other concerns releasing through the World organization.

Harry Drum, principal assistant of Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, had charge of the meetings, and he was hard at work from morning until night, while the convention was in session. Mr. Drum had previously arranged an elaborate and simple system that covered every point in the salesmanship of the World's output. He had compiled two books for this purpose, one showing the advantages of the World and allied service, and the other containig a series of illustrations which conduct a salesman from his first step up to the position of division manager. The latter volume has been pronounced by a financial expert one of the best and most complete business books, in this respect, yet compiled.

The banquet given Tuesday evening, in the large dining-room of the La Salle, at which over fifty covers were laid, was pronounced one of the most enjoyable events of its kind by everyone present. The large hall was turned into a sea of floral coloring and the speech-making, which was of happy and appropriate character, was varied by music and specialties.

The proceedings were opened by the presentation of a magnificent gold-lined silver loving cup to Mr. Selznick from the members of his sales force. The presentation speech was made by W. W. Drum, of Chicago, in feeling and eloquent terms, and was received with prolonged applause. Mr. Selznick received the gift with becoming embarrassment, thanking the donors briefly and promising to address them at greater length later in the evening.

A few moments afterward, Joseph Klein, branch manager of New Orleans, arose and, on behalf of his associates, bestowed upon their leader, Harry Drum, a valuable gold watch in token of the very great service they all felt he had rendered them. Mr. Drum, who was considerably taken aback by the enthusiastic demonstration of good will that followed Mr. Klein's remarks, replied in well-chosen words, conveying his thanks and expressing his confidence that the selling force of the World Film Corporation would make far greater strides in the immediate future than in the past. This was considered one of the very best features of the evening.

Accompanying the service of good things upon the menu, there was a running fire of speech-making, interspersed with telegrams of congratulation and encouragement from prominent men associated directly and indirectly with the World Film Corporation and its allies. The branch managers spoke at some length, all in a spirit of loyalty to their organization and of personal affection for their chief and friend, Mr. Selznick.

Those who joined in these expressions of fidelity and good will were: C. W. Bunn, Washington; W. W. Drum, Chicago; S. E. Morris, Cleveland; E. W. Dustin, St. Louis; W. E. Knotts, San Francisco; Joseph Klein, New Orleans, and Charles K. Brehm, the latter holding the time record for service in the World Film Corporation's sales department.

Following these were brief and informal addresses by Harry Reichenbach, publicity representative of the Equitable, and by Leander Richardson, similarly engaged in the service of the World Film Corporation.

James Metzenbaum, a prominent attorney and political leader of Cleveland, who at the last minute was induced to act as toastmaster, then called on Arthur H. Spiegel, president of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation. Mr. Spiegel recited briefly his experience in organizing the Equitable and his going to New York to find a suitable outlet for its product. He said that no matter where his advice came from, or what the recommendations it contained, it was invariably accompanied by a warning that whatever else he did, he should avoid the World Film Corporation and steer clear of Mr. Selznick. Apparently, however, every knock was a boost; for Mr. Spiegel was not very long in deciding against all his advisors, and in hooking up with the World and Mr. Selznick. He concluded that there must be "something to" a man who could enlist the fear and jealousy of so many rivals. Mr. Spiegel went on to say that the Equitable was very well satisfied with the character and quality of its output up to date, and that it would surely make and market the very best pictures to be found anywhere in the country, in future.

Samuel J. Schaeffer, a Chicago attorney, then recalled many interesting experiences in his almost life-long relations of intimate friendship with Mr. Selznick, and proceeded to urge a united effort toward the enactment of a federal censorship law which would supersede, and do away with the annoyance and oppressions of State censorship.

M. J. Spiegel, when introduced by the toastmaster, told how his brother Arthur, had suggested to him the extreme advisability of going into the motion picture business, the gigantic strides of which had attracted his attention and aroused his ambition. M. J. Spiegel had not paid any particular attention to this great industry up to that time, but after a few consultations with his brother, he became equally enthusiastic on the subject, and so, in due course, the Equitable was formed. He felt that this organization was destined to play a very prominent part in the moving picture world, and gave renewed assurance that the product of the company would always be maintained at the very highest standard of quality.

Sydney M. Spiegel, the third of the Spiegel brothers, was next introduced, and he made a brief, humorous and enjoyable address. He stated that he had gone to New York with his brother, Arthur, to investigate the matter of distribution, and that up to the time he called upon Mr. Selznick and heard that gentleman say a good word about himself, he had never heard anybody refer to him except in terms of extreme opprobrium. This produced a roar of laughter, in which none joined more heartily than Mr. Selznick himself. Mr. Spiegel concluded his remarks by expressing the utmost confidence in the World Film and in its guiding genius, the guest of the evening.

Alfred Hamburger, director of a chain of moving picture theaters in Chicago, then delivered a witty and friendly speech around the personality and talent of Mr. Selznick, after which Toastmaster Metzenbaum, who had been saving Mr. Selznick for the last and most important feature of the program, related his association with the honored guest of the occasion, from the time when Mr. Selznick used to visit the Metzenbaum family in Cleveland—at which time the speaker was a boy of seven. Between the two, there had been formed at that early time an affectionate regard, which had grown and ripened by the passing years until they became the closest of friends. This tribute was so touchingly eloquent that when Mr. Selznick arose to respond, he had considerable difficulty in controlling his emotions.

Mr. Selznick's remarks were entirely informal, and as soon as his modest embarrassment has disappeared he told his "boys" that the present was the happiest moment of his life, because it had brought him into closer touch with those upon whom he relied to conduct the details of the great business that had been built up by the World Film. In simple narrative he recalled his experiences, stating that when his attention was first directed toward the motion picture business, he felt worried—not because so many men were making a great deal of money out of it, but for the reason that he had not been able to declare himself in. His friends and acquaintances, to whom he confided his views on the subject, one and all advised him that he had better keep away from the moving picture business; that it took brains of a very high order to master the details of this intricate occupation, and that he really ought to turn his attention to some other field of usefulness, if he hoped to win success.

He explained to those of the evening guests, who were in the employ of the World Film Corporation, that in the early and organizing days of that body, it had been necessary to engage and dismiss employees until a condition of very nearly 100 per cent. efficiency had been established. That situation having been attained, however, every employee might feel the utmost confidence that so long as he stuck to Selznick, Selznick would stick to him, and that nobody under any circumstances would be removed from the position he occupied without a thorough hearing and a careful and complete investigation.

Mr. Selznick's remarks turned to the utmost earnestness when he was outlining the future of his company, and when emphasizing the positive instruction that all the managers employed by the World Film Corporation should establish a basis of complete and absolute equality between that organization and the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation.

Among those present at the banquet were: Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, and vice-president and advisory manager of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation; A. H. Spiegel, president of the Equitable, and M. J. Spiegel and Sydney M. Spiegel, associates in the Equitable; Leander Richardson, director of the World's publicity department; Harry Reichenbach, director of the Equitable's publicity department; Samuel J. Schaeffer, a Chicago attorney; James Metzenbaum, a prominent attorney and political leader of Cleveland; Ed. J. Mock, of Motography; Mr. Reynolds, of the Chicago American; Mr. Hollender, of the Chicago Daily News; Rapley Holmes, Chicgo; Harry A. Drum, A. M. Landau, Myron Selznick and G. J. Schaeffer of New York; C. W. Bunn, Washington; Ben S. Cohen, Buffalo; Denham Palmer and S. B. Morris, Cleveland; Clay K. Brehm, Cincinnati; W. A. Ratz, Indianapolis; I. H. Hirsch, Pittsburgh; W. W. Drum and I. L. Klasky, Chicago; E. W. Dustin, St. Louis; T. Y. Henry, Kansas City; P. Goldstone, Omaha; J. A. Salter, Minneapolis; W. E. Knotts and R. H. Clark, San Francisco; G. P. Endert, Seattle; Charles R. Gilmour, Denver; Hugh M. Rennie, Salt Lake; Joseph Klein and M. F. Barr, New Orleans; Mr. Goldberg, Atlanta; L. S. McHenry, Dallas; M. Rodriquez, Los Angeles, and F. H. Vine, Boston.

Film Men Will Aid Actors' Fund

Samuel Goldfish Appointed Chairman of Committee to Solicit Among Motion Picture Interests.

A MOST important step in the "Million Dollar Campaign" for the Actors' Fund of America has been consummated when the help of the motion picture interests of the United States was enlisted this week. It was announced at the headquarters of the committee in charge of the campaign, presided over by Dr. William C. O'Donnell and Mrs. Florence R. O'Neil, that Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Lasky Feature Play Company, had accepted the chairmanship of a special committee restricted to the motion picture industry to assist in raising the million dollars to put the actors' home on a sure foundation and assure the permanency of this very worthy charity.

Mr. Goldfish will organize a general committee on which will be representatives of the leading producing and distributing organizations of the country. This committee will concentrate its energies towards showing the motion picture performers and those closely related to the profession the acute need of responding to the actors' fund. The headquarters of the committee will be in New York, but Jesse L. Lasky is expected to supplement the work by organizing the 10,000 motion picture players in and around Los Angeles.

The work of Mr. Goldfish and Mr. Lasky will be the easier for the fact that so many of the legitimate actors and actresses have gone into the films this season. Motion pictures have often been accused of having done more to make the actors' home a necessity than any other factor, but they appear to have evened the score by their present voluntary offer to help. It is expected a large sum will be realized for the fund through this method.

There are more than 20,000 motion picture theaters in the United States, according to the statistics, and about 88,000,000 persons regularly attend the shows, it has been figured by the experts. The theaters in all parts of the country will be addressed and special headquarters organized in every state to more readily keep in touch with these theaters.

MACKENZIE TO MAKE "THE WEAVERS" FOR PATHE.

Donald Mackenzie, having finished his Gold Rooster play, "Mary's Lamb," the Broadway success written by Richard Carle, has been given by Pathe Gilbert Parker's novel, "The Weavers," as his next picture. "The Weavers" has been remarkably successful as a novel and, in the opinion of competent judges, contains great material for a picture. Mr. Mackenzie is now selecting his cast and will probably begin active work within a day or two.

GEORGE LARKIN VISITING NEW YORK.

George Larkin, the photoplayer, known for many thrilling feats, and who for some time has been in Los Angeles, dropped in on New York last week. Mr. Larkin intimates he will remain at least long enough to get a good look at Broadway.

Mr. Exhibitor, if you are interested in Sunday entertainments send for our pamphlet, "The Sunday Show and the Law." Sent free upon application.

Raver Company Begins Work

Players Called for "The Other Girl," a Thomas Subject, to Be Ready December 15.

THE Raver Film Corporation has taken over the new W. Lindsay Gordon studios at Staten Island, New York, and began operations in its new home on the elaborate interior scenes of its first production, "The Other Girl." These studios have just been erected and are thoroughly modern to the minutest detail. Having both the advantages of daylight through glass and adequate artificial lighting equipment, scenes may be photographed at any hour of the day or night. Ample space has been provided for erecting five sets at one time.

Harry R. Raver, president of the Raver organization, is elated over the results of two weeks' organization work on the part of his producing staff to complete the huge cast of the first Raver-Thomas production. More than two hundred players were called by Percy Winter, the chief director of the Raver forces, before selecting the fourteen principal characters of the widely-known Thomas play. Among these characters, persons in many walks of life are represented. Ranging from children of four and five up to men and women of sixty and seventy years of age, the characters used to portray Mr. Thomas' "The Other Girl" include an ex-champion pugilist, a minister of the Gospel, an anaemic society fop, a celebrated health specialist, a judge of the Supreme Court, a corps of trainers of the cauliflower-eared type, a vivacious girl of eighteen possessing rare beauty, an unusual police captain, a sedate young woman of twenty-one, a butler who thinks himself guardian of an entire family, a wealthy banker with a heart, a cook who finds time to dabble in family affairs, a reporter with a keen sense of humor but a decent sort, a music hall dancer with a following, an intelligent dog, a chauffeur with a speed mania, together with types found in fashionable theater audiences, typical devotees of the prize ring, kids and kiddies of the country school and men and women about town.

Contrast in plenty is thus promised for the picture production of "The Other Girl." Of course, the question arises, "Who is the other girl and why is she?" Thousands who laughed and wept at the stage play in the heyday of its success already know the reason for the unusual title which Mr. Thomas gave to it, but to the new generation the picture production must tell its own story, as Mr. Raver believes in pleasant surprises as a tonic for the masses.

"The Other Girl" is the initial Raver offering and will be ready for distribution about December 15.

Baltimore Has Gertrude McCoy Theater

Leading Woman of the Plimpton Company, with Duncan McRae, Assists at the Opening.

THE Lord Calvert Theaters Company of Baltimore had a gala opening of their new and fourth theater, the "Gertrude McCoy," located at Fulton avenue and Baker street, on October 30. It is an exclusive photoplay theater, embodying the most modern, up-to-the-minute and distinctive requisites, and has a seating capacity of eight hundred.

Gertrude McCoy and Duncan McRae of the Plimpton Epic Pictures, Inc., journeyed to Baltimore to be present at the opening and were treated to real Southern hospitality as the guests of Frederick Baker, president of the company.

There was round after round of applause from the fans when Miss McCoy was introduced from the stage. After a brief address in which she expressed the deepest gratitude for so royal a reception and appreciation of her work on the screen, the lights were dimmed and "Through Turbulent Waters," written by herself, and in which she plays the leading role, was exhibited.

Miss McCoy was busily engaged after the performance in distributing mirror souvenirs which the management had supplied for the occasion.

OVERSEAS FOR ONE FILM PLAY.

Tom Terriss, president of the Terriss Film Corporation, has made arrangements with his famous sister, Ellaine Terriss, and her popular husband, Seymour Hicks, to come to this country and appear in the filmization of one of the their best known plays, "Bluebell in Fairyland," a class of work not before attempted in motion pictures. This is in all probability the first time two such well known stars have journeyed overseas for the production of a single photoplay. Mr. Terriss also has completed a contract with his sister and brother-in-law, whereby he has purchased the picture rights of all of their stage successes, some of which are very well known in this country.

Chicago News Letter

Moving Pictures to Aid in Teaching Reading and Writing and the Deaf to Speak.

IN THE University of Chicago's School of Education several professors are engaged in evolving means to improve the reading and penmanship of backward pupils, who have just the same advantages as others who surpass them.

This is a problem centuries old. In a school of 50 children, all may receive the same training in reading and writing, yet only a few learn to write rapidly and well, and only a few learn to read fluently and unhesitatingly. The problem to be solved may be put in the form of the question, Why is this?

John D. Rockefeller's general education board of New York City is financing the research work at the Midway school, where, under the general direction of Dr. Charles H. Judd, the research in reading is being conducted by Professor C. Truman Gray, and the research in writing by Frank N. Freeman, assistant professor of educational psychology. At the close of a year's experiments, Dr. Abraham Flexner, chief of the board already mentioned, will make a report of the results obtained.

Children from the grade schools of Chicago, ranging in age from six to twelve years, will be the subjects of the experiments.

Professor Gray has set up a sort of reading clinic. In his laboratory is a large tube-shaped piece of apparatus for taking moving pictures of the eye movements during reading. It ascertains how many times the reader's eyes move while reading a line, how many times they stop and at what part of the line they stop.

Alongside this is a delicate phonograph used to reproduce each syllable read. This enables Dr. Gray to study the reader's enunciation. There also is an "attention apparatus," a machine similar to a stereopticon, which projects the material to be read and snaps off the projection at will by means of a shutter.

The purpose of the apparatus is to determine how far ahead of the spoken word the mind is reading. For instance, if the last sentence were projected by the machine and the light had been snapped off when you were reading "apparatus," you would be able to speak a few more words—those which were in your mind. The greater the number of these words the more fluent the reader.

His general scheme of operation is: He selects pupils who are poor in reading. He has the pupil read orally and also silently from selections which are made gradually more difficult. He tests for power of reproduction and then uses the machines.

In addition, there will be dictagraph records of good and bad reading voices. And the general trend of all the experiments will be toward "teaching educators how to educate." Incidentally, there will be an effort to ascertain just what style and size of type are most readily legible.

Thus Dr. Gray is enabled to find out most of the causes for poor reading, and to make recommendations for correction.

Regarding good penmanship, the theory is that it is a question of the training of the hand. In order to learn exactly how to train the hand, motion pictures will be made. These will show the hand action of the best writers and of the worst.

By an analytical study of the films afterward, the professors hope to learn the secret of correct writing—to learn it so scientifically that it can be taught to every pupil whose hands are normal.

In connection with the foregoing researches, it will be interesting to learn that deaf persons will be taught in future to speak with as clear a tone quality as normal persons, a feat due to the discovery of scientists working in the laboratories of the University of Iowa.

The tonoscope, a musical instrument invented in the laboratory for the study of the pitch of the voice, is now said to be of so great service in teaching the deaf to speak that in a short time they will be able to converse freely and with a pleasing quality of speech, rather than the rasping sound formerly uttered.

The tonoscope furnishes a substitute for hearing. With it the deaf person can use the eye instead of the ear to find the correct pitch of his voice and may practice until he gets the muscular control that will enable him to gauge the voice in terms of muscular sensation.

The procedure is simple. The instructor stands in front of the tonoscope and speaks a sentence and the tonoscope shows a moving picture of the speech. The pupil then speaks until his voice makes the same moving picture as that of his instructor.

Having a definite model, he can practice until he has obtained an appreciation of pitch of the voice that becomes habitual and familiar in terms of the muscle sense, which, next to the ear, is of most value in giving information about the pitch of the voice in ordinary speech.

The school for the deaf in Milwaukee is now trying out this method with good success. It is considered assured that in time the deaf will be taught to speak clearly and plainly.

Wm. N. Selig Withdraws as Member of Chicago Board of Education.

Wm. N. Selig returned from a six weeks' trip to California, on Wednesday, November 3. During his absence he was paid the coveted honor of being appointed a member of the Chicago Board of Education by Mayor Wm. H. Thompson.

Owing to his complete absorption in his numerous business interests, Mr. Selig has been forced to decline to serve on the board, as the appended letter to Mayor Thompson shows:

Chicago, Nov. 5, 1915.

To the Honorable Wm. H. Thompson, Mayor,
City of Chicago.

Dear Sir: Kindly withdraw my name as a member on the Board of Education. My business interests elsewhere would not allow me to attend the meetings of the board regularly. I wish to thank you for honoring me and am sorry that I must decline.

Believe me to be,

Very truly yours,
WM. N. SELIG.

Chicago Film Brevities.

During my vacation of two weeks and one-half, spent in Mt. Clemens and Detroit, Mich., I was much impressed by the great popularity of moving pictures, as well as by the keen, critical intelligence of their patrons. In Mt. Clemens I was surprised to find a fine, modern theater, the Bijou, with a seating capacity of 1,000, devoted to photoplays every day of the week, except Sundays, when vaudeville is offered. Mr. Peltier, part owner and manager of this well-managed theater, has an interesting history, which I reserve for a special article in the next issue. In Detroit, the people are the most enthusiastic supporters of moving pictures that I have seen anywhere. The theaters are a credit to the city, and several of them will rival the best in New York or Chicago, or any other city. I was particularly gratified by the magnificent showing made by the Majestic theater, in a high-class residential district, on Woodward avenue, about two miles from the center of the city. In its construction it can be truthfully said that it was built with the screen as the main objective point, always. There is not a poor seat in the house, from the screen viewpoint. One is distinctly impressed, after entering, when the 1,800 seats are all occupied—as they customarily are, I understand—by the distinct prevalence of "class." Many are in evening dress, and the sea of faces, looking towards the screen from the seats on the great inclined plane back of the loges, had an exhilarating effect on me. There was "class" everywhere—in the great audience, in the program, in the projection, music, stage settings, vocal numbers, the neat, attractive uniforms of the ushers, and in the polite dignity of the brass-buttoned, colored colossus who tends to patrons as they arrive and depart in a seemingly endless line of taxies. My old friend, M. W. McGee, is managing director of the theater staff, assisted by R. von der Goltz, who is both artist and genius in the matter of stage settings.

Mark Vance, whom I met several years ago when he was on the staff of the old Show World, called at the office the other day, and informed me that he is now on the staff of Variety and that he had come on to Chicago from New York to take the position of Chicago representative for that publication.

I ran across Abe and H. M. Warner in the office of the Hotel La Salle, one day last week, while the World-Equitable convention was on. Abe informed me that he and his brother had formed a company for the purpose of taking over features of the World Film Corporation and allied companies, after they are through distributing them. A deal has just been closed with the World Film Corporation for all of its used product. Quarters have been rented by the Warner Brothers in Chicago, in the same building in which the World's Chicago office is located. Abe Warner also stated that offices of their company will be opened in all the leading cities of the country. The Warner company will be known as the New Film Corporation.

R. R. Nehls, general manager of the American Film Mfg. Co., has informed me that the office force in North Edgewater moved into the offices in the new building on Tuesday, November 2.

I regret to announce that Richard C. Travers, while playing the lead in "The Undertow," a forthcoming Essanay thriller, sustained severe injuries while taking the part of a tramp in that production. The part required him to board a freight train which was moving at a rapid rate. The accident occurred at Niles Center, Ill., on Thursday, October 28, when Mr. Travers attempted to "flip," or jump on, a train, on the car next to the engine. It appears that the engineer, who was much interested in Mr. Travers' feat, was looking out of the engine cab at the time. A sudden gust of wind blew his hat off and struck Dick full in the eyes, blinding him, and causing him to miss his hold on the freight car. As the result he fell and sustained many bruises and a long gash in one of his arms, also the fracture of a small bone in one of his hands. Mr. Travers was brought to Chicago immediately, in an auto, and his wounds dressed at his apartments by the company's surgeon. It has been given out that nothing serious will result and that Dare-Devil Dick will soon be back on the job to indulge in more hair-raising escapades.

E. E. Mandelbaum, of Cleveland, widely known in film circles throughout the country, in various capacities in the industry, and who is now one of the most substantial exhibitors in his home city, visited Chicago one day last week. He informed me that he is now building a large, modern theater that will seat 2,500 people, and which he expects to open about April 1, 1916. It will adjoin the Statler Hotel, on Euclid avenue. He stated that the cost of the new structure, not including the real estate, will be in the neighborhood of $300,000. Mr. Mandelbaum now controls the Knickerbocker theater, seating 1,200 people; the Metropolitan, seating 1,600; the Dome, seating 750; the Lakewood, seating 600; the Madison, seating 600, and the Virginia, with 500 seats, all in Cleveland. He reported very good business during the summer months, and stated that it still continues. He presented "Carmen" at the Metropolitan for a two weeks' run, and after a lapse of one week brought it back for one week more. The presentation was made with special stage settings, with a twenty-five piece symphony orchestra and prominent vocal soloists. The prices were 25, 50 and 75 cents and $1.00. The showing was made to capacity houses all the time and many were turned away nightly. For the week of November 7, Mr. Mandelbaum will put on Mary Pickford in "Madame Butterfly," on the same elaborate scale and at the same prices as in "Carmen." He is now negotiating with V-L-S-E for "The Battle Cry of Peace," for a run of not less than four weeks, at "Carmen" prices.

Wm. N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, will be seen in one of his own photoplays, for the first time in his life, in the near future. He was sitting on a circus seat, in the Selig Zoo, at the time, talking to a friend. Unknown to him, the place in which he sat came in the range of the camera and was well filled by supers and others. The director rushed matters and caught Mr. Selig in the pictures before he became aware of the fact.

Recently, in conjunction with the Chicago Tribune, the Selig Polyscope Co. conducted a prize contest under the title, "The-Funniest-Thing-That-Ever-Happened-to-Me-in-My Life." As was stated in the last issue, in these columns, the first prize, of $175, was won by Peter Sherlock Gurwit, of Chicago. In a recent letter to the Selig company, Mr. Gurwit writes: "Allow me to express my thanks for your check for $175, the first prize awarded in 'The-Funniest-Thing-That-Ever-Happened-to-Me-in-My-Life' contest, and to further express my extreme pleasure at having won the capital prize." F. Burr Wiles, of Sayre, Pa., 313 South Elmer avenue, who has made written inquiries at this office concerning this contest, will please take notice.

Harold P. Brown, director of the Northwest Weekly, Minneapolis, called at the World office last week. He stated that he had taken moving pictures of the recent Illinois-Minnesota football game at Champaign, Ill., for the Weekly. He was accompanied by Wm. A. Lochren, president of the Weekly. Mr. Brown informed me that Mr. Davies, formerly in charge of the booking department of the Mutual, in this city, has joined the forces of the Northwest Weekly, in the same capacity.

Arthur H. Jacobs, president of the Triumph Film Corporation, New York City, attended the World-Equitable convention one day during the Chicago sessions. The product of the Triumph is released through the Equitable. I may state here that "The Master of the House," which I saw at the Majestic, Detroit, and which gave great satisfaction to the crowded audience, is a Triumph feature.

W. C. Clements, manager of the Harper theater, 53d street and Harper avenue, this city, is to be congratulated on the neat house program gotten out for his patrons. Two suits for $10,000 each have been filed against the Laemmle Film Service and the Universal Film Mfg. Co., in connection with the fire on a Burlington train, about a year ago, in which Henry S. Rich, Mayor of Berwyn, Ill., and Frank L. Poultney, were fatally burned. The plaintiffs are Harry H. Rich, administrator of the estate of Henry S. Rich and Mary E. Poultney, administratrix of the estate of Frank L. Poultney. It is charged that the films were negligently wrapped in paper, instead of being enclosed in a fire-proof box.

Chicago film circles have been much interested in the recent marriage of Kitty Kelly, photoplay editor of the Chicago Tribune, and Al. Chase, feature page editor of the same paper. "Kitty Kelly" is the non de plume employed by the clever little critic, as she is known in private circles as Audrie Alspaugh. Miss Alspaugh and Mr. Chase were united in holy matrimony at Glen Ellyn, Ill., on Oct. 30. She was an able reviewer of books on the Tribune before she joined the moving picture ranks, and is a graduate of the University of Iowa. The love making of the happy pair was conducted so cleverly that not one of the large force in the Tribune offices was aware of the fact that their marriage was impending. The bride and groom are spending their honeymoon in Los Angeles and vicinity, and "Kitty" has already furnished her paper with some interesting news from the big picture plants in that city.

The musical comedy, "The Girl of Tomorrow," will be closed at the La Salle Opera House, Saturday night, Nov. 6, to engage in a road tour. Jones, Linick & Schaefer will offer photoplay programs in the house until another stage attraction is secured. The first screen attraction will be "Pennington's Choice," a five-reel feature in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne appear in the leads.

A despatch from Seattle, Wash., states that many hundreds of miles of moving picture films have been shipped from that port, during the past year, to Japan, China and other Oriental countries. The pictures sent to Japan and China are chiefly educational, with popular comedy successes in addition. The best theaters in Japan and China are now being used for the presentation of pictures, at low prices. Everybody goes, as the result. In some of the large cities certain educational films are made a part of the high school course. The volume of exports has been so large that the trans-Pacific steamers are provided with fire-proof vaults for the storage of films.

The numerous friends of D. J. Chatkin, manager of the United Film Service, this city, will regret to learn of the sad accident in which his sister, Miss Bertha Chatkin, was killed and he himself badly bruised, but not seriously injured. The staff of the Chicago office convey to Mr. Chatkin their deep sympathy and condolence.

A charge against W. C. Braun and A. Westergard, instructors in the Coyne National Trade School, and C. N. Calbeck, a graduate of the school, of conspiring to violate a city ordinance, was quashed Thursday, Nov. 4th, in the Chicago avenue court by Judge John J. Rooney, on motion of Attorney Beerley, who held that a criminal procedure could not be brought. The men were accused of conspiring to violate the city ordinance, which provides that an applicant for a license as a motion picture operator must have served for one year as an apprentice or have been an actual operator in some other town for six months.

A committee of the Chicago Moving Picture Machine Operators, Local No. 110, A. T. S. E., called on Mayor Thompson, Thursday, Nov. 4th, accompanied by the attorney of the union, Charles E. Erbstein, and urged him to veto the ordinance passed at the last council meeting, which permits moving pictures to be shown in clubs, schools and churches without the employment of licensed operators, if "slow-burning" films are used. Mr. Erbstein asked that the mayor veto the ordinance on the ground that the union had not been given an opportunity to be heard on the measure. He also informed the mayor that the ordinance permitted machines to be operated in churches and school houses by inexperienced operators, with great danger attached.

The Central Film Co., of this city, gave a private presentation at the La Salle theater, Friday morning, Nov. 5th, of Capt. H. J. Lewis' five-reel feature film which shows the life, customs and scenes in San Francisco's Chinatown and Barbary Coast. Captain Lewis is one of San Francisco's pioneer Chinatown guides.

During my stay in Detroit my attention was frequently attracted by the long lines of waiting people outside the Grand Circus theater, on Woodward avenue, where "Damaged Goods" was being shown. I learned that the house took in $8,000 during the first week's presentations of these remarkable pictures, and, judging from the great crowds in attendance during the second week, when I was there, the receipts should have easily reached, if they did not exceed, those of the first week. No minors were permitted to enter by the management.

FRANKLIN FILM COMPANY.

The Franklin Film Manufacturing Company has recently been incorporated under the laws of Delaware, as being of Philadelphia, for the purpose of conducting a general film business. The new concern has been capitalized at $200,000, the officers being Freeman Bernstein, formerly general manager of the Continental Photoplay Corporation, who is the president and general manager; Jacob Edelstein, well known real estate operator of the southern section of Philadelphia, treasurer; Alexander W. Weidenfeld, real estate broker, secretary; Maurice Rose, Esq., well known attorney at law of the Widner building, director together with other well known business men in Philadelphia. The new company have leased the studios of the Liberty Manufacturing corporation, 20-54 East Herman street, Germantown, and a farm at Barren Hill, comprising 251 acres, where every facility is provided for scenic and rural productions.

THE STAR, THE PRODUCER AND THE AUTHOR.

Here they are, Signal's famous triumvirate—Helen Holmes, star, J. P. McGowan, producer, and Frank Hamilton, author of "The Girl and the Game," the sensational and romantic novel now being screened as a special feature for Mutual and which will have its first release December 13. Mr. Spearman, recognized as one of the greatest American writers, has been paid the largest amount ever given an author to contribute his literary genius to the realm of motion pictures —$25,000.

And Helen Holmes, dainty, charming, dare-devil that she is, has dared the author to do his worst in the matter of death-defying situations. In this, however, Mr. Spearman has the aid of the producer, Mr. McGowan, who in order to cascade the thrills and bring every ounce of fear-making energy to bear, built a regular railroad all his own, with engines and cars and all the appurtenances of a sure enough passenger and freight carrying line.

WELSH GOES TO KALEM.

Robert E. Welsh, for the past two years editor of the motion picture department of the Dramatic Mirror, leaves that publication this week to assist in the advertising and publicity work of the Kalem Company. Mr. Welsh entered the motion picture field as a trained newspaper man of varied experience, and since his connection with the Dramatic Mirror has won an enviable reputation as a writer on photoplay topics.

We might comment that this list needs a little bit of revising if the reader wants to use it for reference purpose. For instance, a number of subsidiary companies like various brands of Universal, etc., have been listed individually. Also a few of the concerns above mentioned are now out of business or not producing at present. However, the list is quite complete and gives an idea of the many moving picture enterprises in Los Angeles at the present time.

THOMAS A. EDISON AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

Great Inventor Lays Cornerstone of Big Electric Studio at San Fernando Valley Plant.

UNIVERSAL CITY is such an unusual attraction that it is an object not only for the millions of people who enjoy seeing moving pictures, but also for many of them who are actively engaged in the business of making them. Some weeks ago Siegmund Lubin, head of the moving picture manufacturing company which bears his name, was entertained at Universal City, and was shown all over its vast extent. He was tremendously impressed.

Thomas A. Edison has been attracted to Universal City. President Laemmle, who expected to be present at the laying of the cornerstone of the great electrical studio which is just being started at Universal City, asked Mr. Edison if he would do him the honor of laying this cornerstone, and Mr. Edison gladly accepted.

On Friday night, before an immense audience which cheered him repeatedly, Mr. Edison was handed a large copper plate bearing an inscription which chronicled the date, the building, the fact that Mr. Edison laid the cornerstone, and other important data.

Kneeling on the ground, Mr. Edison placed the copper plate upon the stone, and it was fastened there while the crowd cheered. The Klegel lights had been arranged in such a way that excellent moving pictures were taken of this interesting event. These will be shown in the Universal Animated Weekly.

After the ceremony Mr. Edison entered the beautiful Universal Theater and viewed moving pictures made of himself and party, which consisted of Mrs. Edison and her sister, at Santa Barbara, at one o'clock that same afternoon, by the Universal Animated Weekly cameraman.

"Speedy work," was Mr. Edison's comment after the film had been run.

ROTHAPFEL IN BIG COAST CITIES.

Talks to Exhibitors in Los Angeles and San Francisco and Carries His "Message of Success."

S. L. Rothapfel, who is covering the country on the Rothapfel-Mutual tour, is now in the far west visiting the coast cities. The tour is proving a progressively increasing success as it extends from city to city. Despatches from San Francisco and Los Angeles tell of the meetings in those cities.

Every city in this territory was represented at the Rothapfel-Mutual luncheon held here on November 2. There was an ovation at the conclusion of Mr. Rothapfel's address. The exhibitors declared it the biggest thing ever done for the exhibitors in the history of the industry and expressed their appreciation of this effort on the part of President Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation.

Many of the exhibitors of Southern California turned out to the luncheon and met Mr. Rothapfel, who spent a part of his three-day stay here visiting the film studios and picture communities in the city and vicinity.

Among those present were: P. D. Gold, president National Drama Corporation, Los Angeles; B. E. Lober, manager Pathe Exchange, Los Angeles; J. M. Goertz, Bijou, Los Angeles; Seth D. San Francisco, Nov. 5.—The Rothapfel-Mutual tour banquet, held here last night, brought together a big gathering of motion picture men. Exhibitors and film men from all sections were present and took part.

Mr. Rothapfel, the guest of honor, spoke for two hours, holding his audience in close attention. He was followed by a number of other speakers, including Marcus Loew, of New York; Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, of Chicago; H. W. Mosby, commissioner of exposition for Australia; Irving Ackerman, president of the Hippodrome circuit; C. W. Midgely, of the Franklin Theater of Oakland; Jack Partington, of the Imperial Theater; E. B. Johnson, of the Turner-Dahnken Circuit, and Sidney Grauman, of the Empress Theater. Eugene H. Roth, of the Portola Theater, one of the biggest theaters on the coast, was toastmaster.

The speakers paid high tribute to the Mutual and Mr. Rothapfel for the enterprise of the tour in behalf of the motion picture theater business in general.

Among those in attendance were W. F. Hanell, Chester Roeder, A. M. Bowles, Louis G. Stang, R. H. Herbert, Joseph A. Huff, H. E. Schmidt, Emil Kerrlein, F. Habakoss, Joseph E. Levin, W. S. EIGHT BALBOANS NEAR DEATH.

Location Car Turtles on the Highway.

E. N. Walloch, one of Horkheimer's new directors at the Long Beach plant of the Balboa, has suffered hard luck since taking over a company at the beach studio. Saturday last he went out to a location in a big seven-passenger touring car with eight persons aboard. While on the way to the studio, after shooting many scenes, the car rounded a curve and before the driver could swerve either way a small car which was rushing along on the wrong side of the road, collided with the large car, causing it to turn turtle, spilling the passengers. Jack Abrams, the assistant director, suffered internal injuries. He was the most severely injured of the eight players in the car. Miss Joyce Moore and Robert Grey were also badly injured. The remainder of the travelers were only slightly bruised and shaken up. The car was a total wreck, and had to be dragged to the studio, where it will be completely rebuilt.

ANITA KING—PARAMOUNT GIRL INDEED.

Returns a Hero to the Lasky Studio—At Dinner Given by Screen Club Is Made Honorary Member.

The automobile industry and the motor fans of the country have their hats off to that girl of the pictures, Anita King, the Lasky-Paramount girl who piloted a touring car across the continent unaided and unescorted.

The fair actress who did the hazardous stunt arrived "home" safely and happily this week and was made an honorary member of the Scream Club and wined and dined at the largest hotel in the city on Sunday evening. The Screamers turned out stronger than ever and paid homage to the picture queen of the cars.

M. G. Jonas. of the Universal, when called on by Toastmaster McGaffey, Lasky's able publicist, said "Miss King is not only a good driver, and a good player; she is a true specimen of the good, plucky, sweet American girl."

Mr. Lasky said that Miss King would hereafter be featured along with the other big stars, and her first picture has already been planned and started.

The supper was punctuated with witty missives in the form of telegrams, apparently (we say apparently because they were so well timed in arriving and Kenneth McGaffey smiled as he read them), sent from different points of interest throughout the world.

The menu was in humorous style, with everything "a la' some city or town. The wording opposite was unique—one particular line appealed to certain persons. It said: "Lost articles MAY be found on the guests." But no Screamer lost anything, so no hard feelings.

The guests who enjoyed the royal dinner with the queenly King were: J. Frederick Ryan, Photoplayers' Weekly; J. C. Jessen, Moving Picture News; Grace Kingsley, Times; Jesse L. Lasky, Anita King, William C. De Mille, Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Lewis, Paramount Exchange; Clem Pope, Morning Telegraph; Doris Schroeder; Business Manager Fred Kley, Lasky; Joseph Murray, Keystone; Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Stechhan, Balboa; Clarke Irvine; Bennie Zeidman; Kenneth McGaffey, father of Mollie of the Movies, and Mr. and Mrs. M. G. Jonas.

After hearing short speeches from the prominent guests the delightful welcoming affair closed, and the intrepid autoist made her weary way homeward, to dream of her name appearing on posters, as big as the biggest star—and we hope she realizes the dream, for she certainly deserves it.

ROLIN FILM CO. PLANS ANNOUNCED.

Work Resumed at Studios and Bebe Daniels to Be Featured.

Work has been resumed at the studios of the Rolin Film Company in Edendale since the return to the west of Director Hal E. Roach, who was in the east for some weeks looking after the business interests of the film company which he represents. The Phunphilms turned out by this firm will be made better and more comical during the coming season. Dwight Whiting announces that Bebe Daniels is to be exclusively featured in forthcoming releases on the Rolin screen offerings.

Miss Daniels is perhaps one of the youngest of screen stars, exclusive of children, and has already made a name for herself in the hearts of the film world by her excellent work in Pathe comedies. She is a born actress and knows her work from study as well as practice. She first appeared in Kalem comedies two years ago and has been with the Vitagraph and other companies before signing with the Rolin people.

TRIANGLE OPENS EXCHANGE.

Handsome Offices, Under the Management of G. C. Parsons and Edwin S. Holmes, for the Big Three Film.

Anticipating an early demand for big pictures, the Triangle has opened luxurious new offices in this city, with G. C. Parsons as manager. He will be assisted by Edwin S. Holmes, who was formerly connected with the Mutual Exchange here, having charge of the feature department. Mr. Parsons arrived but a short time ago and has just opened the new booking office. Several towns have been closed and the prospects are quite favorable for a good run this season. Mr. Holmes will leave shortly for Arizona, to work upon that territory.

Mr. Parsons is a big man with a welcome smile, who hails from Buffalo, where he was manager of the Mutual office for a year and a half. Before that he was an exhibitor.

The new big three office is modern, situated downtown and in the center of the film exchanges. It is at 643 South Olive street, in the Knickerbocker building, and occupies half of one floor, which was formerly used as a would-be studio by some sort of stock selling studio firm which has now passed away, at least on that floor. The main offices are in the front, with plenty of light and air. The reception room is large, roomy and comfortable, as well as welcoming. The booking office is in front also. In the rear are the vault, which holds enough films for two years' bookings, the inspection room, paper racks, and everything else connected with the sending out of the screen offerings.

GIANT PEACE MEETING AND PICTURE AT INCEVILLE.

Inceville was crowded last Sunday.

There were close to 1,500 persons present at the mountain range ranch studio who were invited, transported, barbecued, and shot at by several cameras and worked into the big scenes for a picture which is now in the making.

The event was interesting to the film fans, as many of them had never seen a picture in the making. Nearly every one present wore a costume and the allegorical story was done with the multitude asking for peace. There were stars who played as Glory, Fear, Peace, Victory and other characters sympolic of the idea.

After the big scenes were made, the visitors were dined and then the several departments of the immense plant were thrown open for inspection, and it was well after dinner time in the evening that the last interested person had trekked across the road and homeward.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Jay Hunt, who left Ince's forces some time ago and who signed up and made several thousand feet of film for Horsley, has left that concern and is at work at the Universal, making big pictures under the ever watchful eye of Henry McRae, director general of the big Laemmle plant in the west. Mr. Hunt is too well known to talk about, and the Universal is to be congratulated upon landing so good a director.

Thomas Chatterton, who was another Ince man for a long time, but lately with the U, has deserted Los Angeles, and is now working for the Flying A releases in Santa Barbara. Tom is a well-known actor, a good director, and a real fellow, who will be missed by his many friends at the hub.

Henry Otto, at the Universal, has returned from a sea voyage out to the islands off this section of the coast, where he filmed many big scenes for the fairy story "Undine," which features Edna Maison and Douglas Gerrard. Ida Schnall, one of the most graceful and clever women swimmers of the coast, went along with the picture men and played the star part mostly under the water. A bevy of bathing beauties a quarter of a hundred strong accompanied the players and acted as mermaids. The story is to be told in five reels and is said to be entirely different from any other water picture.

Sunday, October 31, was Lubin Day at La Jolla, the picturesque little beach town twenty miles north of San Diego. Special trains on the funny little narrow gauge railroad brought Lubin players from the Coronado studios, not to mention a record crowd of natives and tourists from San Diego. A fish bake, on the beach, swimming contests, in which photoplayers participated, and other events had been arranged by the La Jolla Chamber of Commerce. Moving pictures were taken of the lively scenes, and the big crowds.

Henry Ford, the motor car manufacturer, was a distinguished visitor at Universal City this week. Like all other celebrities visiting the big celluloid plant, Mr. Ford had to pose in front of a wild and ferocious lion—and the Animated Weekly man turned the crank.

While bravely facing the lens and the raging beast (who might have had experiences with Fords) the famous automobile manufacturer spoke:

"Some people," he said, "say that I am constantly preaching peace because I don't think much of this fighting business; also that I lack courage. Bring on the lion." After which Mr. Ford stood at ease and without sign of discomfiture while the king of beasts was led out. The camera got him with a hand on the mane of the jungle monarch.

Mr. Ford also turned the crank of a camera and took a picture. "Turning the crank comes natural to me," he said as he kept the lens on a building that was being blown up.

Mr. Ford visited Universal City with Mrs. Ford, their son, Edsel Ford; Mrs. Flint, and D. Wilcox, of Providence, R. I.; B. L. Graves, Southern California distributor of Ford cars, and W. L. Highson, president of the Kissel Kar Company.

A fire suspected to be of incendiary origin destroyed one night last week a five thousand dollar western street set at Universal City.

The blaze attracted the attention of some of the cowboys at the ranch and they hurried to the scene. By the time they reached it, however, the fire had gained too much headway for any of the buildings to be saved and they turned their attention to the protection of the remaining buildings in the vicinity. The fire was especially inopportune in view of the fact that Jacques Jaccard and his company of western feature players had several scenes remaining to make in this street. The set is being rebuilt in duplicate of the original. This will take some time and the Jaccard production will be delayed for several days.

Paul Bourgois, the animal trainer, was severely, though not seriously, hurt this week when "Princess," the famous Sumatra tiger at Universal City, leaped on him, while Director McGregor was staging a scene in the production of "The Recalling Vengeance." That Princess fell short in her first jump saved the trainer, and gave him a chance to meet the second onslaught. As she made the second spring, Bourgois stepped backward and struck her twice on the nose. This is pretty painful punishment even for a man-eating tiger, so "Princess" was properly chastised, however, the battle had torn the clothing from Mr. Bourgois' back and the tiger's claws had inflicted some very nasty scratches which necessitated several stitches at the Universal Hospital.

Robert Leonard is making preparations for a trip to Arrowhead, Hot Springs, with his company of Rex players. The company will remain at the springs for several weeks while they stage exterior scenes for a coming Universal feature production.

Cleo Madison, director and leading lady in "A Man, a Maid and a Lion," a coming Universal feature, was severely injured this week in one of the scenes. She fell and cut her face so badly that she had to be removed to a hospital in Los Angeles.

Protests against allowing members of the police force to work as picture cops with the local film companies, while off duty, were recently filed with the City Council. It was said that some of the policemen who are on night duty work are working in the daytime at the picture studios and consequently are unfit to render efficient service to the department. Chief Snively stated that the members of the police force will not be permitted to work permanently in the motion picture studios, but that there would be no objection to their acting occasionally in a picture if they so desired.

Olga Printzlau Clark is no more. Miss Clark, the well-known writer of photo dramas, has dropped the last name and will hereafter be known only as Miss Olga Printzlau. She is at present with the Universal. Recently she sold to Griffith a script that will be made into a production of the first order, a feature, and a long one, too. It is a story, dealing with modern war problems, and called "Nante of the Marshes."

Pathe's news cameraman, J. H. Buffum, has been down at Douglas, Ariz., screening some scenes of the Mexican and American soldiers and the surrounding country in anticipation of a battle at Agua Prieta. Buffum shot "refugees," action, battle, firing, detraining of troops, drills, and lots of interesting things. He got about 4,000 feet, which include two negatives, one for the western edition and one for the eastern.

H. D. Naugle, branch manager for the Big Four in Los Angeles, has just installed a new projection room machine box. It is of steel and is very compact and portable. Mr. Naugle has a fine office in the Knickerbocker building, and is having a picture taken for the World which he will give to us in the near future.

A. W. Goff, coast division manager for the V-L-S-E, was in town this week visiting Mr. Naugle, having come down from San Francisco. He reports business as booming along the line and says the outlook is for a busy winter with the output of the quartette of picture producers.

It is indeed good to see Ham around again. The funny big boy of the Kalem films has been away for some time with a fractured leg and his smiling face at the studio has been missed. Ham's first picture since being at work again is a corker.

Balzac is being filmed!

But he is a Spanish character in "La Paloma," a production being finished at the Vitagraph studio. The story is by Daisy E. Smith. Otto Lederer is Balzac, the chair mender! Perhaps he can't even read, and if he did he never would have heard of his namesake, anyway, but—the story is a good one. Mary Anderson is the leading woman and plays the part of a charming Spanish girl. Billy Wolbert is handling the production. George Stanley is to be seen as a caballero. Stella is there, too—my, but this is a high-brow picture. She is the chair mender's daughter, and Corrienne Griffith is the portrayer of the girl.

Harry Leonhardt, the well-known special western representative of the Fox Film Corporation, who has just purchased a new machine, together with a driver and assistants, made a meteoric trip through the desert and down into the Imperial Valley to book towns for Fox films. When Mr. Leonhardt returned he looked as if he had been out on some desert isle of the South Pacific for about three months. He said that once they ran out of water while crossing one of the hottest parts of the sand sea and they thought they would nearly die of thirst. However, the trip was well worth while, for out of 20 towns, 18 were signed, and on a later trip 7 out of 9 towns were also booked for Fox pictures. Mr. Leonhardt made nearly a couple of thousand miles in about a week. He swears he would never do it again, even if he could book 25 towns out of 24.

In the list of names of those who attended the Rothapfel luncheon the other day we noticed that M. H. Lewis was listed as manager of the Aggressive M. P. Co. We though it good enough to pass along to you, when it is known that Lewis manages the Progressive M. P. Co., which handles Paramount films.

Studios, we fancied, possessed every department imaginable, but here is a new one that we discovered the other day while visiting E. D. Horkheimer, down at the Balboa studio in Long Beach, where they have just installed a blacksmith shop, and it is one of the handiest departments around the plant. When an automobile is wrecked it can be rebuilt at home now.

Mabel Condon, a local writer of the film business, made a trip to Santa Barbara this week to visit some film friends. She spent the week end at the Russel Ranch, as guest of the American. The party, made up of players, voyaged out into the Pacific to pay respects to Henry Otto, who was out there doing scenes for his water story. The Hallowe'en was spent merrily indeed. A barbecue and fish dinner was a feature of the affair.

Miss Condon reports that the Sunshine Films, Inc., has started operations for making features. The firm, according to the story, is backed by rich women of Riverside who wish to produce some of the old stories and legends of this state. They will establish a main studio in Los Angeles, but whereever the story calls for distant settings, a portable studio will be sent out to the location if several reels are to be made there. The company is incorporated for a hundred thousand dollars.

Gertrude Robinson in "The Concealed Truth"

THE Ivan Film Productions have just completed a five-reel drama, entitled "The Concealed Truth," featuring Gertrude Robinson, supported by James Cooley, Carrey Lee, Frank Whitson, Frank de Vernon, Sue Balfor, James McDuff and many other artists well known on the legitimate stage as well as on the screen.

The management say they are about to spring another strong sensational surprise on the exhibitors by portraying one of Ivan Abramson's stories that takes so well with the public.

Ivan Abramson, the president of the Ivan Film Productions, is also the author and director of "The Concealed Truth." He is one of the producers in the market today who write their own most powerful dramatic stories, and direct and produce them. His last five reel feature, "A Mother's Confession," has proven to be a strong box-office attraction. He is also the author and producer of "Sins of the Parents," "Should a Woman Divorce," and "The Unwelcome Wife."

Gertrude Robinson.

Mr. Abramson claims that his new production, "The Concealed Truth," is the best he has ever written. The story is of great interest, true to American life, full of gripping situations and dramatic climaxes.

Aside from the prominence of the star, Gertrude Robinson, the cast was carefully selected to fit the parts. The playing proves to be a symphony of characters. The feature will be released Nov. 10th.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

BRONX EXHIBITORS HOLD ANNUAL BALL.

This Year's Jollification Transcends Those of Previous Dates and Presages Continued Prosperity for Organization—Loving Cup for Wittman.

THERE was rejoicing among the inhabitants of the Bronx when it was announced through the medium of the moving picture theaters in that borough that the third annual entertainment and ball of the Cinema Exhibitors Association of Bronx County, Inc., would be held at Hunt's Point Palace, Southern Boulevard and 163d street, Bronx, on Monday evening, November 1, the day before election. Those who were present at the two previous affairs of the Cinema Association recalled the pleasant times they had and the many different actresses and actors they saw and met in the flesh, and looked with enthusiasm to the night when the third annual gala event was to be held.

Election eve proved to be a favorable time for Bronxites for they came in big numbers. This is the third year that the Cinema Association has given its affair in Hunt's Point Palace, and if the attendance at this latest function can be interpreted as indicative of increasing attendance at subsequent functions, the association will have to look for bigger quarters. Each succeeding event of the Cinema Association eclipses in all ways its predecessor, and this year's ball was the best so far. Amusement purveyors themselves the members of the organization, know how to get up a good entertainment, and the result was that a most enjoyable time was passed by all.

The entertainment was scheduled to begin at 8.30 o'clock, but the crowds began to appear even before 8 o'clock and by the time the event was officially started there was a very large assemblage on hand. They were orderly, courteous and congenial, and the spirit of good fellowship prevailed throughout the entire festive period.

The feature of the evening was the presentation of a solid silver loving cup by the members of the Cinema Association to John J. Wittman, president of that body. The presentation speech was made by E. Pollock, Registrar of Bronx County. The event was kept in strict secrecy and was engineered by Moss Cohan, chairman of the Entertainment Committee and manager and owner of the Star theater, 1334 Southern Boulevard, Bronx. When all plans for presenting the cup were completed, Mr. Cohen with Mr. Pollock mounted the stage and announced that Mr. Wittman, who was somewhere on the floor, was wanted. When he appeared before the footlights the curtain was raised and revealed the beautiful loving cup standing on a quartered oak base with several of the members of the association nearby. Mr. Wittman was speechless for the moment, but quickly recovered himself and thanked all.

The entertainment was enjoyable and diversified. There were motion pictures, vaudeville sketches, musical and poetic recitations by prominent photoplayers. "Trilby" headed the bill. This was followed by a poetic recitation by Isolde Illian of the Thanhouser company, who demonstrated that she was a proficient reciter as well as a versatile actress. Then "Ladie," the Thanhouser dog, a canine with almost human intelligence, was the next on the program, and performed some really marvelous stunts under the guidance of its owner. Gordon Hollingshead and Billie Sullivan, also of the Thanhouser company, entertained with music and songs. Then there appeared for our enjoyment the famous Thanhouser twins, who, according to Leon J. Rubenstein, the genial director of Thanhouser publicity, who introduced them as well as the other Thanhouserites, appeared for the first time in public on the speaking stage. They recited a duplex monologue which was written by Ethel Cooke of the Thanhouser forces, that is both of them speaking the same piece simultaneously. A picture from the E. & R. Jungle Film Company, entitled "From Jungle to Stage," and songs by a representative of the Witmark Publishing Company contributed to the evening's fun. A most entertaining vaudeville sketch was given by W. Marron of the Elkwood theater, 172d street and Southern Boulevard, who was assisted by Pete LaMar, a professional entertainer garbed as a minstrel. Many a hearty laugh was enjoyed by these two, and as a matter of fact all numbers were well received.

Just before the entertainment was over many of the guests received a severe shock. Mr. Rubenstein and Mr. Moss rushed upon the stage and in a stentorian tone of voice Mr. Rubenstein announced that a wallet containing a very large roll had been lost and that $100 would be the reward of the finder. The almost deadly silence that followed was broken by the footfalls of a Thanhouser representative who, rushing toward the stage, said that he had found the lost article. When it was opened it was discovered that it contained a 55-foot streamer bearing the slogan "Found on the Wise Exhibitors Mutual Program Thanhouser Films and Falstaff Comedies. The Reward is a Full House. Some Reward, What?" The quests were relieved, but this only went to show that Ruby was there with the publicity stuff.

The grand march began shortly after midnight and many took part in it. There was a beautiful array of feminine attire in the march which was led by Clara Kimball Young of the World Film Company, and Earle Williams of the Vitagraph Company. They were followed by John J. Wittman, president of the Cinema Association, and Mrs. Wittman.

There were many prominent photoplayers present, among them being Clara Kimball Young, Earle Williams, Kate Price, Ben Wilson, the Thanhouser Twins, Gordon Hollingshead and Billie Sullivan. All of them made short speeches from the stage and each was accorded a round of applause. Those companies which were not represented by their acting forces had members of the business and executive staffs present. Some of the companies which had boxes were the Mutual, Universal, Pathe, Edison, Vitagraph, Kalem and World Film.

The hall was artistically decorated with banners, flags and bunting. Pennants and balloons bearing the Universal and World Film Company trademarks, respectively, were strung across the hall. These were later distributed to the crowd who scrambled to get them. Approximately 3,500 attended this year's function. A Power's 6A machine was used, and the projection surface was an Atmospheric screen, manufactured by the Atmospheric Screen Company of New York City. The screen was auctioned off and the proceeds handed to the Cinema Association which in turn will give the money to a charitable organization. Tickets were 50 cents, including wardrobe. A beautiful souvenir program was distributed which contained large halftone portraits of Clara Kimball Young, Earle Williams and others. A fine grade of coated paper was used and the program was bound in thick blue silk cord. Epitomizing the whole event, it can be said that this year's affair was a big success.

NEW KANSAS ASSOCIATION BUSY.

Executive Committee Meets to Outline Working Plans—Large Membership Reported.

THE first meeting of the executive committee of the new Amusement Association of Kansas, held in Kansas City October 27, demonstrated that the right idea has been hit upon for the fight against the Kansas state censorship as provided in the present law. The report was made that the membership of the Association is already more than 100, and that apparently the exhibitors, exchangemen and travelers are all eager to exert their efforts through the Association for the modifying of the regulations or the repeal of the law.

The sessions were held in the V-L-S-E exchange headquarters, E. R. Pearson, manager of the exchange, being chairman of the executive committee. Other members present were Lee Gunnison of Atchison, Harry A. Rogers of Marion, Carl Mensing of Leavenworth, Chas. W. Harden, manager of the Kansas City exchange of the Fox Film Corporation. Mr. Rogers is secretary of the executive committee. J. E. Foland, secretary of the Association, who will be the active man in the execution of the plans of the campaign, was also present.

Mr. Foland had the preliminary details already in hand for starting the Association work. The committee approved the first pieces of literature to be sent out, which explain the purposes of the organization, and provide the means of applying for membership. Offices will be opened in Kansas City shortly, in charge of Mr. Foland.

The present prospect is that the policy of the Association will be to inform the people of Kansas of the operations of the censorship, not with a tone of hostility to the persons doing the work, but with a desire to let the people know exactly what hardships are worked on the industry through the operation of the law. The Association will demonstrate where the censorship "gets off bad." This purpose will be accomplished through the distribution of short articles to be published in the local newspapers of Kansas, and later through the use of slides.

One of the significant statements made during the session, indicating the probable support that the Association may expect to receive, was that a minister in southern Kansas is using the Declaration of Principles of the Amusement Association in his sermons.

The executive committee will hold another session in Topeka, November 11.

PHILADELPHIA EXHIBITORS INDIFFERENT.

Officer of Local Organization Complains of Singular Lack of Interest.

WHEN one considers the greatness of Philadelphia and the number of moving picture theaters located within the city limits and is then confronted with the real facts regarding the indifference and lack of co-operation which predominates the affairs of the Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia, he is not only surprised but of necessity forms an opinion to the end that the exhibitors should be ashamed of having ever permitted such a situation to arise, much less allow it to continue in their association. The condition of affairs now existing with the local Exhibitors' League is far from what is desired by a number of the members, but they being in the minority have failed in endeavors to arouse the League's members sufficiently to make them realize their moral obligations as members, with the result that those otherwise most willing have given up the matter as a "bad job." To think that any intelligent body of American citizens would stand idly by and allow their organization to sink to such depths that it is an organization in name only, when they absolutely need the benefits to be thus obtained from concerted action, is almost incomprehensible.

For example: Twelve gentlemen, constituting a representation of a certain industry, meet and form an organization for the furthering of their common interests. Mr. Jones is merely a unit in this body of men, one of twelve, and must of necessity benefit both financially and morally from suggestions advanced at meetings by fellow members. If Mr. Jones is convinced that he knows of something that will prove of mutual benefit to his brother members, he forthwith discloses said knowledge at the next meeting and is in return open for similar suggestions from the other members of that organization. Now, Mr. Exhibitor, is it not true that you are not obtaining the best possible results from your organization?

It was only recently that the writer was visiting the headquarters of the Exhibitors' League, when he chanced upon an illuminating bit of oratory which clearly disclosed the condition of affairs now existing in that organization. One of the most prominent of Philadelphia's exhibitors was pacing to and fro from one end of the room to the other and sadly lamenting the fact that the League had gone to ruin and was merely a toy and a delusion and that the exhibitors should be ashamed to allow such conditions to continue. When he finally subsided, he was approached by the secretary very kindly to pay a small sum of several dollars due as part of his organization fees. Not he. He would not pay a red cent. The League had never benefited him to any extent and until it did he was not to be approached for any contributions. With that he left the room in disgust.

With such conditions prevailing as the exhibitor above denounced, it is time that all realized their positions in the matter and began an immediate movement for its correction. With such favorable conditions as exist in the moving picture industry in this city at the present time the exhibitors should come closer together and be the proud standard-bearers of an organization which would and should be the pride of the moving picture men throughout the entire state and country. As an officer of the League said: "It is time we got together and did something." The time-worn expression of "actions speak louder than words" exactly fits the situation as it is in this city at this time, and if the Exhibitors' League is to be the association of the exhibitors it is up to the members to come to their senses and do something; something real and beneficial to the interests they represent.

HERRINGTON ISSUES STATEMENT.

Says He Had Undoubted Right to Call Ohio Convention.

National President Herrington has issued the following statement to the motion picture exhibitors of America. In response to his request the statement is printed below:

"To the Motion Picture Exhibitors:

"Through the many misstatements and conflicting reports that have been sent broadcast throughout the country by letter and some of the trade papers in reference to my right to call the state convention of Ohio exhibitors, they questioned my authority as national president, saying that Ohio state branch, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was the only power that could do that through its state officers.

"The members of the executive board of the national league had informed me of my power and rights to call the Ohio convention, for many reasons: First, Mr. Wilson, who was elected national secretary at the national convention at Dayton, Ohio, July, 1914, was also state secretary of the Ohio branch, and he knew that his state had not paid any per capita tax to the national league during his term of office as the national secretary and the national treasurer, Mr. Jeup, had called his attention to the delinquency of his home state many times and got no response, and Cleveland local claimed that they had paid their per capita up to April 1, 1915, and would not pay any more until they knew that the per capita was paid to the national organization.

"Now, I would not have considered the attacks worthy of any consideration, only that my many friends said that in justice to the organization and myself I should make a statement, placing before the exhibitors of the country my position in the Ohio controversy. With the above conditions existing in the state, what would you do if you were in my position and wanted a united organization? The exhibitors of Ohio proved beyond all doubt that my action was right, as on October 19 and 20 there was the largest and best convention that Ohio has ever had.

"Yours in the cause for one united organization of exhibitors, I remain,
Yours truly,
"FRED HERRINGTON,
President M. P. E. L. of A."

BINDER TALKS TO EXHIBITORS.

Guest of Massachusetts League at Dinner at Quincy House, Boston, November 3.

JACOB W. BINDER, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, and Grenville S. MacFarland, editorial manager of the Boston American, were the guests of honor at a dinner given in the Quincy House, Boston, last Wednesday night, November 3, by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts.

In his address Mr. Binder assured the members of the league that his organization is ready to co-operate with them in any legislative or commercial difficulties that might arise. Mr. Binder talked on business conditions in general and informed the members of the league that the greatest menace to the business is censorship, which was proposed in thirteen states by persons, under the pretext of conserving the moral of the public. He related the general purpose of the board of trade and many of the league members assured him of their intention to join his organization.

The meeting was presided over by Ernest H. Horstmann, president of the league. During the night, President Horstmann informed the members that the annual election of officers will be held within a few weeks and that he did not intend to hold the executive office for another year.

Mr. Horstmann was the organizer of the present league and is serving his third term as its head. Under his leadership, a great deal has been accomplished and it is indeed to be regretted if pressure cannot be brought to bear upon him to head the organization for a least one more year.

It was through the untiring work of Mr. Horstmann, and at a great financial loss, that several inimical legislative measures were defeated in the Massachusetts legislature during the past three years. The famed "Five Minute" law, which compelled all exhibitors to have an intermission of five minutes between reels, was repealed through the work of the president of the league.

His greatest work was accomplished during the past year. A large number of bills, all of which were hostile to the industry, were proposed for enaction before the last session of the legislature. The most notable among these was the censorship bill which, if passed, would have compelled many of the small exhibitors throughout the state to close their theaters. This bill was backed by a large number of women's organizations throughout the state. The bill had successfully passed through all but the final committee, where it was killed. The members of the league would do well to urge Mr. Horstmann to become a presidential candidate for the next year.

This meeting was one of the largest that the league has had for some time.

Other speakers included J. A. Eslow, of the New England Universal Film Exchange; Bernard M. Corbett, of the New England Kriterion Exchange; George Balsdon, of the New England V-L-S-E Exchange; Frank J. Howard, of the Olympic Theatres, Inc.; Thomas Sprye, of the American Feature Film Company; Mrs. Alice Carroll; Leon Dadmun, of the Dadmun Moving Picture Company; Samuel Moscow, of the United Film Service of New England; Harry F. Campbell, of the Fox Film Corporation, and L. J. McEvoy, of the Phoenix Film Company.

CALL BY HERRINGTON.

Will Be in Baltimore for Organizing Purposes Next Week.

National President Fred J. Herrington has issued the following call to the exhibitors of Baltimore, Washington, Richmond and all surrounding towns:

"I will be in Baltimore, Md., Sunday, November 14th. I will arrange for a meeting, at the New Howard Hotel, for the purpose of forming an organization of exhibitors, and to affiliate the same with the National League, and I ask for and expect the assistance and co-operation of the exhibitors of the many states.

"To you exhibitors who are doing business in the districts surrounding the national capitol, I wish to say there are many things in the form of legislation affecting our business that will be taken up at the coming session of the National Congress, such as the war tax, the question of a national censor board of motion pictures. The question is what are we going to do? I will answer it in this way: Nothing, if we are not organized, and divided against our own interests, but if we were organized as we should be with the power that we command, we could do anything that would be just and right.

"Now, I appeal to you as business men to lay aside your little personal grievances and unite your forces to meet the common enemies, of which you have many. I appeal to you to organize and when conditions demand you can be called upon and meet these adverse conditions as men of intelligence. There was no time that we need an organization as we need it now, so do not fail to give me what assistance you can and make an effort to meet me at the Hotel New Howard, Baltimore, Md., Nov. 14, 1915.

"Waiting to have the pleasure of meeting you, and to receive your advice and counsel, I remain, yours truly,

"FRED J. HERRINGTON, PRES.,
Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America."

MOVING PICTURE WORLD COMMENDED.

Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 5, 1915.

The Moving Picture World, New York City:

At a regular meeting of the Rochester Exhibitors, Branch No. 5, held on Nov. 3rd, at Hotel Hayward, it was resolved that we most thoroughly appreciate and heartily approve the efforts put forth by the Moving Picture World in behalf of the exhibitors of this state during the political campaign just ended, and especially in sending W. Stephen Bush throughout the state speaking in motion picture theaters regarding the proposed state constitution.

We believe his efforts were especially instrumental in defeating the said constitution and that our thanks are due the Moving Picture World for its efforts and expense.

Yours truly,
THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE,
W. E. Hubbard, Secretary.

MR. JAMES AND MISS HAWLEY AS CO-STARS.

Under arrangement with the Peerless Company Gladden James will appear in "The Country Girl," a Lederer production. Mr. James will be co-starred with Ormi Hawley. The subject, which is now being made at Grantwood, N. J., will be released on the World Film program.

At Leading Picture Theaters

"Madame Butterfly" at the Strand.

THE Strand Theater offers Mary Pickford in "Madame Butterfly," John Luther Long's classic, made famous as a grand opera, novel and drama. The great mass of admirers of Mary Pickford who have followed her throughout her motion picture career have been accustomed to see their favorite as a little blonde and will be astonished to find her a thorough Oriental. It is not a matter of make-up alone, but of real histrionic ability Cho-Cho-San is renowned as one of fiction's greatest examples of feminine fidelity. The story of "Madame Butterfly," which has the distinction of being the first work by an American author to form the basis of a grand opera, is so familiar that it scarcely needs mention here. Everyone will remember the pathetic little Cho-Cho-San who is married to Lieutenant Pinkerton, U. S. N., who sails away to America, assuring her that he will return when the robins nest again. He does come back to Japan, but with an American wife, and the grief stricken Oriental girl, blindfolding her baby that she may not see her mother's terrible deed, kills herself just as Pinkerton enters the house. The Topical Review contains interesting news pictures from this country and abroad, also a newly arrived lot of European war pictures. Travel pictures and scientific studies are also shown. The musical program is a varied and attractive one. The vocal soloists for the week are: Grace Hoffman, Julia Beverley, and John Hendricks.

Marguerite Clark at the Broadway.

Marguerite Clark in "Still Waters," the latest Famous Players release on the Paramount Program, is the leading attraction at the Broadway Theater this week. "Still Waters," which is a clever combination of pastoral romance, rural comedy and thrilling drama, was written especially for Miss Clark by Edith Barnard Delano, the well-known novelist. In it the diminutive star has one of the greatest opportunities of her screen career. Having established a reputation as a comedienne, Miss Clark merits unreserved recognition as an emotional actress in "Still Waters." The Paramount South American Travel Pictures, interesting Pathe News, selected comedies and cartoons, complete the program.

Triangle Films at the Knickerbocker.

The Triangle program at the Knickerbocker Theater consists of Lillian Gish and Rozsika Dolly in Griffith's five-reel feature, "The Lily and the Rose;" Willard Mack in an Ince five-reeler, "Aloha Oe;" Raymond Hitchcock in the shorter Keystone, "A Village Scandal," and Fred Mace in another Sennett comedy, "The Janitor's Wife's Temptation."

Wilfred Lucas plays the leading male role in "The Lily and the Rose," which shows Lillian Gish first as the ward of two spinster aunts in the country, and later as the wife of a rich city man. In "Aloha Oe" Willard Mack has the support of Enid Markey. The story deals with the love of an American and a princess of a tribe which inhabits an island in the Pacific Ocean. Flora Zabelle and Roscoe Arbuckle have prominent parts in the Hitchcock piece.

Canadian Exchangemen in Town

The Brothers Henry Fischer of Toronto and A. H. Fischer of Montreal, Organizing New Company, Look Over Field.

VISITING in New York for the past ten days have been the brothers Henry Fischer of Toronto, and A. H. Fischer of Montreal. The Messrs. Fischer have exchanges in their respective cities. They are doing business under the name of Warner's Features of Canada, Limited, but have handld the United Film Service. About two months ago they bought out the Canadian business of the United. Before associating with the Warner's they were connected with the Canadian Film Company, then handling the Universal and Famous Players services.

The Messrs. Fischer are now organizing the United Photoplays, Limited, a charter for which has been applied for. It is their intention ultimately to open offices all over Canada. They expect first to open offices in the provinces, where they have previously done business. They have not yet definitely decided whether they will represent one of the regular programs or whether they will make up one of their own. They will, however, continue and extend their regular rental business. The visit to New York has been for the purpose of looking over the field generally.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN

IMPROVISING.

Part 1.

A LETTER signed "Miss Athern," who would rather not have her address given, says:

> Some time ago you gave us a few articles on improvising for the pictures which I found quite interesting and was much disappointed because they stopped so soon. I am in a small town where good teachers are not available, and though I should like to be able to improvise, it is impossible for me to go to a large city to study and learn how. If you could find time to continue the articles on improvising I am sure I should appreciate it and I believe so would others in my position.

All right, I will. I have received other communications from time to time regarding the articles which appeared on this page two or three years ago, but which were discontinued for the reason that they did not seem to awaken any interest at the time. It seems that I was mistaken in spite of the fact that my mail was principally about musical programs. Now if anybody cares for these articles on improvising, don't be afraid to say so. I believe I can offer a few practical hints provided anybody wants them, and the only way I have of finding out is for you to say so.

The most satisfactory way of studying the subject of improvising with a view to thoroughness is to place yourself under the personal direction of a competent teacher; one who can supervise and direct the progress of the individual student. Of course one may buy text books and try to teach ones self, but the subject, through weight of technicalities, is apt to grow uninteresting without an instructor to help and encourage one. Any attempt to give a thorough course of study in these pages would have to be practically a revamp of text books already on the market, and for this reason would not be worth while.

But there are many like the above correspondent who have not the opportunity or the inclination to make a study of improvisation, and who would be content, for a time at least, with skimming over the surface. For the benefit of these as well as Miss Athern I am going to offer a series of illustrated articles which, without going too deeply, will give a fair working idea as to improvising on old melodies and developing new ones.

Developing a new melody from a given theme (original or otherwise) is composition pure and simple, and requires both ingenuity and originality. Improvising upon a known melody is also composition in a certain degree, but is largely mechanical, requires less constructive ability and is easier to understand and apply. For these reasons I believe the average picture pianist would find it the more practical of the two for daily use, and would take a keener interest in it than he would in trying to originate new melodies entirely. We will therefore devote ourselves principally to this branch of the subject and touch upon the other later on.

Improvising Upon a Known Melody.

First, what is a melody?

Melody is defined as "a rational progression of single tones so arranged that its intervals and rhythm express a musical idea."

(This is in contrast to harmony which is a rational combination of several tones. Harmony occupies a place of its own apart from melody, and is a study entirely different from the subject now under discussion.)

An Interval is the difference in pitch between two tones.

The Rhythm is "The measured movement of similar tone groups; the effect produced by the systematic grouping of tones with reference to regularity both in their accentuation and in their succession as equal or unequal in time value. A rhythm is, therefore, a tone-group serving as a pattern for succeeding groups identical with it as regards the accentuation and duration of its tones." (Dr. Theo. Baker. Ph. D. Dictionary of Musical Terms.)

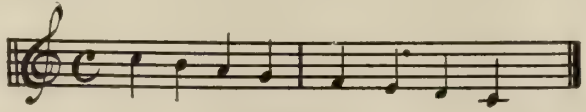
This, to my mind, is the most comprehensive definition of the word "rhythm" I have found, but I am afraid it might be a little confusing to the novice—the reader I am particularly addressing—because it necessarily embraces several things, i. e., "measured movement," "systematic grouping," "accentuation," and "time-duration." Now as the rhythm is influenced in a manner by the time-signature (or tempo), and as the "systematic grouping" and "time duration" of the tones are so important in themselves, I should like to substitute something else for the word "rhythm" in our definition of "melody." The word "figure" will describe the systematic grouping and time-duration, while the word "tempo" can include time measurement and the accentuation. I think I can make these articles plainer and easier to understand if we analyze our melody as including three essentials instead of two, viz:

1st. The Interval. (The difference in pitch between two tones).

2nd. The Figure. (A distinct group of notes; a motive).

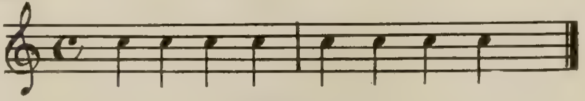
3rd. The Tempo. (The measure, the beat indicated by the time signature.)

The Interval (the difference in pitch between two tones) is well enough understood to need no further explaining. Every reader will comprehend, even if he has not learned it before now, that the difference in pitch between any note and the note following is an interval, no matter if the difference is half a tone or a dozen full tones. In the illustration (Example 1), the interval between the first two notes C and B is a half tone; from B to A is an interval of a whole tone, etc.



Ex. 1.

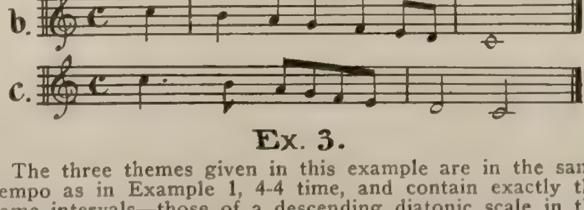
Example 1 is a descending diatonic scale in the key of C. It is divided into two measures each containing four quarter notes. The "Figure" of each group is identical, that is, the first measure shows us a group of four notes of a certain length, and this group furnishes a "pattern" for the next measure which is also a group of notes of the same length. In this respect the "Figure" shown in Ex. 2 is precisely the same:



Ex. 2.

The first measure shows a group of notes of a certain length and this form or "pattern" is repeated in the second measure—also a group of quarter notes.

To illustrate how greatly the idea of a theme may be modified by simply changing the figure without altering the intervals, let us look at Example 3.



Ex. 3.

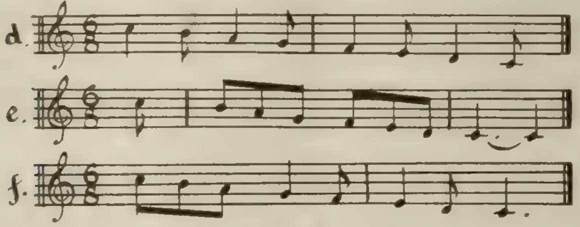
The three themes given in this example are in the same tempo as in Example 1, 4-4 time, and contain exactly the same intervals—those of a descending diatonic scale in the key of C. Yet the melody in each is entirely different by reason of the change in the Figure.

Example 1 contains the complete Figure ("pattern" or form) in the first measure, and merely repeats it in the second.

In Example 3 the first theme (a) requires two measures to give the complete Figure, which is also the case in the third theme (c).

The second theme in this example (b) requires a quarter of a measure and the two following measures to complete the full Figure or "pattern."

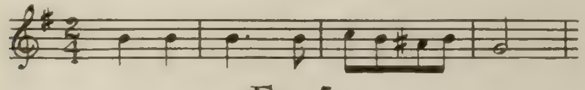
Now let us again take the same theme (Example 1) and change the tempo as well as the Figure.



Ex. 4.

Here we have three themes whose intervals are exactly the same as in Example 1, yet the melody is in no wise the same.

These examples may appear simple and trivial, but they illustrate a part of the basic principal upon which improvisations may be made as well as compositions. This matter of the Figure will be constantly referred to in these articles, and it is well that you should have a complete understanding of it in the beginning. To make it plainer I will give another illustration:



Ex. 5.

Here we have a figure including four measures in 2-4 time. Write it out, then repeat the same figure three notes higher, beginning in the note "D." Now write the same figure in the original position (beginning on "B" as at first) and we have almost the complete melody of the old song, "A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight." Having got thus far, all the composer had to do was add a few measures for a finish—tie a knot in the string, so to speak, and the tune was made. The important thing in the first place was to get the theme—which is found in Example 5.

One of the commonest forms of altering the figure and tempo of a melody is to simply play a 4-4 or 2-4 movement in 3-4 time or vice versa. This is exemplified by the dance orchestra when it plays "Home, Sweet Home" as a waltz, two-step, gallop, trot, etc., at the end of the program. The moving picture pianist will frequently find it expedient to alter the form of the theme he is using without destroying the melodic idea, as well as to change it to an idea entirely different by way of variety. Examples of both will be given in the articles to follow.

As the Dramatic Critic Sees Us

CHARLIE CHAPLIN was not the first to realize the dramatic value of custard pie, but he has developed it. Certainly, no one will deny that he wears plastic pastry to more humorous advantage than any other living actor. It is a bit of a shock, then, to find that in "Shanghaied," the latest Essanay comedy, the art of Chaplin has retrograded, prandially speaking. The man of the minute has substituted soup for pie. Fortunately his comic touch is just as firm in the softer medium.

Mr. Chaplin also has discovered that it is more amusing to kick a man off a ship than to kick him downstairs. Not only is the fall longer, but the splash alone is worth the difference in cost between a staircase and a schooner. In addition to messing about in soup and impelling persons overboard with either foot, Chaplin in his new picture deals in the effects which pork is calculated to produce upon travellers at sea. The vulgarity of the Chaplin pictures cannot be denied. They are altogether lacking in subtlety and their appeal must be directed toward a low order of intelligence. They are a scathing indictment of public taste, these Chaplin pictures, and that is why we blush for shame in confessing that we laugh our head off whenever we see one.

To see Mary Pickford at the Broadway theater this week in the Famous Players' film, "A Girl of Yesterday," is to appreciate the fact that there is such a thing as film technique. Picture producers who profess to find great artistic possibilities in "movies" belie their own words, we think, by their policy of taking stars from the legitimate stage and putting them into pictures without any preliminary training.

If Tom, Dick and Harry from the theater can make a picture actor at a minute's notice, there is no art in "movie" making. As a matter of fact, Tom, Dick and Harry are gambles in the picture world. Now and again an actor—as, for instance, Douglas Fairbanks, in "The Lamb"—makes a big success in his first picture play, but for every Fairbanks there are ten other stars of the theater who have failed to achieve anything like the best possibilities of the moving picture play.

A good actor, of course, has had some of the training necessary for pictures, but we contend that only in rare instances can he hope to equal the work of the man who has made a business of playing before the camera.

The best comedy work we have ever seen in moving pictures was done by Sidney Drew in a film by Richard Harding Davis, called "Playing Dead." Francis X. Bushman is much better equipped to play romantic roles for the screen than any actor of the regular stage, no matter how great his reputation may be, and, in our opinion, no comedienne untrained in picture work could hope to realize anything like the possibilities which Mary Pickford makes actualities in "A Girl of Yesterday."

Not a few stars come before the camera with the belief that there is no subtlety in moving pictures. They play only for big effects. We confess to a belief that shading is even more essential for the screen than the stage. Mary Pickford is able, for instance, to amuse you simply by the way she takes off her hat, because she has devoted herself to a study of the eloquence of gesture. Actors who have relied on the voice for effects can't begin to realize how much can be said with an eye, or an arm, or a shoulder. For our part, we like picture plays by picture people.

Foreign Trade Opportunities

Trade Messengers from Nations Gathering in United States —Government Department Helping.

MORE than twenty nations are represented by visitors to the United States who are now making their headquarters at the branch office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C., and who are seeking new trade relations.

Many of these men are members of foreign firms that are preparing to make purchases here. Others are representatives of big commercial houses and offer unusual facilities for our manufacturers to establish agencies abroad. Their earnest efforts to meet us halfway in producing a greater volume of trade with their respective countries are making easier the progress of American commerce in this year of opportunity. There is a wide variety in the classes of goods sought.

WEST POINTERS AT NEW YORK STRAND.

A party of West Point officers attended a performance at the Strand theater last week and were so impressed with the military discipline maintained in the house that they visited the office of the resident manager, R. Alfred Jones, and complimented him on the way the Strand uniformed staff conducted itself. The officers invited Mr. Jones to West Point where they promised to show him real military discipline and give him some pointers.

When Moe Mark, vice-president of the Mark Strand Theater Company, who is building a new theater in Lynn, Mass., heard of the invitation, he arranged to have the manager of the new Strand theater in Lynn, Alfred Newhall, accompany Mr. Jones. The two managers visited the Military Academy last Friday, and their hosts showed them through the different departments and explained to them things that they thought would be of special value to them.

OVEY'S NEW LEADING WOMAN.

Miss St. Aubour is now George Ovey's leading woman in David Horsley's Cub Comedies, taking the place of Goldie Colwell, who was recently transferred to Mr. Horsley's company, producing two-reel Centaur features, after appearing in the comedian's support in over twenty releases. Miss St. Aubour makes her first appearance in "The Double Cross," to be released November 12 on the Mutual program, while Miss Colwell makes her initial bow in the Centaur feature on November 4, when the two-reel drama, "When Avarice Rules," is released.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard.

YES, the Hub is still here, though the spokes seem to have disappeared. I would like a hundred pages to speak of the impressions made upon us over here by the wonderful and varied pictures seen during the past month. Personally, I have viewed them all, and passed the word along; but only a score or so stand out prominently to live in memory. It is too late to speak even of these in any worthy manner. The Pathe pictures are of great educational value, and I have sent hundreds to see them for the sake of their historical character to the young. Rarely have we seen anything to compare with those of Belgium and France—countries many of us have explored before the devastation. "The Waterways of Bruges," exquisitely colored, was worth seeing twice or more; also "Geithorn, the Rustic Venice," and dozens equally fine. I claim that these sort of films should be seen in the schools all over the land, as well as good "See America First" ones.

* * *

We have had some Biograph films with Henry B. Walthall, showing his versatility, and we are on the qui vive over his coming in "The Raven," which ought to be a winner. If there is such a thing as a film matinee idol, Mr. Walthall is "it" around here, because of the general intelligence displayed and for his work as "The Little Colonel." Of course, the young things swear by Francis X. Bushman or handsome "Bob" Warwick—so there you are!

* * *

Among the gripping films were "Not a Lamb Shall Stray"; "The Hand of God," with Bobby Connelly and that splendid soldier, Col. Draper, in the cast; "A Mother's Atonement," featuring that sterling actress, Cleo Madison; "Inheritance," with Bryant Washburn and Ruth Stonehouse—a film which showed the police matron rightly placed; "Alas and Alack," with its remarkable story, closing with a huge bunch of asters with babies' faces shining through; "A Cameo Ring"; and "By These Deeds." "Tillie's Tomato Surprise" furnished one good feature—the ape. Miss Dressler all through was a female Chaplin—nuf sed!

* * *

So "The Writing on the Wall" is being filmed! Good, for it has a big lesson. Well do I recall Olga Nethersole in the play over in New York and the tremendous sensation created, and the aftermath of it all, when Trinity landowners sat up and took notice and proceeded to do things on their own property downtown. The film will tell the awful story, taking one to the scene of the holocaust, where the son of the rich owner happened to be at a Christmas tree gathering of the poor, and lost his life. Olga Nethersole's denunciation of her husband in the play was one long to be remembered. Bobby Connelly, our pet boy of the films, is in the cast and that versatile man, Joseph Kilgour. Virginia Pearson ought to fill the eye and make a hit.

* * *

I was a guest of genial George Balsdon at the V-L-S-E runoff, the other night, and enjoyed thoroughly "The Crimson Wing," a most pretentious film, full of vitality, and superbly done by a capable company including Beverly Bayne, Ruth Stonehouse, Bryant Washburn and, best of all, E. H. Calvert, who directed it and whose military experience enables him to defy criticism. It is spectacular and serves to illustrate the opening of the European War, the sending out of the Uhlans into French territory and the dreaded Zeppelins. Many society people are in the cast, like Edward S. Moore, a Chicago banker, who acts as chauffeur in military dress and manipulating his $14,000 car. Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor is the author, and many of the scenes are taken on the grounds of his mansion, while the foreign ones are on the borderline between France and Germany.

* * *

"The Battle Cry of Peace" has made a tremendous hit here, the home of Congressman A. P. Gardiner, who sounded the first note for preparedness, now everywhere in the air of the nation.

* * *

Hats off to W. Stephen Bush for his article on "Watch Your Titles" in a recent issue of this publication! Judging from what I notice day by day at the leading motion picture houses, he did not go far enough. When a film is released throughout the country with simple words misspelled, it shows indifference, and worse. There should be a paid censor or critic on English, spelling and grammar at runoffs. Within a week I have seen a dozen errors, such as "sensasional" (on a Paramount release at that), "forrest," etc. "Alright" and "already" used wrongly show illiteracy, for the veriest school child knows better.

* * *

"What a pity that dear boy has to grow up, for he is such a little artist," said a society woman on seeing Bobby Connelly in "Old Good For Nothing," a Vitagraph gem. Bobby always makes good; he does more, he stirs the emotions of the most case-hardened theatergoer. We are mighty glad that the Massa' blue law cannot touch the children in the films, as they do on the speaking stage, for no kid under fourteen can act here—more's the pity! We are having, therefore, treats galore in the babies and tots continually before our eyes which are frequently moistened by their silent appeals; and don't they behave well!

* * *

In "The Millionaire Engineer" the Universal Company is giving genuine pleasure, aside from King Baggot's splendid work in settings different from any I have seen him in. The outdoor night scenes with the mob make a great contrast to the glitter of the palatial interior, and the story is so well told, to say nothing of the stunts done by the hero and fiancee during a forest fire. A Harvard professor sat next to me at the Boston theater where the Sunday evening audience has fifty per cent. men in it. Said he: "What a fine thing to release and save all those school children who might have been cremated!" You see he caught the spirit of the thing and did not hesitate to speak of it to a stranger.

* * *

The Exeter theater has introduced something new for motion picture houses, following the example of Belasco and our Plymouth theater here, in signaling the opening of the film show by melodious bells. Before the long reel goes on, there is an intermission for conversation or change in sittings, the bells calling all "to order." There is a long line of private autos at this theater for the evening entertainment and the soloist is always a professional. Mr. Jocelyn renders appropriate music, never intrusive or loud. Among Back Bay patrons are Governor Walsh, Mr. and Mrs. J. Anthony Remick and family, Miss Annie Warren, Mr. and Mrs. H. Staples Potter, Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Bolles, Miss Bertha Wesselhoeft Swift and other members of the Vincent Club, Mrs. Josiah Hayden, Dr. Eliza B. Cahill, Mrs. John Ritchie and scores who go regularly, feeling assured of something high class like the Pathe features, Paramount, V-L-S-E and Universal films. Then, too, we are sure to have Sidney Drew and George Ade's fables for real comedy.

Rose Coghlan has joined the Film Club and was presented with roses during the week that she celebrated her fiftieth anniversary on the stage in the "Trilby" all-star cast at the Shubert theater. She presented the president, Miss Brazier, with a portrait of herself dressed as Lady Teazle when Wallack's closed in May last. Howell Hansel is the latest New York member to join. The club will give a breakfast to the stars who come here for the ball December 1. It will be at the Hotel Brunswick the following day, arranged by Samuel Grant, a member, who is chairman of the ball at our big Arena.

"An Enemy to Society" was liked immensely for the work done by Hamilton Revelle and H. Cooper Cliffe, recalled for his "Nobody" in "Everywoman." Mr. Cliffe was robbed of the final "e" in his name on the title.

At the World Film runoff I saw Hilda Spong in "Divorced," and it is some film. "Emmy of the Stork's Nest" made a hit here, as did "The Woman in the Box," a daring film. "Brutality," with Mae Marsh and Lionel Barrymore, had a strikingly good finale, a play within a play (Oliver Twist murder scene, introduced to work upon what little soul the brutal husband had). Barrymore's face was a study in expression and there was a big lesson for naughty husbands in front.

We are having "Carmen" here again, but this time at the Park and Exeter at twenty-five cents a seat. Some strong films are billed, and all our theaters are doing excellent business, the patronage increasing. Particularly noticeable is the large number of business men and society people who only last year were shrugging their shoulders at motion pictures. With all this I have a word to say: "Watch your titles," or have an expert do it before releasing. "Already" is an adverb; "all ready," a noun. One play has gone out with "Idyl" spelled with two l's, which I tried to correct in vain.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

FENRAY THEATER, MARTIN'S FERRY, OHIO.

Handsome Photoplay House to Cost $40,000—Has 1,200 Seating Capacity.

THE accompanying illustration is an architect's wash drawing of the Fenray theater of Martin's Ferry, Ohio, being built by the Fenray Photoplay Company of that city. The theater is scheduled for opening during the month of December and represents an investment of $40,000. The officers of the company are A. W. Eick, president; C. F. Neugart, vice-president; Louis Eick, treasurer, A. J. Fallen, secretary. The manager of the new theater will be Ray L. Griffin. These men are experienced business men and good students of human nature. With this knowledge of humanity, coupled with their commercial ability, the owners will administrate the Fenray along lines which presage a long and profitable career for the new photoplay house.

Ray L. Griffin.

The erection of the theater as it progresses is being photographed by the motion picture camera and the completed picture will be projected upon the screen of the Fenray when it is opened to the public. By this method the managers will be able to show to those who have not witnessed the actual building of the theater the fireproof material that was used. It will also bear testimony to the fact that "safety first" was always uppermost in the minds of the builders, and will establish one of the strongest advertising arguments in regard to the stability of the theater.

The structure will occupy a plot of ground measuring 50 x 114 feet, and is located in a prominent section of Martin's Ferry. The auditorium will have a seating capacity of 1,200 persons, and the seats are to be so arranged that perfect sight lines will be obtained from any seat in the house. There will be three wide longitudinal aisles and a large number of exits. A balcony and a number of boxes will also be built into the Fenray. It is the aim of the company to provide for the people of Martin's Ferry a metropolitan photoplay house which will be comparable with picture theaters in larger cities. The interior and exterior will be beautifully decorated in old ivory and gold, and greenery will be placed in different parts of the auditorium which will enhance the attractiveness.

The front of the building will be finished in terra cotta and tapestry brick, and a beautiful canopy will extend across the sidewalk. It will be illuminated with a large number of incandescent and arc lights. The name of the house will be emblazoned in a big electric sign which will be seen from a considerable distance. As any other up-to-date picture house, the Fenray will contain all the latest improvements and conveniences for the patrons. There will be a woman's rest room with a maid in constant attendance. Provisions have been made for the checking of parcels, and telephone booths will be placed throughout the auditorium. The owners are having a confectionery store built on one side of the lobby with an entrance leading into the lobby and one leading into the street. This obviates the necessity for those in the auditorium from going into the street in order to get to the store. Drinking fountains with sanitary cups will be found in convenient locations throughout the house and a smoking room for men will be provided.

A great deal of attention has been given to the matter of ventilation. Fresh air will be taken through ducts from above the roof and forced into a compartment where water spray is continually circulated. The air in passing through the water is cooled and the particles of dirt that may be in it are removed when it passes through the water. The air is then forced through ducts into the theater and is drawn out by big exhaust fans. This method of ventilation insures absolutely pure and clarified air being sent into the house at all times. The operating room is practically fireproof. Two Baird projection machines are to be used, and a Gold Fibre Screen will be installed. Epitomizing all the features of the Fenray, it can be said of the house that it is a valuable addition to Martin's Ferry.

NEW THEATER, SALINA, KANSAS.

The accompanying illustration is a view of the interior of the New Theater, Salina, Kan. With its two balconies and the orchestra floor the house seats 780 persons. A five piece orchestra is employed. Two Power's 6A projection machines are used. During the winter months nothing but features are shown. Archie W. Blue is the manager.

NEW THEATER FOR MORENCI.

M. L. Gay, owner of the Gem Theater, Morenci, Mich., has begun the erection of a 400 seating capacity photoplay house in that city. It will be two stories in height and 20 by 120 in dimensions. It will be equipped with all modern conveniences.

There will be a large lobby and the stairway to the operating room will lead into it. Nothing known and desirable in a first class theater will be omitted in the construction and when completed it will be one of the handsomest structures in Morenci.

SANS-SOUCI THEATER, WATERVLIET, N. Y.

ADVERTISED as the "Home of Pictorial Novelty" is the Sans-Souci theater, of 110 Sixteenth street, Watervliet, N. Y. This city has a population of 17,000, and is known as the Arsenal City, for the reason that Uncle Sam manufactures his big gun armament in that place. Watervliet is a three-minute walk from Troy, which is just across the Hudson River, and a six-mile ride from Albany, the capital of the state. The theater is owned by Kyran A. Fisher and Maurice F. Sullivan, and is managed by J. L. Maurache. The Sans-Souci has to compete with four other picture houses, but it is the only theater in that city which is devoted exclusively to the exploitation of feature productions.

Sans-Souci Theater, Watervliet, N. Y.

The exterior dimensions of the structure are 30 by 120 feet. The throw is 95 feet, and the size of the screen is 15 by 17 feet. Perfect ventilation is secured by five big ventilators in the ceiling, and the large number of windows with which the auditorium is fitted. The house seats 400; this includes the balcony, where the manager's office is located. The operating booth, which complies in every way with the city laws, is built of fire-resisting material, and is 14 by 14 feet in size. A Mason & Hamlin piano is used.

Two shows each evening are given. These consist of five or more reels and a song. The program is changed every day. The manager has set aside each Thursday as a special feature day. The Sans-Souci is not open on Sundays. Adjoining the theater is an airdome which is operated during the summer months. It seats 350 persons. The careful administration of the Sans-Souci is netting the owners a big profit each week.

NEWSOME BUILDING BIG THEATER.

H. M. Newsome, of Birmingham, Ala., will have his $25,000 picture house ready for business on December 1 next. The new house will be located at 1923 Third avenue that city, on the site of the old Bonita theater. According to the plans the new theater will be 140 feet deep and 30 feet wide. As to the interior decorations, they will be of a quiet tempo and the indirect lighting system will be used. The floor of the theater is planned to be of Tennessee marble.

This grade of marble will also be used in the foyer, and the grand stairway, which will lead to the balcony from the main entrance. As to the ventilation, it is planned to use two six-foot blowers to bring in fresh air from the top of the building. The foul air will be drawn out by big exhaust fans which will be located in scientifically correct places in the auditorium. As to the name of the new theater, Mr. Newsome will conduct a contest and the fortunate young lady who offers a suitable name will be given a prize.

PLANS $50,000 THEATER.

O. L. Meister, proprietor of the Vaudette theater, Milwaukee, Wis., is having plans drawn for a moving picture theater which he is to build at 155 Third street, that city. It will be of brick and reinforced concrete construction, 45 by 150 feet. It is calculated that its seating capacity will be about 1,500, including the balcony. The cost will be about $50,000.

NATIONAL THEATER, PHARR, TEXAS.

Despite Mexican War Scare, This Photoplay House Does Excellent Business—Announces Week's Program in Page Advertisement.

DOWN on the borders of the Rio Grande in the Brownsville district of Pharr, Texas, W. E. Cage opened the National theater on last July first. The structure is owned and operated by Mr. Cage and has a seating capacity of 500. It is open seven days a week and uses pictures from all programs. The operating room of the National is equipped with a Power's 6A motor-driven machine and a Mercury arc rectifier. A 10 by 14-foot Gold Fiber screen has been installed, and the seats are of the folded opera chair type. Music is furnished by an automatic piano.

National Theater, Pharr, Texas.

Notwithstanding the Mexican war scare in the vicinity of Pharr, the business at the National has been, since the house was opened, all that could be expected. Besides being the owner and manager of the National, Mr. Cage is also postmaster of Pharr and the proprietor of a newspaper in that place. A full-page advertisement is carried each week in the local paper. This announcement gives the entire bill of the week at the National and a full synopsis of each feature picture, together with a critical comment of each day's program.

BRITISH NOTES

AFTER providing a fortnight's food for serious thought the recently imposed film duty, now in force, has been to some an incentive to precipitate action. One or two American agencies have given their customers formal notice of a slight increase in the price of open market prints; generally it works out at a farthing per foot (half a cent) upon film previously sold at four-pence per foot. Now that the government impost has been finally fixed on the definite and concrete basis of a cent per foot for raw stock, two cents upon positives and sixteen cents per foot upon negatives in preference, and as an afterthought to the original statement in Parliament by Chancellor McKenna, who declared for the "ad valorem" system, it is possible to analyze and dissect its effects and results upon the different types of films. Leaving out of consideration for the moment the majority of improved films there are two particular varieties, well in the minority it is admitted, but nevertheless upon the market, that to my mind will be adversely and unfairly hampered. These are the artificially colored or stencilled picture (some very fine specimens of which come from the U. S. A. under the Pathe pseudonym "A. K.") and the films classified under the elastic term of "interest," scenic or travel. The former type are often produced at a dead loss to the manufacturer and released solely to maintain a note of variety in his program. The maker of the artificially colored film never knows what it is going to cost until it is an accomplished thing. The laborious and intricate task of cutting seven or eight stencils for a twin-reel picture which frequently may require improvement or modification under process baffles the keenest estimation. Yet this film when finished is sold at a fraction over the cost of a monochrome print and will presumably be assessed for taxation on the profit-making basis of the ordinary positive. For the past twelve months the issue of colored pictures could almost be counted on the fingers; the scarcity of the refined anilines, I am informed, has some bearing upon it, but with the price of these still soaring and the penny per foot tax over and above the ordinary cost of the production the only indication to the future of the popular "colored" is one that points to its absolute extermination.

* * *

The others we can perhaps better define as educational subjects. They are often important as a pure speculation. Many come into the country undeveloped, but still the duty has to be paid whether the film turns out a success or failure. It is thought in many quarters that this will act as a serious deterrent to travelers and explorers returning with miles of unfinished negatives.

* * *

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt has been setting forth to the trans-Atlantic people her reasons for enjoying film acting, which she has been doing for them assiduously of late. Her chief argument is that she finds it a distinct help to act with real scenery. In "Jeanne Dore," a pulsating tragedy, just completed by the European branch of the Universal, she has occasion to appear at a window, and it is a real window. On the stage, she says, she would only be able to act with a property window and the unstable nature of the property one makes all the difference to the sincerity of her acting. If when playing for the film she has to go shopping she enters a real shop and buys real articles. Mme. Bernhardt considers this element of realism one of the greatest assets of the moving picture.

In London and the chief provincial cities Nov. 9 has been fixed as a special "Kinema Day" by a resolution passed at a recent mass meeting of the trade in the Metropolis. Upon this day—which is the anniversary of the late King Edward's birthday—a large number of exhibitors throughout the country have promised to devote whole or part of their takings to the trade fund for providing a motor ambulance convoy.

When war was declared over fourteen months ago Fredk. Burlingham, the man who went down Vesuvius, was halfway up Mount Blanc on his second attempt to film a complete ascent. His guides returned, and not until last spring was he able to make an ascent satisfactory to his moving picture camera. The fruits of his endeavors have been shown to the trade this week and present a remarkably interesting spectacle of the roof of the earth. Moving picture views of the famous mountain were on exhibition ten years ago or more, but it seems to have occurred to Burlingham alone to secure records of Mount Blanc in the dangerous season. The precarious nature of the undertaking is brought home to the spectator as he watches a real, unarranged, avalanche of thousands of tons of dispersing snow thunder down the mountain side. Another point which makes the film of extraordinary interest is a technical one, the use of a graded light filter for the rendition of true tone values much along the lines of the panchromatic process in ordinary photography. Of this I may have more to report later.

London Trade Topics.

As intimated a few months ago, D. W. Russell is fostering David Horsley's agencies in this country. He has taken a suite of offices in the new Selig building and present indications point to satisfactory business with the 1,000 feet issues of the Cub and MinA brands.

The Hepworth Company is starting this week another "yellow poster" campaign, the xanthine attribute being, of course, confined to the shade of the paper. Throughout the summer at every underground or railroad depot, on almost every hoarding in the London area, in motor omnibuses, electric lifts and a dozen different places where one or two gather together the aggressive Hepworth yellow poster, just a plain yellow sheet with never more than a single sentence, was there in conspicuousity. The new poster will be on similar lines, but instead of the convincing little homilies on picture personalities we are to be reminded by the Hepworth Company that it is our duty (if not our desire) to see only British films.

The second film featuring Lupino Lane, the comedian, who is still appearing at the Empire theater, was recently shown by Davison's Agency and is entitled "The Nipper's Busy Holiday," from the studio of the John Bull Film Company. Lane is a comedian who will yet be heard of and is even now considering an offer from the Trans-Atlantic Company.

J. Smith, of the Barker Motion Photoplay Company, and Reg. Warde of Harma & Company, renters of London, will be among early visitors to the States. The former is on a short business tour, but Mr. Warde is taking a permanent appointment in New York.

That honored and old established monument to British film production, the Clarendon Film Company, has at last become incorporated under the limited liability companies acts and was last week registered as the Clarendon Film Company, Ltd., with an increased capital of £15,000. The same directors (Messrs. Stow & Sharp) will direct the policy of the new company, which will utilize its old factory and plant on the southern outskirts of the city. The recent protracted dormancy of one of the oldest home-producing concerns has occasioned much criticism in the trade. Perhaps its internal reconstruction is the first indication of a new and promising vitality.

The first of a regular series of British comedies to be exploited by the Trans-Atlantic Company has been unspooled to the trade. Number one introduces the principal comedian of the series rejoicing under the sobriquet "Poor Clem," which is also the title of the subject under notice. In private life the impecunious Clem is William Page, who displays no mean talents as a knockabout humorist. He is the discovery of the well known Oxford street house, and while realizing little out of the ordinary in his debut promises much in the way of original absurdities.

A private company is under formation to take over the motion picture undertakings of the late Sir Hubert von Herkomer, the celebrated artist who only a year before his death started to apply his artistic attainments to the kine camera. He fitted out a modern studio—the American producer would call it a small one—but what it lacked in size it gained in completeness of equipment and situation. The Herkomer studio at Bushey, Hertfordshire, was visited by many American directors and manufacturers, and but for the untimely death of its founder would have been a familiar name on the silent stage of to-day.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

A DRAMATIC critic of one of the leading newspapers of this city says that "no perceptible rise in the quotations of shares in the fast multiplying film corporations has followed William A. Brady's admission that motion pictures have reached a point in their triumphal development where they are threatening the life of the spoken drama." It matters little whether there was a rise or fall in stock quotations so far as the statement made by Mr. Brady is concerned. It was made in a speech at a dinner recently given in his honor and was intended to show that the continued increasing popularity of the photoplays is eating into the vitals of the spoken drama. Despite the fact that the stock market did not act in conformity with the views the dramatic critic based upon Mr. Brady's remarks we find in another column of the same paper this news item: "Two plays folded their tents last evening and silently stole away." One of the plays struggled along at the Princess theater for eleven days and the other kept afloat at the Fulton for five. These are the straws that demonstrate in the strongest manner the pulse of the amusement public. It is the play itself that counts and the patrons of the screen, other than actual investors, do not care a rap how the stock of the companies producing the plays stand in the stock market. The great success attending the photoplays was well established long before producers thought of floating their stock. It is but a few years ago that a suggestion to float motion picture stock on the public market was ridiculed and several initial attempts to do so failed utterly, many of the promoters scorching their fingers so badly that they could not be drawn into the business again with steam power. In looking over the list of successful producers of the past and present we find that the greater number of them never placed a share of stock on the market. The veterans in the business attained success solely on the merits and continued improvement in the standard of their products. It was not the financial backing behind it that attracted the numerous investors that have since entered the motion picture producing and exhibiting field, but the great possibilities which the patience, industry and skill of the veterans brought into focus.

* * *

The motion picture business has proved to be one of the most remarkable commercial ventures on record. It deceived the most experienced and enterprising men in the theatrical business, as well as thousands of the most astute financiers in search of investments. It is but a few years ago that scores of these people were invited, even implored, to lend their assistance to development of motion pictures; to get in on the ground floor, grow with them and share in the big returns which the veterans claimed patience and judicious management were bound to bring, but they could not see any merit in the prospectus. To a majority of the theatrical managers, moving pictures were a short-life novelty. Many looked upon them as a joke—foolish stuff trying to break into the regular theatrical business, as some of them put it. In those days the pictures were used in the vaudeville houses to close the programs and their popularity declined to such an extent that the greater part of the audiences walked out when the screens were dropped for projection of the pictures. There were some good pictures in those days, but on the whole the audiences could not be blamed for walking out. The situation became so serious that some of the producers went out of the business and some who are now foremost in it were tempted to do likewise. But the latter had an insight to the possibilities of the motion picture camera that many, supposed to be, more shrewd men called a mania or bug. It was in these gloomy days that the loyal ones offered the golden opportunities, but were left to their own resources. Vaudeville performers have at times been credited with a perception of motion picture possibilities. But few, if any, of them differed from the rest of the doubting ones. What serious thought they gave to the pictures was not born of fear of competition, but of revulsion due to current effect. Whenever vaudeville houses booked the pictures it cut out a regular vaudeville act and managers generally made the booking because they saved money in booking them. This naturally caused hostility on the part of the performers that did not tend to benefit the pictures. The newspapers sided with the opposition and eventually the several municipal departments in all the cities and larger towns took a strangle hold on the pictures. The building, electrical, fire, health and every other department that could dig up a possible excuse got into the game. Those were the good old days of graft and, with the comparatively small financial backing they had, it is surprising that the motion pictures lived through the ordeal. The nickelodeons were sprouting up then and, to add to the troubles, the theatrical managers decided not to book pictures any more because they were being shown at the "store shows," as they called them, in the vicinity of the regular house and had become absolutely valueless as an attraction for regular theaters.

* * *

Very few people in the business to-day really know what revived life in motion pictures. What knowledge of it most people have was derived from the veterans who have handed down tales of their bitter experience. Just when the clouds were the heaviest and even the most faithful were about to give up G. Melies, a producer in Paris, France, placed upon the market a spectacle in motion pictures which he called "A Trip to the Moon." It was a story picture of about 900 feet in length and the then American Vitagraph Company launched it in this country under the title of "A Trip to the Moon." It was a revelation and a big success. Shortly after the Edison Company produced "The Great Train Robbery" with even greater success. It was the advent of big story pictures and the public caught on to the possibilities of motion picture work so effectually that the regular theater people were forced to again book the pictures. This revival then led to the launching of traveling motion picture shows and the doors of the regular theaters were thrown open to them on the 50-50 basis. But even at that time investors remained skeptical. They recognized the revival, but looked upon it as only temporary and said it was marked by the same novelty that attached to the earlier pictures and the result would be the same. What followed is current history.

* * *

To-day we find the critic referred to in the opening of this article declaring that the larger number of regular theaters both in this city and all over the country have been absorbed "by the vastly popular shadow drama." "It has opened a new way for people in search of entertainment," says Mr. Louis V. De Foe in the Sunday World, "to avoid spoken and acted plays that should never have been produced at all." He adds that a positive advantage would accrue to the acted drama if 25 per cent. more of the theaters all over the country were surrendered to the screens.

* * *

In the face of this frank statement, where can the people who are continually crying for more strict censorship find justification for their claims? Motion pictures are a blessing in disguise because they are now advocated as a purifier of the stage. It is entirely logical to contend that as such they should be accorded equal privileges with the stage and their usefulness should not be allowed by any authority to be curtailed through nonsensical and unjust censorship, or any other regulations that do not apply with equal effect to the regular theaters. This is all the motion picture producers and exhibitors have asked for and their standing in the amusement world justifies their demand for equal recognition and treatment. During the first two months of the present season the failures in the regular theaters in this city have almost aggregated two dozen and most of these plays have been condemned by the ablest critics for bad taste and false philosophy; yet in not one instance has an attempt been made by the authorities or censor cranks to condemn them. There are police regulations adaptable to all productions whether upon the stage or upon the screen, yet the former are reviewed only on rare occasions and the screen is a constant victim of discrimination. Even the regular theatrical people are crying out against certain stage productions while the "guardians of public morals" remain absolutely mute. Such a condition of affairs cannot go on indefinitely, and if the producers and exhibitors will judiciously yet determindedly exercise the influence and strength represented by their number they must eventually win their struggle for just and equal recognition. It has long since been demonstrated that this cannot be accomplished by persuasion. Such methods fall upon the hypocrite and the politicians under their influence like water upon a duck's back. The one agency through which the motion picture people can secure what they are entitled to is the political arena. All the motion picture people must stand together at the polls and in the lobbies of the legislatures and Congress and fight the unjust influences that use the same methods. Other elections are coming and many evils require extermination, and whether the elections to come are a week, month or a year hence the motion picture people should continue their work incessantly and be ready when the time comes to act.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

An Example.

FILM FACTS, the organ of the Metro exchange in Boston, is one of the liveliest exchange issues that comes to our desk. W. E. Furber, who edits the organ, gets hold of real meat for every issue, but this is particularly good:

> When C. A. Riva first opened his Pastime theater, Tilton, N. H., the town looked upon the theater as a peril to be avoided. It was pretty tough sledding for a while, but Mr. Riva used his gray matter. He looked up the studies of the high school students and, when possible, secured special pictures that dealt with them. Later he prevailed upon one of the ministers of the town to lecture on a biblical subject, and in various other ways slowly wormed his way into the hearts and graces of the people of Tilton. He has won to the extent that no other theater license is allowed in the town, and he acts as his own censor. Just now he is making arrangements with the town to admit the children to special matinees for 3 cents each, the town paying him the other 2 cents for each and every child who attends. What do you think of that? Hats off to Mgr. Riva; he has shown us how to handle a prejudiced community.

The man who can do that is a manager, but any man of tact can do it.

Going On.

There is always something doing around the Third Street, Easton, Pa. The management writes:

> It may be of interest to you that a company of Famous Players are now in this city and vicinity taking scenes for their picture, "Still Waters." The company is headed by Marguerite Clark, with J. Searle Dawley as director. Mr. Dawley is highly pleased with our water and mountain scenes. He required canal scenes of a special nature and after traveling several hundred miles seeing different canals he decided that we had the prettiest and promptly brought his company here. Miss Clark also is very much pleased with the country and expressed her desire to stay here for some time.
>
> The roof of our theater is so that it could be easily arranged to build a studio on it. It measures 90 feet square and is perfectly level. The matter of locating a company of players here temporarily is now under consideration by the Famous Players Co.

It is rather late in the season for field companies so far north, but it is pretty country around here and with a good stage space so conveniently located it would be ideal for next summer and then the Third Street could say it was the only picture theater with its own studio.

A Newspaper Advertisement.

D. Filizola, of the Theaterette, Fort Scott, Kan., sends in proof of a newspaper advertisement and wants to know what we think of it. Since he adds that it brought him money, we think it must be all right, but the display, while good, is not elaborate and the rule border is badly locked up and you can count the pieces—evidently linotype slugs. The advertisement announces the taking over of the Broadway Features, and so must run pretty full, but ordinarily there would be too much type for the space taken. Evidently the job room is not "long" on display type, for Mr. Filizola explains the use of two type faces in the border by saying that there was not enough to set all caps as he wanted. That is one of the things the exhibitor cannot well help, but for the current releases the amount of reading matter should be cut down, that each announcement may get proper display.

A Polyglot Program.

Ben Michaels, of the Verdi, San Francisco, writes:

> Under separate cover I am mailing you my first attempt in the way of a house organ.
>
> Contrary to custom, I have christened it after the district in which my theater is located, instead of calling it "The Verdi Herald," etc.
>
> I believe, or rather think, that in making my house organ a district paper, and dedicating it to the district it will be more widely read and its value be increased as an advertising medium. As yet, the merchants have not been solicited for advertising space. In my second edition, I intend to get closer to that subject. I am going to try to create a demand for space. I intend to have the merchants (and there are a great many of them here) call me up, or come to see me regarding same. At least, when my representative does call he will be received with open arms.
>
> Subscription blanks are printed in each edition, one year's subscription of one dollar entitles subscriber to twelve tickets, saving twenty cents; six months' subscription, six tickets, and three months' subscription, three tickets. I have a young lady in the lobby with a table and cash register, having a very loud bell (that is the register, not the young lady) and signs in various languages (I am in a cosmopolitan district), shouting out the fact that they can save money by purchasing tickets from her instead of our regular cashier and pay box. I have to have the assistance of several interpreters to explain to them how they can save money. By the way, my paper will contain one-half page Spanish matter, the other half French and an entire page Italian. Later on I hope to include a Chinese section. Some clientele—what? Have just formed a strong combination with competing houses regulating conditions. I have a house seating 1,200, costing $60,000, which I opened of course, with an admission of ten cents, but my friends, my competitors, got together and began to fight me. At a meeting of the Local League, I voiced my complaints regarding the tactics which they adopted and advocated unity of action. I was laughed at by them, and when I realized that they wanted a scrap I gave it to them. Brass bands, eight, nine and sometimes ten reels for a nickel, a set of silver-ware every night, money to the kids from the top of the house—in fact, I used every weapon that I could think of, fair or foul, to accomplish my purpose. I issued pamphlets and circulars, some of which were severely criticised, by James S. McQuade and others. At that time, not desiring to rush into print, I laid low and never even replied, forgiving my critics because they knew not what I was up against.
> After whipping my competitors into line by giving them, first of all, all the fight they wanted, then as victor I sent emissaries to the vanquished, not in a dictatorial manner, but in a conciliating one, asked for a meeting and organized one of the most efficient and beneficent arrangements to film exchange and exhibitor alike ever formed.

The paper is still in its formative stages and will be better as it grows. It can be made into a real power in the district with an aggressive personality behind it—and we believe that Mr. Michaels possesses that personality. This is merely by way of an introduction as the letter is more interesting than the issue is at present.

Made an Exhibit.

A. W. Ballenger, of the Dean, York, Neb., who used to come in more often than he does now, sends in some postcard pictures of an exhibit the house had at a local display known as a Fall Festival. It was largely a county fair in miniature and the idea of a picture theater making an exhibit was a novelty that interested the visitors and won a five-inch comment in the daily paper in which it spoke of pictures as now being an established business; the sort of attitude the papers have been so slow to accept. It is rather too late to suggest that other houses get in their display in fairs and expositions, but it will be a good thing for next season. This display consisted of photographs and printed matter, but a spare machine, samples of film between two plates of glass and similar exhibits would add to the interest. We regret that the post cards will not reproduce.

Free Tickets.

A midwest correspondent sends in the circular of a competitor in which the offer is made of free tickets for subsequent nights for those who attend the performance advertised. The writer styles the competition unfair and wants to know how to combat it. Not knowing the facts, we do not feel convinced that the competition is unfair, but the remedy is obvious. Make it plain that your own show is good enough to be worth the full money and that you do not have to give two six-reel shows for the price of one. Get the patrons—the other man's patrons—thinking along those lines and two tickets for the price of one will not seem so attractive. There are times when it helps matinee business to give a matinee ticket with night admissions just to get them coming, but two night shows for a five and ten cent scale suggests that the performances are so poor that they are not even worth half price, and this fact, if emphasized, should do the work.

A Slip.

Dave Udell slipped up when he got out a card with a deep mourning border announcing the death of "I. M. Gloomy" due to the shows at his house. The suggestion of death should always be avoided in amusement advertising. The shock overcomes the supposed novelty of the idea.

Fine!

Charles Decker, of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Colo., has a four-page weekly paper, The Movie News, that he gets out for the house. In a recent issue he inaugurated a department to promote an intelligent appreciation of the Sunday opening question. He does not rant and rave. He presents facts succinctly and makes his appeal to reason and not to emotion. The first issue gives a report of the Church Film Circuit, of Elgin, Ill., and advances that organization as a text for the sermon that pictures are not the things of evil the bigots suppose them to be. It is a move that other periodical publishers might well follow. If you have a house organ, give some space each week to the dignity of the pictures. Advertise them as a business and you'll not have to worry much about Sunday openings.

A Coupon, But—

The Crawford theater, Wichita, Kan., has gone to the coupon stunt, but it uses the best newspaper coupon we have seen yet. We print it for the guidance of others:

> This Coupon Entitles Holder to a Hundred Thrills a Hundred Sensations.
> Theda Bara, Jean Sothern and WM. E. SHAY in > The Two Orphans
> Bearer May Claim a 10c. Seat for Ten Cents.

It would be better still if the words "this coupon" were given a line to themselves and a larger display.

Two souvenir programs are sent in. One is a fine lemon stock, two pages and a fold over; a very artistic bit of printing, bar some Old English type, but it covers a shockingly poor half-tone of Charles Chaplin. Much better in effect is one of Miss Clara Kimball Young in which the program is pasted for half an inch to the back of the card and then folded over the face. It costs less but is much more effective.

Series Booklets.

James A. Morrison, of the Star, Meaford, Ontario, is getting out a booklet for the fifteen installments of "The Road o' Strife." A twelve-page book carries the stories of the complete film. We think it would be better to run stories of the fourteen and leave the fifteenth to be seen in the theater. A booklet for a series is helpful in aiding the fans to refer back to previous stories and it might help to run some such line as:

> KEEP THIS BOOKLET.
> You are bound to become interested in "The Road o' Strife" and it will be handy to have this to refer back to as the series progresses.

This will ensure the holding of a greater proportion of the first issue and keep down the demand for duplicates. Mr. Morrison seems to like the series idea, for he runs four each week.

The book is simply but neatly gotten out. No cuts are used, but this is an advantage on the paper employed. We do not notice any reference to course tickets for the series. We wonder if Mr. Morrison has tried selling tickets by course.

Opposition.

The Famous Players Film Co., of Boston, is getting out a condensed opposition to picture theater advertising in the shape of a four-page folder of hints on house management. It is house management in a nutshell. It is good enough to copy, so we shall.

> Get a Paramount Franchise. There is quality and consistency in the service. It stimulates and builds up.
>
> Always advertise. Use a house organ each week telling your story. Bill your front and lobby as impressively as you can, but don't plaster it. Use a mailing list. Make your house the representative one of your city or town.
>
> "THE HOME OF PARAMOUNT."
>
> Cleanliness is next to godliness. Have a clean and comfortable house. Not too cold or warm.
>
> Have your attaches polite, agreeable and well dressed.
>
> Be sure your projection is good, screen good, booth clean, lenses and machines same way. Test your voltage and rheostat. If not up to standard your picture is not good.
>
> Have a personal acquaintance with as many patrons as possible.
>
> Never consider you have competition.
>
> Good music is essential. Give it attention.
>
> Watch your program. Don't have resemblance. Diversity is the keynote of a satisfactory program.
>
> Don't have a dark house. Try to light it, when showing a picture. Use amber at your entrance, green on the sides, red at exits and in the boxes. This combination generally is good.
>
> In advertising, don't do it once, keep it up, week in and out. Advertising attains its best results with persistency.

If you'll do just that and no more, you'll be the real manager of a real house.

Big Four Stunts.

The alert press department of the V-L-S-E sends in a set of stunts employed by exhibitors using their offerings. They are still good for others and suggest how other titles may be adapted to display or mail work.

When "The House of a Thousand Candles" was shown at the Orpheum theater, Franklin, Pa., the exhibitor engaged a show window, which he filled completely with candles of all sizes—some in candlesticks, some unsupported and others carelessly thrown around.

At night those in the holders were lighted and made an unusual contrast to other electrically lighted windows in the vicinity. A small card bearing the name of the theater where the feature was engaged satisfied the curiosity of the large number of people attracted by the display.

This same exhibitor used hundreds of candles to illuminate his lobby and his box office each night while showing this feature. The effect of the soft, mellow light was quite unusual, and attracted capacity business. Passersby thought that maybe the city light plant had broken down, until after closer investigation, the real reason for this odd illumination was apparent to them.

Three weeks before the exhibition date of another of this company's features, "Mortmain," the Grand Opera House, in Titusville, Pa., sent out an imprint of the human hand on a plain sheet of paper to each of the "leading lights" of the town.

The imprint was made with carbon dust, giving it a very ghastly appearance. One week later, a second notice was sent to the same people. The third week, one day before the exhibition, the same imprint was sent again, but the sheet carried full information as to what it all meant.

The two first notices created a vast amount of comment and received a large amount of newspaper publicity.

The Lubin theater of Cincinnati, when showing "The District Attorney," got up an especially attractive mailing piece in the form of a legal size envelope on which was printed in red type, "A Warning From the District Attorney." The enclosure consisted of a herald and a red circular bearing a short synopsis of the story and the day of showing at the theater. This proved a very profitable advertising stunt.

A Portland exhibitor ran a big three-quarter page ad. in the Portland papers announcing the capture of "Crooky." This followed an advertising of the preceding days, offering a $2,000 reward, for Crooky's capture.

From Philadelphia.

Jay Emanuel, of the Exhibitor's League and the Ridge Avenue theater, sends in one of his brief one-sheet programs and dolls it all up in green ink. Green and black, a rather dark green, makes an effective combination on white paper, but it also makes two printings and the program is so neat in appearance that we do not think it needs that assistance. One color will do. He might take the trouble to date his days, but he seems to think that one little ten-point date at the top is enough. It isn't. He is now using the back page for underlined features and making the program work double.

Dateless days seems to be a common failing in Philadelphia, for the program of the Hamilton is still worse. This is a six-page vest pocket folder. The program is on one side and you have to turn to the other and look all over the minute first page to see what week the program is for. The layout is good, but this slight addition would help a lot. The two spare pages are given to the house talk. This is very well done.

Tells It All.

The Marguerite Clark theater, St. Louis, has been taken over by a new management and renamed the Congress. The announcement sent cut is more than usually full and tells about all the patron wants to know. It not only gives the hours of performance and the prices, but it tells about the program, the lighting, heating, decorations, promises a weekly program and gives a form to be filled in for the mailing list and tells of a carriage man to see to the parking of cars. You read the circular and feel that a management so exact and informative must know how to run a house properly. The circular is accompanied by an invitation card backed up by two tickets for the opening. We hope they will send along the weekly program when it is ready. If it is as good as the circular it will be interesting. One announcement of interest is that an intermission of a couple of minutes will break the run of film. Two hours without stop is rather too long, but some houses run longer.

Crude—But Read.

"How to get rid of worms," used as an outside page attractor may not be in the best of taste, but it probably will be read. The inside of the card shows the picture of a man fishing. It goes on to explain that he is fishing for live attractions for the Victoria, Rochester, N. Y. It would have been better had some other line been used. The reflex on a card like that is not in favor of the house that appeals to a good class of trade. A card announces the distribution of one thousand Chaplin balloons from the roof of the theater, each being good for an admission by "showing the balloon to the ticket taker with the Chaplin trade mark at the door." Wish the house would send a photo of that remarkable ticket taker. Never saw one quite like that. Seriously, the house appeals to the best trade and such careless English is apt to impress unfavorably the persons it is most desired to reach.

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing) of photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

BUILDING up what Hermann A. Blackman had to say recently about "charm," charm also means the absence of mechanics. Most of the stories submitted are too horribly mechanical. The workmanship shows, there is an ever-present sense of labored development and painstaking but evident effort. It is just as though the ballet dancer should show by her labored breathing and look of pain the effort her work costs her. When she darts out on the stage, light as thistledown, and seems fairly to float about, only the professionals know that the toes upon which she seems to rest so lightly are painfully swathed in packings with perhaps the toenails split to the quick. Only they know that her throat is dry and parched through her efforts to breathe through the lips spread in the fixed smile. Only those who have been through the mill can know how keen the torture is. Now and then a dancer comes who cannot hide her torment and she is voted clumsy and incompetent. She dances as well as the others, perhaps, but she shows that it is work, and she does not please.

It is precisely this way with stories. The work should be there, but every appearance of effort should be hidden. Stories come to the reader's desk that never should have been permitted outside of the workshop of the writer. They are not bad stories, perhaps, in their formation. The technical work is well done, and there is plenty of strong incident, but, as you read along, you can almost feel the effort that has been put into the script. You can see how laboriously the author has built up to the climax, how painstakingly the minor incidents have been worked out, how strenuously the author has sought for a punch. The result is a story, but a story that does not please, because its creation was not a labor of love, but a matter of business—and bad business in that no story should be sent out that does not completely mask work with charm.

In your practise work this labor is necessary, because it is the means through which you gain the technical and mechanical proficiency that enables you to do your work when you have passed the point of absolute labor. It is by means of these practice stories that you will eventually arrive at the point where you can write instead of manufacture plots. This work must be done, but it is a mistake to send out the clumsy work merely because you hope to sell. You cannot sell and you may gain a reputation that later you cannot well live down.

The constant plotting and writing of photoplays will bring you to a point of development where you can write plays with a certain freedom from conscious effort that will prevent the effort from being apparent in your work. After that you can sell. Before that you stand a small chance of making even an occasional sale, and these sales may be harmful in their effect in persuading you that you have advanced to the point where you can cease your effort.

For a comparison turn to the magazines, where the author's own effort is reflected. You will find many stories that please. You read them with genuine enjoyment and regret the approach of the climax. Again you may find a big theme mechanically developed. Even the novice can perceive the workings of the author's mind. You can see even without close study, how painstakingly he has built up his structure. You can see the care with which he has added this complication and that crisis. You can almost hear him say, "Now I'll bring in Black Tom to kidnap the girl so that Jack can come along and rescue her. I'll bet that will make them sit up." It does not make them sit up, because the moment the abduction is performed we know that it is done for no other reason then to afford the hero another opportunity to get solid with the readers through the performance of another noble action. There is no other excuse for the introduction of the incident, but having been introduced, there seems to be no good reason why it should not add to the effect. There seems to be no reason, but there is. The mechanics of plot construction are too apparent. As a study in technique it might interest, but the author has striven to replace inspiration with workmanship alone and the inspiration should be the reason for the story having been written. In magazine work this is referred to as hack stuff; the work of a man under contract to turn out a given quantity of product within certain periods. Now and then he has an inspiration, but more often he simply manufactures a story instead of writing one, and the result shows.

This same thing holds good in photoplay, though on the screen an able director can cover up some of the defects, though the best director living cannot replace the want of inspiration in a story unless he recreates the idea and himself supplies the inspiration.

If you have been pegging away and find that you can always reach a certain grade of product, do not rest content with that fact. You are now fully qualified to write good stories, but the mechanical qualifications must merely serve as a means whereby the inspiration can be transmitted to the director.

This department probably would be a lot more popular and appeal to to a larger class of readers did it not always preach the gospel of hard work, but it is through hard work, and hard work alone, that proficiency can be gained, but do not let the hard work show in your writing. Use the facility you gain from hard work to permit you to get your idea down in the best technique with the least effort, but do not parade the work but the effects of that work.

The beginner is occupied almost wholly with questions of technique and construction. He spends his time wondering whether this should be a leader or a cut-in. He wonders whether he has one scene or two. He puzzles about cutting back and continuity and all that. Consciously or otherwise, he is engrossed in technique to the exclusion of idea. But as he gains sureness in construction he progresses in idea. No longer does he have to worry over the division of scenes or their numbering. Automatically he decides as to whether he shall lead or cut in. Instinctively he knows the best line of action. Now he has only to think of the plot and develop this to the best of his ability. But here, as in technique, he must plan and practise and experiment before he can write with assurance. Until then he must feel his way, and nine times out of ten this labor will show in the development of the script, and it will not interest others than himself. To the author the work may seem good, but to all others the result is not acceptable.

In our theatrical days we noted the rise of more than one of the present-day stars. We caught them first in the burlesque shows or the small four and six-a-day houses. They worked hard, much harder than they do today, and generally to little effect. Their work was labored and ineffective in spite of their efforts, or rather because of the effort. As they gained in sureness they gained in advancement, and we have seen more than one monologue man hold his audience for half an hour where once he could not "get by" with a ten-minute turn in a museum show. In the museum days they thought they were good. Now they know they were not, but they had to get so far above that they could look down upon their former estate, and it is precisely the same with photoplay writing. You cannot know how poor you are at present, good as you "know" yourself to be, until your advancement brings you to a realization of the fact that you were a poor writer at a time you cheered yourself with the reflection that you were writing better stories than were being produced.

Try and convince yourself that this is so. Try and realize that you must pass your apprenticeship and do not demand immediate sales. Wait and work. Do not send out any scripts and you'll sell just as many as though you sent out all you write. Wait until you can write, not because you want to earn the money, but because you have made a writer of yourself and must write the ideas that crowd into your mind.

We would rather kiss a pretty girl than kiss the photograph of one. Almost anyone can take a photograph in these kodak days, but pretty girls are scarcer than their photographs. In your stories offer flesh and blood and not photography. Cut out the mechanics of reproduction, or, rather, make them subservient to creation.

An Avocation.

In spite of the fact that we have repeatedly said that at the present time photoplaywriting is an avocation and not a regular job unless one gets with a company on staff, many writers send in to announce their determination to center their efforts on photoplaywriting after a little run of luck. To back up what we have already said, read this from a man who knows:

> This is the second time I have written you and I wish to take the opportunity to thank you for the assistance and the sane advice which you gave me in reply to my first letter, about a year ago. At that time you advised me to "stick to my job," and not to let the fact of having sold five scripts in a row make me believe that I could, therefore, make a steady income in that way. Since that time the accumulation of a choice assortment of rejection slips has pretty well taken the conceit out of me. But I have most certainly learned more from the rejections than from the five sales. I can now even wonder how on earth I ever managed to "get by" with those first five. They certainly were a wobbly lot! Meanwhile, thanks to you, I have been able to eat three square meals per day—the reward of a rather prosaic sort of job—instead of attempting to dine on Hope, sprinkled with white, green and yellow slips of paper. Needless to say, I am very grateful to you for puncturing my balloon as you did.

It's fine to be able to chuck the old job and go down to the office about eleven o'clock some morning and give the other fellows the laugh, but the mirth all goes out of things a little later when the bubble bursts. Think it over twice, and if that does not suffice, think some more.

The Lubin Market.

Daniel Ellis, of the Lubin Company, writes that Lubin is not in the market for any one-reel dramas whatever. They can use one-reel comedies and three-reel dramas—which is about all they do need at present. Please make note and save trouble.

Back In.

T. E. Letendre, who wrote the first book on photoplay technique and who founded The Photoplay Author, is back with the films after an absence of several years. He has joined the press department of the Universal.

"Better Than —."

Only one day last week did we fail to hear from some writer who knew that his or her stories were better than those on the screen. But listen. Don't judge the story on the screen. In some cities you must make allowance for the excisions of stupid censors. Then, too, you must make allowance for other clips. Perhaps an operator rips the sprocket holes out of one side of a piece of film. He simply cuts out the damaged part. You see only what is left. You cannot judge of the story that was bought from what you see on the screen. Down our way is a house running film 60 to 90 days old. The other day we caught a Universal story. The hero telephoned his father-in-law-to-be that if he could get a carload more of explosives, he would have a railroad spur done in contract time. The car was sent and it was set afire by the villians. Evidently after that something happened to the film, for the next we got was a leader that said the line was completed, and then one scene showing the inspection train rolling over the new construcion. The real story had been completely eliminated through some damage to the film long after it had left the factory. Surely the picture on the screen is not the standard by which to judge, even on first run stuff.

Quick Finishes.

Recently we saw a story in which the author waited, after the story was all done, to perform an operation that restored the eyesight of one of the leads. Blindness had been introduced into the play to add to its dramatic value, but it was felt that the story would be better were the blindness cured, so after the story was all over the surgeons came and fixed the damaged hero up.

It is fatal to delay the story long after the climax. The story that ends with the climax is best. Now and then a reasonable amount of falling action is permissible, but this should be the resolution of important points and not the bare clean-up of the muss made in an endeavor to heighten the interest. If Jim, the brave fireman, breaks an arm while rescuing the heiress, let him win the lady and her millions, but do not tag on a couple of scenes to show that his arm healed. He's got the girl, and that is all we care about. Our interest ceases before the story stops.

An Unusual Experience.

A western woman writes very interestingly of her experiences in selling as well as her experience with brokers. She says:

> Four years ago I took a scenario written in pencil on a scratch pad and without even a synopsis to Lannier Bartlett of the Selig. He read half of it, explained that I should have numbered the scenes and requested that I leave the play. A few days later I got it back with a letter explaining the reason. The plot was real—too real to take with the average audience. I was discouraged but about two years ago I decided to try again. I went to a man who advertised to sell scripts as well as teach the proper form. In return for my money I received a big heap of paper in which I found nothing a five year old child would not know. A sample complete play was enclosed which contained fifteen scenes. After waiting weeks for a scenario, which he had sent to a studio where he claimed he had a pull, I went to the studio, found the scenario editor was away and also learned that a play should have about fifty scenes and that the man who had advertised was not known at the studio. I then took up the scenario Mr. Bartlett had returned to me, used some imagination, added four more reels to it and sold it along with several other plays of two, three and four reel length, all at one sale to one company, which goes to show that the amateur writer has a chance. Since then I have devoted my time to shorter plays and have given my thoughts to imagination, development of plot, continuity, together with care in writing the synopsis. My last sale brought me thirty-five dollars for a one reel play I had spent five hours in the writing. I had spent two weeks plotting in my mind but could not find the right solution until I read your explanation of the difference between heart interest and love story.
> A good production of a play I have written is my biggest encouragement; the money is a substantial proof of success, but success cannot be obtained by the writer, or rather "would be" writer, who has stronger imagination concerning the check than the plot he or she should be developing. While in Los Angeles a woman about fifty years old (I am twenty-four) called on me. She stated that she was going to write motion picture plays to help out a sister in financial difficulties. She was going to give her sister half of all her sales and requested that I help her with her spelling and send in her scripts with mine. She seldom attended a picture show but her inspiration (?) had come from the fact that a company had taken a scene in her church. I told her I had heard that one sale in six months was good for a beginner, that I had no pull with scenario editors, but if she or any amateur sent in a play worth while it would sell. I gave her several back numbers of The Moving Picture World referring her to your articles. She thought an "idea" was all that was necessary and was in a daze when she left. I pitied the woman but felt I had saved some hard working editor a pathetic letter of the sister's financial condition. Another type of writer I have met is the kind that expects to furnish the idea, have you write the continuity and submit the play with both your name and theirs. I tried it once but my friend couldn't wait for the check and wrote in a very few days to hurry up the editor (so he couldn't steal it) and, of course, any chance the script might have had was gone. My friend then decided that photoplay writing was too slow and I decided I had learned a lesson.

This correspondent appears to have had unusual luck in her lump sale, but another writer, this time from Connecticut, made her first sale of two scripts sent in the same envelope to one of the most difficult companies to land—but she did it after two years of hard work and discouragement. It only goes to show that as Mrs. Parsons says in her book, there is a market for scripts if you can write them.

The class of persons who want to give you ideas is almost as large as the number of persons who think they are writers. We get about every three months a lead pencil request to collaborate with a Jersey genius who has a twenty-four part story. All we have to do is to whip the stuff into shape, type it, sell it and give him half the money. It is too easy.

Padding.

Asking about another point, an inquirer remarked that he has a certain swing of scenes. He is afraid his story is too long and in such a case he can drop about half of these scenes and substitute a five-foot leader. He wants to know if this should be done. Most assuredly. Those extra scenes never should have been written. It is a very poor drama that will not run at least a full reel, and padding will not help that sort of drama in the least. Now and then it is considered allowable to open with a few atmosphere scenes, but to deliberately pad is the worst possible practice. Tell your story compactly. Avoid the unnecessary. You'll get more footage for the essential scenes. The director will do the padding if he wants to.

Book Rights.

Some readers of this department show a disposition to go in for book rights and are asking all sorts of questions that show their absolute lack of any knowledge of this phase of the business.

It is six months too late to go in for this end of the work, for adaptations are on the wane and there never was even a look in for other than real literary agents who could offer fifty or a hundred titles for a choice. Keep away from this end unless your intimate knowledge of books and authors and your personal acquaintance with large publishers enables you to swing a good market.

Scenes.

A scene is all of the action that takes place in one spot at one time. That definition is so simple that it seems absurd to get all sorts of inquiries as to just what a scene is, and yet a lot of correspondents seem to be in all sorts of trouble. For instance, one man writes that he has action happening in the same set but broken by a time leader. He cannot go to some other scene, so he must hold the players in the set, though one must be differently dressed. He wants to know if that is two scenes or one, and if the second section should be numbered or "back to scene."

The idea of the scene number is to give each piece of negative an identity in the joining and cutting rooms. Here are two definite phases of action, participated in by the same persons in the same setting, but since one of the characters has had to change costume, it stands to reason that the action is not continuous, and if the action is not continuous it is not one scene, but two. Even without a change costume, the fact that the action is not continuous makes it two scenes and each scene must have a number. They will probably be taken on the same strip of film and then cut apart, but this has nothing to do with the matter. The point is that the action stops. Therefore the scene stops.

Another author wants to know if the two parts of a scene cut into by a leader should not be two numbers. It is not two scenes because the action is continuous. The cut in leader is not a break. It is a part of the action; something said by someone in the scene, therefore it is a part of the action and not a break to that action and but one scene number is used.

There need be no hesitation as to scenes if only the author stops to consider whether or not the action is continuous.

Your Pets.

The other day a man wanted to know in how many reels he should write a certain story. He thought that there was no end to the possibilities of the plot. And he didn't know that the theme was bad and hardly worth half a reel. And mind you, he was not foolish. He turned the idea out between two other perfectly good ideas and thought this by far the best of the three. It was simply that it appealed with unusual force to himself. He could see a wonderful five-reel comedy in the idea where the dispassionate appraisal put it into the half reel class.

Every writer of any real experience knows that now and then he is bound to hit one of those ideas that are utterly worthless and that they presently come to know to be utterly worthless, but which, in the first blush of enthusiasm seems to be masterpieces. Write them—and forget them. It is the only way.

Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 111.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What do you understand by "undercut" sprocket teeth? By hooked teeth? What do you understand by the inertia of the intermittent movement? By momentum? What effect have these two on projector construction? What are the effects of undercut and hooked intermittent sprocket teeth?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 105.

The Roll of Honor on question 105 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Forth Worth, Texas; John Solar, Watertown, New York; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York, and M. Nosti, Tampa, Florida.

Reply to Question No. 105.

By John Solar, Watertown, N. Y.

The Question:

What are the supposed advantages of the meniscus-bi-convex condenser system as against the plano-convex? Can you use a meniscus lens in front with a plano or bi-convex next the arc? What is the E. F. of a lens? What is its B. F.? What effect on the E. F. of a condenser has altering the distance between its factors?

The Answer:

The meniscus-bi-convex combination when properly matched will produce less spherical aberration, collect more light from the arc and there would be less reflected light than with a plano-convex system. The principal advantage in the use of the meniscus-bi-convex is, however, in cases where the operator is unable to keep other conditions right and keep his arc near enough to the lens.

The meniscus lens could not be used at the front. With a 6½ plano next the arc and a 6½ meniscus in front with the arc 3 inches of the condenser the rays would be diverging, and consequently would not focus.

The E. F. of a lens is the distance from its optical center to a point where parallel rays will focus an object. The B. F. I consider to be the focal length of the back combination of a lens, though Brother Richardson considers it to be the back surface of the lens to the film aperture. If he is right then the lens would have no fixed B. F., as the distance is variable with the distance between the condenser and aperture; also with the distance between the arc and condenser. (Yes, and also most largely with the distance from screen to lens.—Ed.) In order to explain the effect of changing the distance between the condensing lenses I would have to prepare several drawings. With light projected from a point near the center, the factors of any condenser combination may be separated from ⅛ of an inch to 6 inches and not change the point at which the arc is focused. As we move the point from which the light is projected toward the border the distance between the face of the condenser and the point at which the arc will focus will gradually increase with a decrease in separation of the condensers. As used in practice it is impossible to have a fixed E. F. of the condenser combination. With a 6½ and a 7½ combination, the arc about 3 inches from the back surface of the condenser, light projected from a point ¼ inch from the center of the condenser would focus about 33½ inches from its face, whereas if projected from a point ⅞ inch from the center it would focus at 27½ inches, and if projected from a point 1½ inches it would focus at 18 inches. If at 1¾ inches it would focus at 14½ inches from the face of the condenser. In this case we have a range of 19 inches in which light from some point of the condenser will focus the arc. So far as I can see the B. F. of this combination is of no value or use. The essential point is the E. F., which will give the best light at the spot, in this case 14½ inches from the front of the condenser to the aperture.

[I cannot agree with Brother Solar in the last part of his reply, but I have published it just as written.

As to the B. F. of the objective, why in my judgment it is a variable quantity as applied to combination lenses. A given lens will focus a picture perfectly with a screen placed 20 feet, 50 feet or 150 feet away, but the B. F. will be very different in each case. It is customary, however, to consider the B. F. of the lens as being the distance at which it will focus parallel rays of light, and viewed in this light, of course, Friend Solar is right.

I also don't agree with Solar that it is impossible to use a meniscus in front. It is not impossible, but is nevertheless impractical. The result would not be at all satisfactory. One of the main effects of the separation of condenser lenses Brother Solar has entirely overlooked, viz., loss of light. The altering of the distance between the condensers alters the E. F. of the combination. I do not think there is any doubt about that particular proposition.—Ed.]

Trouble for Chicago "Schools."

I am informed that City Prosecutor Harry Miller has begun the prosecution of the officers of "schools" which prepare applicants to pass the city examination for motion picture operators. Mr. Miller is quoted as saying:

"Evidence in hand shows perjury to have been employed in getting licenses for the 'students,' and that applicants have been furnished by the schools with letters purporting to show experience in other towns, these letters being false."

I do not know as to the truth of all this, but sincerely hope that the prosecution is a fact. This department and its editor believe firmly and absolutely in the education of the operator and the manager in both the technical and practical end of projection. He believes that the department and the Handbook have done as much, or perhaps more than any other one thing to bring the motion picture industry to its present high plane, and secure its perpetuation, this statement being based on the fact that it is only through excellence in projection that the splendid work of the producer can be appreciated by the public, and it is only through the education of the operator and manager that excellence in projection can be attained.

This department and its editor is, however, absolutely opposed to fake instruction—cramming for examination. We believe there are more than enough operators right now, and would welcome a law, such as Massachusetts has, which compels the applicant for a license to have passed an apprenticeship in a theater operating room. These schools for the most part do not give any genuine instruction in practical projection. It is true that some of them, in fact, most of them use my Handbook in preparing their "students" for examination. This is to be regretted, still there is no way of preventing it. If the union would expend the same energy expended in fighting the schools, and the promulgation of knowledge, in securing the passage of laws compelling one or two years' apprenticeship, with the privilege of applying for a second class license at the end of six months or a year, and a first class license at the completion of the apprenticeship term, it would, in my judgment, accomplish far more and greater good.

Organized labor is very strong in Chicago. The Chicago union, if it would expend its energy in the right direction and work consistently to that end, could, I believe, secure the passage of a law compelling a suitable apprenticeship, modeled perhaps after the Massachusetts section of the law dealing with that subject.

The Chicago union has been organized something like seven years, but unfortunately, due largely to poor leadership, has expended about four-fifths of its energy along the lines of greatest resistance. The editor of this department has many friends in the Chicago local; also there are many who are not friends, but he would ask friends and enemies alike to sit down for a moment and think over the record of the past seven years—or is it eight since the organization of the local?

Are you proud of the record? Completely reorganized twice, and even the number of the union changed once. Have you ever secured one single thing except by "main strength and awkwardness"? Has that hugely valuable asset "diplomacy" entered into your negotiations with the managers one single time at any stage of the game? Have you not, time after time, antagonized the Chicago managers without any reason on earth except just sheer, pure, unadulterated knock-'em-down-and-drag-'em-outedness?

Jack Miller, who was your business agent for a long time, and I presume is yet (at least I do not remember having heard of his removal), was honest. He meant all right, but Jack Miller only knew one thing, and could only see one thing and that was force. He ought to have made a good prize fighter, but no local under his leadership would ever in this world secure anything except through main strength, and its boon companion, awkwardness. Any fool can be honest, but it requires an able man to be a really successful leader of labor, or of anything else. He must, first of all, be a diplomat—to some extent at least.

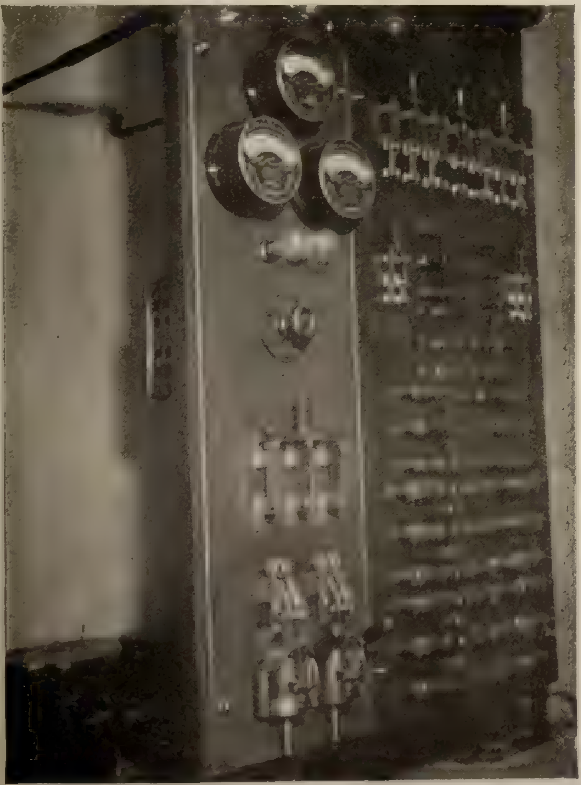
Very likely the Chicago local does not want, and won't value my advice, but nevertheless here it is: "Get busy and secure the enactment of a really effective apprenticeship law, and then you won't need to worry about the schools or the spread of knowledge."

Operator Handles 2,200 Volts.

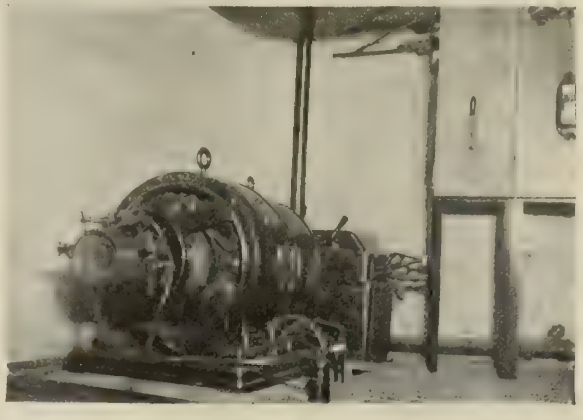
A. J. Mason, Imperial Theater, St. Johns, N. B., contributes the following description of his plant. I wonder what some of our operators who assume a know-it-all air, and don't feel at all called upon to study, would do with this kind of a proposition—probably get killed, if they dared tackle it at all.

In looking over that single and polyphase article by C. A. Dann, Toronto, I think he has got the wrong idea of the real action of polyphase current. In considering a three-phase current we must, in order to get the right idea, look at it just as though it were produced by three generators. Now a three-phase motor, taking current from a three-phase circuit, would take, for instance, 3 amperes per phase, total 9 amperes, although it could not be figured that way, because in fusing for 3 amperes per phase you would not install over a 5-ampere fuse in each leg to give the proper protection; the cycle would be the same of course. Now in considering three-phase systems: Where the same number of amperes from each phase is being used, the system is "balanced," but where a system is unbalanced the current would vary in amperes per phase, according to the load. For example: Systems supplying current to several separate, distinct, and unrelated circuits as, for instance, a group of lamps, transformers, or single-phase motors. Now consider a single-phase motor taking current from a three-phase circuit, the motor being of the same power as the three-ampere-per-phase, three phase motor. The single-phase motor would not require the combined number of amperes (nine) to operate it, but 1.73 times the combined (nine amperes) (1.73 being the square root of three). In figures it would then take 1.73 × 3 = 5.2 amperes to operate the single-phase motor.

Of course, while I would prefer a three-phase to a single-phase motor, not because the single-phase motor has any more wearing parts, or because the single-phase motor has to have a commutator and clutch to bring it to speed (because the wear and tear on the single-phase motor would, in my estimation, not be any more than on the three-phase motor), but in case you should have one phase go bad, it would be possible to run the motor on single-phase for at least a few hours, providing your fuses were heavy enough to carry the current the single-phase motor would pull; also that the motor was already up to speed. If not, and the machine is a very large one, you could not very well start it. But if the machine was small (three or four K. W.) you could bring it up to speed by cutting in a small resistance in multiple, thus causing sufficient lag in current to give it a second impulse, and there is a chance to get by with a three-phase on single-phase current for a makeshift.



Another thing to be taken into consideration: Suppose you wanted to use a three-phase motor on single-phase, cutting in resistance to bring it up to speed: the current taken by the motor from the single-phase circuit would be in excess of the combined amperes the motor would take from a three-phase circuit, the reason being that the field would not have the copper windings to produce the necessary flux to pull the motor without taking extra amperes from the line, and under this condition, if the motor is doing more work than it should do, being itself overloaded, it would not take many days to burn out the winding. The cost of a three-phase motor would be less than the cost of a single-phase motor, although the single-phase motor would give just as good satisfaction as the three-phase article. I might say in reading a three-phase circuit, it is only necessary to take a reading from one phase, providing the system is balanced.



Several nights ago, while the show was in progress, out went the house lights. My plant consists of a direct connected set, the motor being a 50-H. P., 2,200-volt, three-wire, three-phase, induction, pulling a 35 K. W., three-wire D. C. interpole compound-wound generator, supplying current for the whole house. First the lights went dim, but came up immediately for a second or two, and then away she went altogether, and also away went Yours Truly down to the basement. The boys say I hit the steps about twice going down. Well, maybe, but there was ample reason to move quickly. We have a separate line coming in to the switchboard, so that all I had to do was to throw over from the generator to the power company's mains (three-wire, 110-220-volt single-phase circuit), and we finished the show with A. C. "and some difference in the picture." After the performance was over I went looking for trouble, but first let me tell you the reason for my haste to get to the generator room. As you doubtless know, a machine like ours could not be started with the full voltage without injuring it or the insulation, which would be a serious matter with such a high voltage, therefore, starters, sometimes called auto-transformers, or compensators, are always used. These starters cut the voltage down to any desired percentage, merely by changing the taps on the coils. Mine gives 65 per cent. for starting. As a rule they are equipped with a no voltage release to protect the motor in case the current goes off, and comes on again when the motor is stopped. I had to take mine off because the power company have two sets of bus-bars, and throw over several times a day. Then, too, as it is now, if the power company cut off the supply for a short time the motor will slow down very quickly with a load on, the result is, I try to get down as soon as possible, so as to cut off the starter from full volt control. And now for the trouble: The motor feeds are protected by a 15-ampere fuse for each leg, the motor taking 12 amperes per phase. I took out two of the fuse plugs and found the neutral and one outside gone, the other fuse being good. After placing fuses I tried to start the motor, but while the current would sing, it would not move the armature. I made sure the fuses were all O. K. and came to the conclusion the motor was only getting one phase. I tested out the motor and found it O. K., and then looked for a broken connection in the transformer, but everything was O. K. I was satisfied it was not in my outfit. The next morning I telephoned the power company to send a man to look at their fuses on the pole. He found that the lug connecting the copper cap of one of the fuses had worked loose and burned off (you can guess how long a loose terminal would last on 2,200 volts). When that fuse blew my lights dimmed a little, and then almost immediately came bright, and then went out, which proves that, for that instant, until the fuses in the generator room blew, the motor started to work on the single-phase, but the fuses, being only 15 amperes capacity, did not last very long.

Enclosed you will find two photos, one of the generator set and the other of the switchboard, with the double-throw switches, which, as you will see, are on the generator side of the board, except the second one down, which is always left on the A. C. side, and which supplies the exits, so that if the generater goes to the bad the exits remain lighted. There is another double-throw switch in the box office, so that in case one side of the A. C. goes, the exits can be switched over on the generator. The two choke coils at the back of the board are the equalizers I spoke of in my article June 20, 1914, which are connected to the collector rings on the generator. They > also constitute the neutral for the house distribution. The two circuit breakers are connected to the commutator brushes. You will notice that with a three-wire system of this kind there are two ammeters, one for each outside leg, and the voltmeter on the top. Below are the ground lamps and field rheostat, with the regulating knob on the front below the ground lamps. In the other photo you will notice the four largest pole pieces with the shunt windings next the frame, and the series winding next the armature. There are also four interpoles between the main poles. These poles are in series with the two outsides (as per my diagram, June, 1914), thus keeping the flux in commutating position, irrespective of the load or speed, without moving the commutator brushes, these being fixed in the commutating point at the factory, and clamped in that position. You also see the A. C. rings, which are connected to the choke coils back of the switchboard; also you see the starter, which is on the full voltage point, as the machine was running when I took these snaps; also note the 2,200-volt switch on the high tension board, which makes and breaks in oil; also the three-phase wattmeter, and two of the 15-ampere, 2,200-volt fuse plugs on the top above the meter. If you look closely at the ammeters you will notice the one nearest to you indicating almost double the amperes registered by the other one; one of the machine arcs is on the one nearest you. Had I thought, I would have taken them more clearly, however, I have had the system overbalanced one hundred per cent. and no sparking at all. I took one photo of the operating room, but it turned out poor. However, I think these pictures will make my diagram and explanation in June 20, 1914, issue more clear.

The letter is very long, but I have given it in full because it sets forth some things which will be of interest to operators who are in charge of three-phase motors; also details of an operating room plant receiving 2,200 volts, which, I think, will prove interesting. Seems to me that it would be entirely practical and safer to run some sort of wire control, so that in case of current failure you could cut off the motor without racing clear down stairs. With 2,200 volts you might be too late to prevent damage, no matter how fast you moved, should the current come on again. Certainly a three-phase motor will run on one phase for a time, but will it pull its normal load? Frankly, I don't know, but I doubt it—that is, if it is working at anything like its capacity.

I Don't Know.

W. A. Carpenter, Abilene, Texas, says:

> Pardon my nerve for butting in. This is my first offense in about two years. Will you kindly answer the following in your department? (a) What is longitudinal spherical aberration in a lens? (b) Give definition of (1) principal axis; (2) secondary axis, and their relation to each other? If I understand correctly all different color waves have different focal lengths, which is overcome by combining flint and crown glass. What methods are employed to accomplish this? In closing, I wish to thank you for your wonderful assistance through the department.

Brother Carpenter, it does not require any "nerve" whatever to ask questions of this department, but I seriously object to you calling it "my" department. It is not. It is "our" department. Please don't forget that. I am simply its editor, put here to conduct the department, read the mail and decide which letters are best worthy of receiving space, or, in other words, which letters it will serve the best purpose, everything considered, to publish, and to answer your questions as best I may.

(a) I don't know. A lens may have such a thing as longitudinal aberration, but if so I think it has no direct bearing on projection. Axial spherical aberration is that quality of a lens which tends to focus rays near the outer diameter of a lens closer to the lens than rays passing through nearer its center. (b) First: The principal axis of a lens is a line passing directly through the center of the lens perpendicular to its surface at that point, meaning by this that it would be at right angles to a line drawn on the plane of the surface at that point; second: the secondary axis is a little more difficult to explain without a drawing, and I have not time to make a drawing now. Every light ray which passes through the optic center of a lens (the optic center of a lens is a point at its principal axis, and at a distance from its two surfaces depending upon the focal length of the lens, and the refractive index of the glass) forms an axis. That light ray which passes through the optic center of the lens perpendicular (at right angles) thereto is the "principal axis," and all rays passing through the optic center from some other point forms a "secondary axis." For instance: suppose you hold a silver half dollar up in front of the lens so that the center of the coin would be on the principal axis of the lens, then the ray refracted from the center of the half dollar would pass through the optic center of the lens perpendicular to, or at right angles to it, and therefore would be the "principal axis." Now if you moved the coin up, down or to either side, say one-half inch, then you would still get an image on the other side of the lens, but the image would be away from, and on the opposite of the principal axis the same distance that the half dollar is away from it, and the light ray from the center of the half dollar passing through the optic center of the lens would be a "secondary axis." I think that is about as clear an explanation as I can give you. If you will write again in a couple of months when the book is finished, I will be glad to make drawings illustrating the matter, but just now it is out of the question. Yes, different colors have different length of waves, and this fact creates what is known as "chromatic aberration," or the splitting up of the light into its component colors. Chromatic aberration is corrected by the use of two different kinds of glass, known as "crown" and "flint" glass, each having a different index of refraction. These lenses are given certain, carefully calculated curves, both negative and positive. I do not remember at the moment whether the negative and positive end of it has to do entirely with the correction of spherical aberration, or whether it also has an effect on chromatic.

As to thanking me for the assistance the department has been to you, why, my brother, that is exactly what I am here for, and, incidentally, that is what the Chalmers Publishing Company is paying me for. But aside from the fact that it is a very real pleasure to know that through my humble efforts others receive aid. Come again when the spirit moves.

Easy to Answer.

Pocatello, Idaho, sends in several film faults cut from "The Secret Orchard," a Lasky production, and asks whether or not the fault lies in the printing machine. Also he says:

> Why is that, when an operator has a good light and a beautiful, clear picture the dear public will say: "What a dandy picture!" and when he has a bad reel they say: "What a rotten operator!"

Answering your last question first, Pocatello (incidentally I might say that my father ran the Oregon short line track laying engine into Pocatello and through in 1883, and I myself fired an engine out of there when there was nothing in Pocatello but a box car depot, a water tank and a coal shed, with a round-house in process of building), when the operator has a beautiful picture the audience figures that it is getting what it paid the money to get, and does not feel called upon to wax particularly enthusiastic. It is pleased. But, after all, I think, you will agree that the audience has a perfect right to expect a good picture; in other words, to expect to receive that which it pays for. On the other hand when it pays to see a good picture, and for any reason does not see it, the fault is very likely to be laid to the operator. The audience does not know and cannot be expected to know that it is not always the operator's fault. It simply knows that the picture it has paid to see put on the screen right, is not being put on right, and the operator is the convenient goat. It is a good deal like you and I when we get angry with the street car conductor over a transfer, or because the car is delayed, the only difference being that the audience don't know it is not the operator's fault, and we probably do know it is not the conductor's fault. But the conductor is, nevertheless, the only man representing the company whom we can readily get at, therefore we ease our feelings by explaining to him, with much wealth of detail, and more or less lurid language, our opinion of railroads in general, and of his company in particular.

As to the film fault, yes, the trouble seems to have been in the printing machine. I have sent the film to the general manager of the Paramount Pictures Corporation with suggestion that the guilty party be looked up and properly dealt with.

Continuous Show With One Machine.

Clarence J. Koetting, Ste. Genevieve, Missouri, asks:

> Is there any way of running a continuous show with one projector, or is there some mechanism on the market by means of which a no-stop show can be run on one machine? Am using a 2,000 foot reel on a Powers' SixA machine, but find a continuous show would help out a great deal.

There is not. The American Standard Motion Picture Machine Company puts out a magazine with their machine, or at least did put one out, which carries 3,000 feet of film. This, however, would only make a three-reel continuous show. I have never, myself, believed in the use of such large reels. The only thing you can do is to either put in a second projector, or go back to the old threadbare stunt of using a song, illustrated or otherwise, at change time. If you did the latter it would not take long to eat up the price of the second projector in singer's salary, therefore the second machine plan is the best.

First Annual Banquet and Ball.

Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Florida, says:

> Not long ago, if you will remember, I wrote you saying that the Kinodrome theater of this city was employing non-union men. However, they have given up the ghost and sold out to the Montgomery Amusement Company. The Kinodrome is now employing two union men, which is another victory for 321. We are at present preparing for our first annual banquet and ball, and believe me, Old Top, we will not forget the "Father of perfect Projection," and the first invitation will go to you.

The spirit in which you write is appreciated Brother Nosti, but I am afraid there are too many miles of sandy road between here and Tampa for me to accept. Of course, a mere matter of a mere thousand miles or so would not matter so much to Mr. Go D—but the sand—the sand, my boy! Hope, however, you have a rip-roaring time, and that the ball is a success from any and every point of view.

Hard Proposition.

W. D. Coburn, Tillamook, Oregon, orders the two question booklets and says:

> Have your Handbook and would not be without it. Could you advise me as to good books on lenses?

No, Brother Coburn, I could not. There are plenty of "good books on lenses," but the trouble is that in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred those books are written in such technical language that they would be of very little value to you. I believe the light ray articles now appearing in the department will come nearer to supplying you with what you want than anything else.

Another Reason Why the Operator's Work Is Important.

During the past five years the editor of this department has, upon many occasions, called attention of managers, producers, and others to the importance of the work of the operator. There is now rapidly looming into prominence still another reason why the work of the operator is of extreme importance.

There have, in the past, been literally hundreds of "Broadway successes" which have played to capacity along that classic thoroughfare for weeks, months and even for a whole year—yes, and in a few isolated cases much more than a year. "Madame X," for instance, for fully a year had capacity audiences in tears, and "Seven Days" had them in screams of laughter twice every day. Now out in one of the smaller cities, in a beautiful opera house with a complete, well appointed good sized stage, the writer witnessed a performance of "Madame X." In New York it was so gripping that to sit through the performance was an experience long to be remembered. Strong men sat with tears streaming down their cheeks, which had been strangers to that sort of thing for lo these many years. Out in the small city, although the play was itself precisely the same, and the appointments of the stage and the beauty of the opera house superior to that of the Broadway theater in which it was shown in New York, the play was just "good." There was nothing extraordinary about it. It moved few, if any, to tears, and I heard one man remark in a tone of contempt, as we passed out: "Huh! So that is what New York's been raving over!" Why was this, do you ask? The answer is easy. In New York the production was put on by actors who were real artists, but the road company which played it out in the small city was composed of actors to whom one could, by no stretch of the imagination, apply the term artist. They were just "actors," and there is a gulf as deep as the Grand Canyon and as wide as the Pacific ocean between the "actor" and the "artist actor."

And now here is where the operator comes in. The original performance from which the negative of the silent drama may be made may be by some of the best talent in the world, and when it is sent out on the road the talent which produces it there is precisely the same as that which Broadway "raved over." There is no change in any single item of the play. Centerville, Iowa, sees the same "Caberia" which was shown for months at 42d Street and Broadway, and provided the operator be high class and able to bring out the action of the film the same as it was brought out in New York City, Centerville will see "Caberia" precisely as it was shown here. But, on the other hand, if the operator in Centerville be either incompetent or of mediocre ability, then the "Caberia" shown in Centerville may be a very different "Caberia" from that shown in New York, notwithstanding the fact that the play itself is precisely the same.

The answer may be made that, even supposing the operator at Centerville be equally as proficient as the operator in New York City, still he may not have the equipment, or may not be allowed to use sufficient current, or may be compelled to overspeed. Quite true. But those very circumstances would make the proficient man even more valuable, because he would be able to utilize to the very best advantage such current as he was allowed to use, and make the most possible out of inferior equipment. The incompetent operator would probably put "Caberia" on as a shadowy, jumping travesty on projection. The competent operator, even though hampered by lack of sufficient current, would have a clear screen, though possibly a comparatively dim one, and would have his machine adjusted and his revolving shutter adjusted to the point of highest efficiency possible under the conditions.

Now that big plays and heavy features are becoming more and more common, viewed from this standpoint the work of the operator becomes of increasing importance, and will be of still greater importance as the years go by. The really high class, thoroughly competent operator, who understands the technical end of his profession, and has the necessary energy to apply the knowledge in his possession, can take an old style, somewhat worn projector, and comparatively low amperage, and get quite creditable results on the screen. On the other hand, if the incompetent operator be given the best equipment in the world, and as much current as he wishes to use, he cannot put on and maintain really high class projection.

The operator has, in the past, taken very little pains to convince the big producers and the theater managers of the importance of his work. The statement that this department is directly responsible for four-fifths of the standing the moving picture operator enjoys today cannot be successfully contradicted; in fact I believe most of the really good men will freely admit that to be the fact. Can you name any other thing which has in any considerable degree operated to impress upon managers and producers the importance of the work of the operator? If you can I would like to have you do so. If the operators would back up the work this department has been trying to do in this direction he would be the gainer. Those correspondents who have, from time to time, sent in articles dealing with the higher points involved in the profession have, perhaps without intending it that way, done the very thing which is calculated to raise the operator in the opinion of the big people—the producers, exchange men, and big managers. Don't worry, gentlemen, they all read the department, and prior to the war (I do not know if it is being done now) the board which corresponds in Paris to our Board of Moving Picture Operators' Examiners had the entire projection department translated into French every week. I have myself been astonished to find, in talking to some of the really big men connected with the industry, that they read the department at least with a considerable degree of regularity.

I want to see the time come when the moving picture operator will be accorded that respect and standing which is his due, and to that end I again ask the co-operation of all operators.

To show you that the operator is beginning to receive real consideration, I will tell you something that happened today. There is now being formed a Board of Trade which is being actively pushed and supported by some of the largest film producers in the country. A preliminary meeting had been held and the organization formed. Today, September 16th, there was to be a meeting to elect a board of ten directors, two from the producers, two from exchanges and six others representing various interests, among them "miscellaneous." The editor of this department was asked to join the organization as representing the projection interest, this being absolutely the first time that interest has received any consideration of this kind from the big interests. He accepted, and at the meeting today was nominated as member of the board of directors, the person making the nomination making it very plain that it was intended that he should represent the moving picture operator on the board.

Now I did not want the office, because it would take up time which I could not very well spare, but I did not decline for the simple reason that I wanted to see how many in that august assembly would vote for the operator. There were eight nominees, and, much to my surprise, the operator end of things came within three votes of election, all of which, I believe, shows that the projection end of things is really begining to receive very serious consideration by the big interests.

Alternating Current.

E. H. Hill, Aledo, Illinois, is puzzled with the following:

> Our lighting system was recently changed from D. C. to A. C., and I am having trouble with my light. Before the change I had a good picture, but now cannot get a clear spot at the aperture; also there is a loud humming noise at the arc, and I break condensers as fast as I can put them in. Use a 6½ inch lens next the arc, with a 7½ inch in front. Have a Fort Wayne compensarc (new) and project a 12-foot 4-inch picture at 75 feet. The picture is not as bright as it was before the change. I use 40 amperes—or that is where I have the compensarc control lever set.

To one who has always used D. C. the hum of the alternating current is very annoying. It is possible, however, that you have your compensarc set close to sheet metal of some kind. If you have, that will aggravate the trouble. If your operating room is iron lined the compensarc should not set closer than 18 inches to the iron. If it does, vibration will be set up in the metal which will cause a loud humming sound, but in any event alternating current arc is noisy compared to D. C. For a 12-foot picture you ought to use 60 amperes. The ⅝ inch carbons are all right, and they should be set as per Fig. 101, page 211 of the Handbook, or, if you prefer it, as per Fig. 99, page 210, though I prefer the Fig. 101 set to anything else. As to condenser breakage, I would suggest that you order an Elbert or Preddy condenser holder. You should not break lenses with 40 amperes A. C. What is the distance from the crater to the lens? The A. C. spot will not look anything like the D. C. spot, but as long as you get a clear screen you are all right. Watch the light ray dope and I think when it is finished you will be able to line things up as they ought to be, so far as lenses are concerned.

Absolutely No.

Hannibal, Missouri, says:

> Not long ago the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, casting about for new worlds to conquer, discovered three stray operators roaming around. They promptly decided to rope them in, and succeeded with two, but the third, your Humble Servant, refused to be annexed, claiming thet the I. B. E. W. has no authority over operators. They claim that a card in the I. B. E. W. will be recognized by the I. A. T. S. E., and that I can work anywhere with it, and if I don't join they will put our house on the unfair list. What I want to know is: have they the authority to demand ten dollars of my money for initiation fee; and thirteen dollars per year dues? Their meetings are always out before we operators are released from duty. Do you think it fair to us that they force us into their local, and then conduct our affairs, without our presence, to suit themselves?

Most emphatically I do not. Moreover, if the I. B. E. W. of Hannibal, Mo., says that the I. B. E. W. card will be recognized by the I. A. T. S. E., and you will be allowed to operate a moving picture within I. A. jurisdiction on the strength of their card, the I. B. E. W. of Hannibal, Mo., is not only taking liberties with the truth, but is deliberately throwing the truth out of a tenth story window, having first beat it into unrecognizable pulp with a base ball bat or some other convenient weapon. The I. A. T. S. E. does not, never has and probably never will, recognize an I. B. E. W. card as covering the work of a moving picture machine operator. To hold you up for ten dollars initiation by making false statements is a pretty raw piece of business, particularly when backed by threats of injury in case of non compliance with their demand. It savors of obtaining money by false pretense, provided, of course, the statements were made as you have set them forth.

I am referring this matter to International President Shay. I don't know what can de done to protect you, but if you can get a written statement from the I. B. E. W. that the I. A. T. S. E. will recognize your card and allow you to work in their jurisdiction as a moving picture operator, get it, and send it to me.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS in cinematography addressed to this department will receive carbon copy of the department's reply by mail when four cents in stamps are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in this department, $1.00.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is a rule of this department that no apparatus will be recommended editorially until the value of such appliances has been demonstrated to its editor.

Prices of Raw Stock.

IN SPITE of the increasing prices of practically every substance used in the manufacture of raw stock as well as all photographic products, the prices have remained the same as before the war.

Great Britain has lately ordered the restriction of the exportation of film stock and many manufacturers who were using foreign stock will now have to revert to domestic manufactured film. Since this closes the available film supply of the entire world down to the only firm manufacturing film on a commercial scale in this country, it makes the recent decision of the U. S. Court look like a joke as far as motion picture film is concerned.

Prices of all chemicals used in the manufacture of celluloid have gone soaring on account of the demand for the same chemicals in the production of high explosives for the Allied Armies, and photo-gelatine used in emulsion making was, at the last quotation, nearly twenty times what it was before the war. Other chemicals used in the preparation of emulsion have advanced simultaneously and many of them are almost impossible to be had at even the high prices demanded.

We have in the past depended altogether upon Germany for a large number of our most important chemicals and while it is to be hoped that we have learned our lesson and will ultimately produce all these products in American factories, present indications are that we will have to pay still higher prices and, in many cases, resort to other expedients before a normal supply can be re-established.

Camera Questions.

An anonymous inquirer from Waco, Texas, asks a number of questions and signs himself "Motion Picture World Reader." It is not usual to answer anonymous questions, but as this is the first one received by the department it is overlooked as it is evident that the questioner merely shrunk from publicity. Don't refrain from writing letters if you are modest, boys, we will not print your name if you wish to emulate the violet.

These are the questions:

(1) How far does the cameraman stand from the players?

(2) When taking pictures of train, horses, or anything that is moving very fast, is the cameraman in front of the object on some kind of a runabout, or does the cameraman stand on the ground?

(3) Are the Zeiss Tessar lens used on most cameras for close scenes?

(4) What kind of a lens can be used for a far away scene?

(1) The distance between the camera and players depends on the size of the figure required on the screen and the focal length of the lens used in taking the picture. The focal length commonly used is about two inches, which makes the field of the picture just half as wide as the distance to the camera. Two persons standing close together talking at eight feet from the camera would show a small margin of background on either side and be included from the top of their heads to about their waist line. A six-foot figure included from head to foot would be about sixteen feet from the camera and would have an eight-foot foreground on which to work. The following simple ratios give the basis for calculating the distance from any desired figure:

(2) When the landscape rushes past the principal objects on the screen which are in motion, but which maintain practically the same relative position on the screen, the camera is on a moving truck, train, auto, or other traveling device. When the landscape is stationary and moving objects pass by the field of view, the camera is stationary. When the landscape slides past without any of the objects in it appearing to approach or depart from the camera, it is being "panoramed," that is, slowly turned about on the tripod head thus bringing other objects into range of the lens.

(3) Any photographic lens may be used for taking close-ups or for distant views. Close-ups are generally taken by moving the camera up close to the object, although some cameras are fitted with quickly interchangeable sets of lenses and a close-up may be taken without moving the camera by substituting a longer focus lens. Zeiss Tessar type lenses are used more commonly for cinematograph objectives than any other although there are several other good types on the market such as Voightlaender, Dallmeyer, Goerz, etc.

(4) Any lens may be used for a far away scene. The shorter the focal length of the lens the farther away it will appear, and the longer the focal length the nearer it will appear, and if the distant object cannot be approached to get a large view a telephoto lens is used to bring it closer. Telephoto lenses are very useful to war photographers and African lion hunt cinematographers.

(5) Often a slightly cloudy day is much to be preferred to brilliant sunshine as the light is better diffused and much softer, but when the clouds are thick and dark, the pictures taken lack depth and detail.

Motion Picture School.

E. R. G., West Lake, La., wants to know about going to college to learn camera operating:

> I am thinking about taking up Motion Picture Photography at a College of Photography in Illinois. I have about six years' experience taking ordinary pictures of scenes, etc., also have taken some real good motion pictures of out-door scenes, but lack a good deal from being a cameraman.
>
> My idea is to take a complete course in photography as I am aware of the fact that the Motion Picture field is overrun, and I understand that they get their cameramen from film factories, etc.
>
> I have about $1,000 in cash and an income of $100 a month for two years which I figure on running me until I can get a job worth having.
>
> Let me know what you think of my idea. Don't be a bit backward in stating your idea as I don't know and you do, so I am always willing to receive information from someone who knows.

From what you quote in your letter in regard to your previous experience, I am not inclined to believe that it is at all necessary for you to spend anything like two years in an academic or purely technical study of the work in any college. What I mean by this is that it seems to me that it will be of much greater benefit to spend a good part of this time in actual experience as an assistant cameraman in some one of the studios of a moving picture manufacturer. Anyone who has had six years' experience in photography and dark-room work should have already acquired a pretty fair knowledge of the capabilities of a camera, etc.

The money that you would spend at college would take you well along toward getting a practical position as cameraman in some studio.

Go to Los Angeles, New York, or Chicago and get a job in one of the studios there and work your way up. I refer you to the article "Getting a Job as Cameraman," published by this department under date of October 23, which reads in part:

"The limited nature of the calling practically makes it impossible for any school or college to provide any course in cinematography which would give an adequate training. There are a few, a very few schools, only two, in fact, known to this department who advertise to teach motion picture camera operating and they are commercial propositions pure and simple. They teach you just what they advertise—to operate a motion picture camera, but they do not teach anyone to become a cameraman. That can only be learned by actual experience in the studio and in the field."

Exposure With Different Lenses.

E. E. H., Los Angeles, Cal., asks:

> Will you kindly tell me through your department if same stops are used for exposure on the 3-inch lenses as would be used on 2-inch lenses under same light conditions (Zeiss type lenses)? What stops are used on telephoto lens as compared with Zeiss F 3.5 light conditions the same?
>
> What stops would be used on Heliar F. 4.5 lenses as compared with Zeiss F 3.5 lenses under same light conditions?

All lenses with whatever focal length that are marked with the F system are calculated to give the same relative exposure when stoppd at the same F number.

DIAPHRAGM NUMBERS.

Equivalent F/ — and Uniform System Numbers.

Rel. Exposure Required..........	1	2	4	8	16	32	64	128
F Nos..............................	4	5–6	8	11–3	16	22–6	32	45–2
U. S. Nos...........................	1	2	4	8	16	82	64	128

NOTE.—Most lenses are now marked with the f/ numbers, although the U. S. numbers are used on Kodak lenses. Also the actual diameter of the diaphragm aperture in millimeters is marked on Zeiss lenses, such as the "Convertible."

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

THE SHERIFF'S TRAP (Biograph), Oct. 30.—The action of this one-reel drama is vigorous and springs from natural motives. The scenes are western and the local color is excellent. Isabel Rea, Jack Mulhall and Hector V. Sarno meet the requirements of their several roles with ease. George Morgan directed the picture.

NIAGARA FALLS (Edison), Oct. 30.—The eight hundred feet of this reel devoted to views at Niagara is an unbroken panorama of beauty and grandeur. Horeshoe Falls, the American Falls, Goat Island and the Whirlpool Rapids are shown in their winter dress of snow and ice. A two-hundred foot comic educational, Yardville Folks, is on the same reel.

RESCUE OF THE BRAKEMAN'S CHILDREN (Episode No. 51 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Oct. 30.—A new element is brought into this number of the Helen Series by the introduction of two children. The pair of youngsters do perilous stunts as well as Helen Gibson, and the picture is full of action and interest. The scenario is by a new author, W. H. Baugh.

HIS BODY GUARD (Lubin), Oct. 30.—Billie Reeves is the gentleman designated in the title, but, after he meets his employer's wife, it is safe to assume that he will not vote in favor of Woman's Suffrage. The reel is an excellent example of an Epes W. Sargent "comic," and the star has the able assistance of Mae Hotely and Wallie Helston.

WHEN CALIFORNIA WAS WILD (Selig Jungle-Zoo drama), Oct. 30.—A pitfall and a large bear figure in the climax of this one-reel drama. The danger and excitement of pioneer life is entertainingly set forth in the picture, with the aid of a good cast and the animal actors.

THE SACRED BRACELET (Lubin), Nov. 1.—The bracelet in question is stolen by a Filipino from the arm of an image of the Virgin Mary. Wilbert Melville, the author of this one-reel drama, has woven an interesting story around the theft of the bracelet. The local color is well preserved. L. C. Shumway, Melvin Mayo and Ada Gleason carry the weight of the acting with ease.

HEARST'-SEILG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 87, 1915 (Selig), Nov. 1.—The number opens with a view of the U. S. S. Nevada leaving Quincy, Mass., and is followed with the battleship passing under Brooklyn Bridge. Other items: Knights Templar Conclave, Chicago; Liberty Bell on Education Day, Panama-Pacific Exposition; fall styles in golf coats; sham battle, Boston, pajama rally, University of California; game farm, Haywood, Cal.; Robert Fay and Walter Schultz arrested, New Jersey; Volunteer Training Corps, London; on the Austrian-Serbian front.

BETWEEN TWO FIRES (Vitagraph), Nov. 1.—The fires in this one-reel comedy are started by the God of Love in the hearts of two maiden ladies, by a bachelor named Finley Jones, Flora Finch, Kate Price and William Shea impersonate the three characters and the reel is a merry one. W. A. Tremayne wrote the scenario.

DIANA OF THE FARM (Kalem), Nov. 2.—Ethel Teare has the title role in this burlesque comedy, which is a take-off on the popular drama of a past generation. The reel is filled with good-natured fun. Bud Duncan has a hand in nearly everything that's going on.

UP AGAINST IT (Lubin), Nov. 2.—The fortunes of a small time vaudeville team are amusingly set forth in this one-reel comedy. One of the men passes himself off as a lady manicurist when the team open a barber shop. The situations are broadly farcical. D. L. Don and George Egan are the leading fun-makers.

ATHLETIC AMBITIONS (Selig), Nov. 2.—Tom Mix gives a fine exhibition of his prowess as a sprinter in this one-reel comedy. As usual, a woman is the incentive for Tom's burst of speed. The reel is full of breezy western humor.

THE PARSON'S BUTTON-MATCHER (Edison), Nov. 3.—Raymond McKee is again seen as Algernon the tramp, in this one-reel comedy by Will Louis. The plot is original, and abounds in wholesome humor. Julian Reed, Bob Walker, Charles McGee and John Sturgeon contribute clearly defined character types.

THE FABLE OF "THE ESCAPE OF ARTHUR AND THE SALVATION OF HERBERT" (Essanay), Nov. 3.—The plot of this George Ade fable is strictly a family affair. Arthur's wife is the head of the family and Herbert is his infant son. Arthur's wife tries to bring up the boy according to her system. The result is told in the moral: "As the Father is Bent the Child is Inclined." Up to the Ade mark. Charles J. Shine and Camille D'Arcy play their roles in the proper spirit.

A FAMILY PICNIC (Vitagraph), Nov. 3.—The humor of this one-reel comedy is of the homely, every-day sort that human existence supplies so plentifully. Jones and his family start off on a picnic, and the pup belonging to young Jimmie Jones proves the life, if not the joy, of the party. An amusing comedy, written by Frederic Chapin, well acted by Donald MacBride, Kate Price and Paul Kelly.

THE FALSE HAIR (MinA), Nov. 4.——The biggest comedy feature in this one-reel photoplay is the amount of unction put in it by Russ Powell. The plot isn't particularly funny itself, but Mr. Powell's make-up as a lost child and his acting are sure to provoke laughter. Constance Johnson is an effective assistant.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 88, 1915 (Selig), Nov. 4.—Thomas A. Edison and Luther Burbank at Santa Rosa, Cal., is the first news item. Other happenings: British Recruiting Brigade, London, brick laying contest, San Francisco; Fall styles; football match between Michigan and Oregon; milking contest, Panama-Pacific Exposition; lion cubs, Central Park, New York; school fire, Peabody, Mass.; Italian-Austrian front.

THE EBONY CASKET (Vitagraph), Nov. 4.—Elsie Robertson, the author of this one-reel comedy, has succeeded in devising a lot of fresh material for the picture. An Angora cat is an important link in the plot. The story is entertaining. William Duncan, Myrtle Gonzalez, Annie Schaeffer, Alfred Vosburgh and George Kunkel have the important allotments.

THE URCHIN (Lubin), Nov. 5.—An appealing little one-reel drama, this picture owes much of its success to the remarkable acting of Master Brooks McCloskey. This little fellow is surprisingly good as the waif whose one possession is his violin. The story has a firm human touch. Other meritorious members of the cast are Francis Joyner, Edith Ritchie, Eleanor Dun nand Richard Wangemann.

BEAUTIFUL THOUGHTS (Vitagraph), Nov. 5.—Mrs. Sidney Drew is the thinker of the beautiful thoughts in this one-reel comedy, but Mr. Sidney Drew's thoughts run in a different channel and the result, for an audience, is a succession of broad grins. Eva and Stanley Dark wrote the scenario. Florence Natol is also a member of the cast.

THE PASSING STORM (Biograph), Nov. 4.—The oft-told tale of the discontented wife who runs away from home to go upon the stage is repeated in this one-reel drama. The local color is particularly good, and the acting of Claire McDowell, Alan Hale, Vola Smith and little Zoe Bech is of excellent quality. The business of having the wife steal out of bed should not have been repeated. The first time it is impressive, the second time quite the reverse.

BRONCHO BILLY'S MEXICAN WIFE (Essanay), Nov. 5.—The action of this drama runs for one reel, but during that time swift vengeance overtakes Broncho Billy's faithless wife and her Mexican lover. The story is similar to one of those brief tragedies played in this country by Italian actors a few years ago. G. M. Anderson and his supporting company make the performance realistic.

THE ROGUE SYNDICATE ("The Adventures of Marguerite") (Kalem). Nov. 5.—Getting herself into trouble while getting other people out of it is the principal business of Marguerite in this one-reel drama. Although an heiress, she cannot be said to belong to the idle rich, and her activities in behalf of the oppressed must be a sure cure for ennui. Miss Courtot is an attractive little heroine, and Richard Purdon is convincing as the family lawyer.

WAIFS OF THE SEA (Edison), Nov. 6.—The atmosphere of this one-reel drama is impregnated with the salt of the sea. The story reveals a stirring bit of romance, feelingly acted by Richard Tucker, Grace Williams, James Harris, John Sturgeon, William Wadsworth, Charles Sutton and Florence Stover. Frank McGlynn directed the reel.

DANGER AHEAD (Episode No. 52 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Nov. 6.—Life on the rail continues to be one "leap for life" after the other for Helen. In this one-reel installment of her strenuous career, Helen foils two desperate crooks, leaps from an automobile to a moving train, and keeps her old record up to the mark.

THE CELLAR SPY (Lubin), Nov. 6.—Bill again takes unto himself a wife in this one-reel comedy. At least, Epes Winthrop Sargent bestows one on him. Bill becomes jealous of a bill collector, tries spying on his wife from the cellar with the aid of a periscope, has his worst fears more than realized, and learns later that he has been made a victim of a practical joke. Mr. Sargent's material is up to date, and Billy Reeves, Mae Hotely and the rest of the cast give a spirited performance of the same.

THE LOST MESSENGER (Selig), Nov. 6.—The animals of the Selig Jungle-Zoo are again shown to advantage in this one-reel drama. The photoplay in which they are cast is interesting in itself and tells of the adventures of a young American while collecting wild beasts for a circus.

General Film Company Specials.

THE DESTROYER (Essanay), Oct. 25.—A very compact and obsorbing three-reel photoplay, written by Edward T. Lowe, Jr., is "The Destroyer." It keeps close to the essential material, and is a vivid presentation of a strong, up-to-date theme. Lawrence Windom has directed it skilfully, and it is equally well played by Nell Craig, Edmund F. Cobb, and John A. Lorenz.

THE LIGHTHOUSE BY THE SEA (Essanay), Oct. 30.—Joseph Byron Totten wrote and directed this three-reel drama, which is a moving tale of a man's unselfish love and devotion. The story is skilfully told and is laid in picturesque surroundings. Darwin Karr is manly and convincing as the hero, and Betty Brown gives an appealing portrayal of the heroine. Richardson Cotton is exceptionally good in a character role, and Harry English is satisfactory as the Portuguese trader.

THE SHABBIES (Vitagraph), Oct. 30.—The relation of this two-reel comedy-drama to fact may not be very close, but the spirit of it makes for enjoyment and teaches cheerfulness under adverse circumstances. The part played by Lillian Walker is that of a female Mark Tapely; it fits her like her improvised ball gown. Karin Norman, Paul Kelly, Louise Beaudet, Evert Overton and Billie Billings complete the cast. Agnes C. Johnston wrote the scenario, and Wilfrid North made the production.

THE FLASHLIGHT (Selig), Nov. 1.—Edward J. Peil is the hero of this two-reel drama of life in India, written by James Oliver Curwood. Bessie Eyton and Richard Morris are also members of the cast. The romantic qualities of the plot are in Mr. Curwood's best vein, and the heroine is rescued in the traditionally thrilling manner. The Selig herd of elephants are cleverly utilized in the picture.

BETWEEN FATHER AND SON (Biograph), Nov. 2.—This two-reel drama is a skilful blending of modern political and social life. The story holds the interest from start to finish and gives a large cast excellent opportunities to portray well-defined types. The picture was directed by Travers Vale. Jack Drumeir, Franklin Ritchie, Louise Vale, Herbert Barrington and Gretchen Hartman have the leading parts.

DESPAIR (Essanay), Nov. 2.—Portions of this three-reel photoplay resemble the style of plays in which Lotta was wont to charm her audiences, and Edna Mayo's work, during which she assumes several disguises, will stand comparison with the creator of "The Little Detective." The story is melodramatic all through, and has been well directed by the author, J. Charles Haydon. Bryant Washburn plays the hero in his usual effective manner, and Frank Hamilton and William V. Burns make strong impressions as a pair of crooks.

DORA THORNE (Biograph), Nov. 3.—A four-part adaptation of an old English novel by Bertha M. Clay. The picture is artistically produced and carries a strong appeal to the sympathies, as acted by William Russell, Lionel Barrymore, Millicent Evans, Thomas Jefferson and others. In developing the plot the author has made the relationship of the many characters perfectly clear and the dramatic situations in the story appear plausible. Altogether an offering of merit.

THE SIGN OF THE BROKEN SHACKLES (Kalem), Nov. 3.—A melodrama of rather old style situations. It can not be called an artistic picture; but is clear in its construction and is the kind of picture that is apt to satisfy a good many. Those who like the old romantic, exaggerated melodrama will like it. The photography is poor for Kalem work.

WHEN WAR THREATENED (Lubin), Nov. 4.—High Government officials and the Secret Service take part in this two-reel drama, written by Julian Louis Lamothe. The theme is not new, but the author has worked it out by the aid of a number of novel incidents and all intensely dramatic. L. C. Shumway, Sidney Hayes, Robert Gray, George Routh, Melvin Mayo, Velma Whitman and Neva Gerber form a satisfactory cast.

THEIR SINFUL INFLUENCE (Selig), Nov. 4.—Society, with a capital S, is tried and convicted of many grievous faults in this three-reel drama. The author has handled his subject skilfully and introduced a number of strongly contrasting scenes. The daughter of a minister, played by Bessie Eyton, is the leading character. Miss Eyton's impersonation is human and appealing. Good work is also done by Virginia Kirtley, Richard Morris, Edward J. Biel and Edwin Wallack.

FRIEND WILSON'S DAUGHTER (Edison), Nov. 5.—The date of this three-reel drama is back in Colonial days, and Mary Imlay Taylor has written a dramatic story, with Lafayette as one of the characters. The plot has to do with the efforts of the Continentals to throw off the British, but a love romance is the leading motive of the play. Langdon West has directed the picture and shown intelligent appreciation of its requirements. Gertrude McCoy, Robert Brower, Mrs. Wallace Erskine, Lillian DeVere, Lawrence White, Harold Meltzer and Bigelow Cooper form a well-rounded cast.

FIFTY-FIFTY (Essanay), Nov. 1.—Good entertainment marks this three-reel photoplay from start to finish. Joseph Anthony Roach has hit upon a capital theme and built up his story with refreshing cleverness. The consternation of the gentleman who discovers that he has been paying "hush money" to his own wife, is only one of the joyous incidents. Lillian Drew plays the wife with a fine appreciation of its comedy possibilities, and Harry Dunkinson, Edmund F. Cobb and Vida Ramon share in the good work.

THE COQUETTE (Kalem), Nov. 1.—Rea Martin is the heroine of this four-reel drama, which contains a sensational escape from prison and other melodramatic incidents. The story is filled with action, and the heroine is forced to sacrifice her father in order to save the man she loves. Miss Martin realizes the character of Doris Cadwell in all its phases, and is pretty enough to justify her hold upon three members of the cast. Henry Hallam, James Cooley, Joseph Sullivan, Frank Wood and Horace Haine are competent.

THE SULTAN OF ZULON (Vitagraph), Nov. 2.—There is the true comic opera flavor about this two-reel comedy, written by George Bronson Howard. The fun all through is utterly irresponsible and, by the same token, vastly amusing. Hughie Mack is a huge success as the Sultan, in more ways than one. Donald MacBride and Dorothy Kelly are both excellent. Wally Van has produced the picture cleverly—in addition to teaching the entire army of the Sultan how to spraddle when they walk.

ON THE LITTLE MILL TRACE (Essanay), Nov. 6.—The two reels of this photoplay, written by Crittenden Marriott, contain an unconventional and human story which will stir the heart of every spectator. Directness of construction and strength of motive are two of its dominant qualities, and it has been sympathetically directed by Lawrence Windom. Nell Craig carries the burden of the acting. Her impersonation of the deserted wife is imbued with deep feeling and fine technic. H. E. Thompson, Thomas Comerford and John Cossar give adequate support.

ANSELO LEE (Vitagraph), Nov. 6.—Paul Kester is the author of this three-reel photoplay. He has allowed himself to indulge his love of romance to the limit. A handsome gypsy falls in love with a young society girl, and she with him. When she finds she must give him up she dies of a broken heart. The acting of Antonio Moreno and Naomi Childers is in the proper spirit, and Mrs. Nellie Anderson gives a strong character study of the old gypsy fortune-teller.

Mutual Film Corporation.

HER ADOPTED FATHER (Beauty), Nov. 9.—This is an attractive one-reel production in which a child placed in what is supposed to be good keeping by her mother who is forced to take a governess' position, runs away to escape the unhappiness of the home of a drunken woman. A bachelor on his way home from a night's carousal is adopted by the child as her father. Later the mother discovers the whereabouts of the child and takes her away. The incident, however, results in marriage of the mother and the bachelor. A good picture.

SEE AMERICA FIRST (No. 9) (Gaumont), Nov. 9.—A half-reel subject, giving entertaining glimpses of the Berkshire hills in Massachusetts. Also an excellent view of the way fine writing paper is manufactured. Very pleasing and instructive.

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES (Gaumont), Nov. 9.—On same reel with above. In this Pa McGinnis visits the pictures and sees the way things are going in Mexico.

LOVE AND BITTERS (Novelty), Nov. 10.—Rather an amusing comedy in which the masculine lead determines to end his life by taking carbolic acid. The butler discovering his plan substitutes bitters for the poisonous dose. Some of the comedy of the picture is good.

THE FILM FAVORITE'S FINISH (Falstaff), Nov. 11.—This is rather an amusing comedy in which an overbearing actor, and leading man of a moving picture company is gotten rid of by a very clever ruse. The character man of the company accidentally picks up some keys that he has seen dropped on the street, by a rich woman, and he takes advantage of the opportunity to impersonate her, and invite the actor to spend some time in the villa as his guest. The police are then notified that a burglar is in the house, and the rest is easily imagined.

ALMOST A WIDOW (Beauty), Nov. 13.—A beach yarn, in which Frank Borzage, Neva Gerber and others appear. The story is light in plot and concerns a number of mixed love affairs at the seaside. The hero jumps off a dock to escape the designing widow. She mourns him as dead, but he lives and marries another. This has amusing moments.

IN BABY'S GARDEN (Thanhouser), Nov. 14.—A very attractive production with the Thanhouser Kidlet playing an important role. A brother of her mother's returning from South Africa deposits a small bag of diamonds in the safe. The kidlet steals them and plants them in her garden to grow a crown like mamma's. The governess is accused of the theft and is discharged. Afterward when the truth about the diamonds becomes known she is taken back and becomes betrothed to the child's uncle.

THE SUBSTITUTE MINISTER (American), Nov. 15.—Rather an interesting story has been used as the basis of this two-part production of which Vivian Rich is the feminine lead. A minister's son getting into trouble dons his father's ministerial garb and answers, in his father's absence, a substitute call. His father happens on his way home to visit the same place, and is appalled to find his son in the pulpit. To overcome his difficulty as best he can the young man announces to the congregation that he will tell them a life story instead of preaching a sermon.

HANNAH'S HENPECKED HUSBAND (Falstaff), Nov. 15.—This is not an especially commendable comedy. It is a farcically-told story of a husband who was maltreated to a rather large extent, and of a musician with whom the wife falls in love. Because the wife tells the musician that she cannot marry him because she is not free, he starts out to commit suicide and runs across the husband contemplating the same thing. Finally they both decide that they had better continue to live.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE DEVIL'S DARLING (Rialto), Nov. 3.—A three-reel production made at the Gaumont studios at Flushing, L. I. Flavia Arcaro, Francine Larrimore, Jno. Reinhard and others do good work in a production that is well made but gruesome. The sets, photography and general technical work of the picture are all worthy of commendation, and as a dramatic success the picture stands well, in spite of the unhealthy theme. A full review of the production appeared on page 1157 of the issue of Nov. 6.

THE TRAIL OF THE SERPENT (Mustang), Nov. 5.—A two-part production that is not quite as attractive as others of the Mustang brand that have preceded it. It suffers by way of a rather poor story. E. Forrest Taylor appears to good advantage in the masculine lead, while the remainder of the cast are also capable. The story treats of how a stranger posing as a single man wins a young girl's love and tries to swindle her out of a valuable mining property.

THE END OF THE ROAD (Mutual Masterpicture No. 46, American), Nov. 11.—Vivid scenes of a thunderstorm and of a flooded river that washes away a frame house, give this Mutual Masterpicture a high spectacular value. The story is of good dramatic quality, it profits by picturesque settings representing the mountainous country of the South and it is forcefully acted by Harold Lockwood, May Allison, William Ehfe and others.

STANLEY IN STARVATION CAMP (Centaur), Nov. 11.—An entertaining instalment of the Stanley series, featuring a competent cast, including Roy Watson, Mona Darkfeather, Edward Roberts and others. This is located in the heart of the jungle country and the native villages are very realistic. The Bostock wild animals perform well in this number. The plot consists of the capture of Ada by the White King and Jack's efforts to recover her. At the close the Stanley rescue party appears just as the girl has been spirited away.

IN THE HANDS OF THE ENEMY (Thanhouser), Nov. 16.—A two-reel military production, in which a mother accompanies her son through the lines of the enemy to carry a message to an ally. By wrongly interpreting the code to the enemy she saves her son from being shot, and in the meantime a successful attack is made on the enemy. The picture is a fairly good one.

THE NEW ADAM AND EVE (Rialto) Nov. 17.—A three-reel subject, featuring Grace Valentine and a good supporting cast. The plot is based upon a well-known story by Nathaniel Hawthorne. It makes an unusual and attractive number, as worked out on the screen. The young lovers, separated by the young man's termagant mother, wander in a dream from Eden to the present civilization. The story is fantastic and mystical in this part; it contains some strong emotional work in the other scenes. At the close the mother dies and the lovers find happiness together. This is novel and well handled.

INSPIRATION (Mutual Masterpicture-Thanhouser), Nov. 18.—Audrey Munson plays an artist's model in an interesting five-part picture produced by Thanhouser for the Mutual Masterpicture service. The story is slight and conventional, although many of the scenes in which Miss Munson appears are much out of the ordinary. In the third reel an audience sees the entire process of perpetuating the young woman's graceful lines in a plaster cast.

North American Film Corporation

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY NO. 28 (American), Nov. 8.—"A Midnight Intruder" is the title of this episode, in which Powell in desperation mixes a poison lotion for himself, but is hindered from taking it through a midnight intruder in the shape of the gypsy, Luke Lovell, who after placing Powell in the position of his valet, and taking possession of his clothing, money, the diamond, etc., hilariously drinks the contents of the glass unconscious of what it contains. The story closes with an accident to Powell's airship, when it falls by the gypsy camp where Esther and Hager are, the latter dying.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE MASQUERADERS (Famous Players), Oct. 28.—This subject, reviewed at length in another part of this issue, is an interesting picture featuring Hazel Dawn. It is finely produced and photographed and the latter half contains many strong situations.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS NO. 87, 1915 (Pathe), Oct. 30.—In this issue will be found an unusual photograph of the battleship "Nevada." The photography is of an unusually clear quality, and the views of the moving ship have been chosen so as to reveal every possible detail. There are also shown some scenes in London, Eng., among them Winston Churchill conversing with the munition makers, and a body of 6,000 troops parading the streets in a recruiting campaign.

GIVING THEM FITS (Phunphilms), Nov. 1.—This one-reel comedy, produced by the Rolin Film Co., could not be referred to as being very high class. It is a farce comedy into which a remarkable amount of vulgarity has been worked. Toward the end of the reel some very amusing slapstick stuff has been presented, and it is unfortunate that the remainder of the picture is not as free from the objectionable as this portion referred to.

HUMAN MOVEMENTS ANALYZED (Globe). Nov. 6.—An unusually interesting educational subject. In the making of this picture each movement, after being photographed at ordinary speed, is again photographed by a Pathe high speed camera at the rate of one hundred pictures to the second. A full review of this subject will be found on another page of this issue. On the same reel with the following.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE NEW ADVENTURES OF J. RUFUS WALLINGFORD NO. 6, "A TRAP FOR TRAPP" (Pathe), Nov. 8.—"A Trap for Trapp" is the title of this number of the series. The most amusing part of this film is the manner in which Wallingford and Blackie Daw juggle with an unlimited number of bank notes of questionable value. Mr. Trapp coming sixth on the list of the clique that ruined the financial position of Mr. Warden, is left high and dry on the financial deal put through by the clever Wallingford to the advantage of the Warden girls.

NEAL OF THE NAVY NO. 10, "THE ROLLING TERROR" (Panama Films), Nov. 4.—"The Rolling Terror" is one of the best of the series. Annette and Mrs. Hardin are again kidnapped through the efforts of the villain Hernandez, and placed aboard a train, after which a diabolical scheme to get rid of them permanently all but succeeds. This is attempted by disconnecting the brake of the flat car that has been loaned to Neal and his comrades to help them to reach their destination. The grade is so steep that the car runs without propelling other than the force of gravity. The brute man comes to the rescue, and tampers with the rails so that the car runs off and demolishes an old empty cabin on the roadside instead of the intended goal ahead.

HIS CONQUERED SELF (Balboa), Nov. 15.—A three-part production that breathes an unhealthy atmosphere. The redeeming feature of the play will be found in the fact that the one woman in it that the least is expected of at the commencement of the picture proves herself to be a strong and capable character, and by a determined effort tries to save the younger girl from what she believes will be her downfall. We are somewhat disappointed when the girl marries the man who has sought to ruin her. The story is peculiarly constructed.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE GOLDEN CLAW (Triangle-Kay-Bee), Nov.—A powerful story of the lust for wealth that is brought into being through the extravagant and insistent demands of a wife fond of luxury. A new and intense view is given of this problem in domestic life with a finish that is as satisfactory as it is artistic.

DOUBLE TROUBLE (Fine Arts), Nov.—An adaptation from a novel on dual personality. The story itself is not wholly consistent and lets down at times, but it gives Douglas Fairbanks opportunity to present two opposing natures in one man, and he succeeds.

THE BEST OF ENEMIES (Triangle-Keystone), Nov.—Featuring Joe Weber and Lew Fields, and they make it plain that they need no featuring. They take to Keystone comedy as though they had been at it all their lives, take all that is coming to them and a little more besides. A decided hit.

SAVED BY WIRELESS (Triangle-Keystone), Nov.—An amusing burlesque on the old-fashioned melodrama with some astonishing feats in mid-air, while clinging to an aeroplane, by Chester Conklin. An ingenious and laughable travesty.

ALOHA OE (Kaybee).—A story of adventure growing out of a brilliant young lawyer's irresistable craving for drink. After winning a remarkable case, he is carried by his friends aboard a sailing ship. He is wrecked in a gale, becames the idol of a primitive tribe and finally renounces civilization through the love of a South Sea princess. Replete with stirring adventure. Reviewed in this issue by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE LILY AND THE ROSE (Fine Arts Co.).—A story but little removed from many others of the same kind, that of the deserving and deserted wife, the husband who spends his time in the company of theatrical ladies of physical attractions, and his tragic death on discovering that the only one whom he has showered all his attentions on is false to him. Some beautiful photographic effects, but there is not enough material in the play for five reels. Reviewed in this issue by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A JANITOR'S WIFE'S TEMPTATION (Keystone).—Not an entirely successful attempt to utilize a lot of old tricks in a play that loses in leaving pure farce for travesty.

THE VILLAGE SCANDAL (Keystone).—An amusing farce centering entirely upon the personality of popular Roscoe Arbuckle, although Raymond Hitchcock "appears" only to be thrown in unfavorable contrast with the inimitable Roscoe.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 191 (Universal), Nov. 3.—Knights Templars in Chicago, investigation of bomb plot in New Jersey, train wreck near Mexican line, fashions, European war views, and other features are included in this number.

ACTORS FROM THE JUNGLE (Victor), Nov. 11.—A very entertaining reel, picturing the various trained animals at the big moving picture plants. Paul Bourgeois, superintendent, and Edward F. Koch, veterinarian, are also shown working with the animals. An excellent study of wild animals in captivity.

THE CIRCUS (Rex), Nov. 13.—A splendid juvenile number, produced by H. C. Matthews. This will bring laughter from both young and old, as it pictures a "kid circus" in full detail. One of the funniest releases in some time, and probably as good as any juvenile comedy yet shown.

LIQUID DYNAMITE (Rex), Nov. 14.—A light comedy number, by Joe King, featuring Cleo Madison and Thomas Chatterton as the lovers. The fishing scenes are very pleasing and the plot, in which a thermos bottle is mistaken for a bomb, proves quite amusing. A good, light subject.

A LOONEY LOVE AFFAIR (Nestor), Nov. 15.—A comedy number, written by Neal Burns, who also appears, with Billie Rhodes and Ray Gallegher. Some of the burlesque antics about the insane asylum are very amusing. A pleasing number.

BILL'S PLUMBER AND PLUMBER'S BILL (Imp). Nov. 16.—A variation of an old theme worked out in an amusing way. The husband is almost drowned in the bathroom before the dilatory plumber and his assistant accomplish anything. This contains funny spots.

DISGUISED BUT DISCOVERED (L-KO), Nov. 17.—Hank Mann and Peggy Pearce appear in this low comedy number. Her father marries unexpectedly, and when he brings his bride home the daughter is acting as maid and Hank as butler. The fun is of the knockabout type and will create some laughter.

MUSCLES AND MERRIMENT (Powers), Nov. 18.—A half reel, picturing a vaudeville acrobatic turn of about the usual interest. Mlle. Potento is featured. A nature study by Prof. Ditmars, of the New York Zoo, will be shown on the same reel with this. An educational subject on the same reel with the above, entitled "The Home Life of the Spider."

WANTED, A LEADING LADY (Nestor), Nov. 19.—A comedy number with George French, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Betty Compson in the cast. The plot is slight, showing the way a new leading lady was chosen for the moving picture company. This is fairly strong.

CHILLS AND CHICKEN (Joker), Nov. 20.—A low comedy number, by Gale Henry, featuring the author and Max Asher. The latter plays a flirtatious husband who breaks into a hospital to meet a nurse. His wife appears in disguise. This has some fairly amusing moments.

Universal Film Mfg. Company, Specials.

A TIMELY RESCUE (Universal Special Feature), Nov. 8.—No. 21 of "The Broken Coin" series. In this number the series draws near a close. Kitty and Frederick return, after many adventures, in an armored automobile, fighting their way through to Gretzhoffen. King Michael is still carousing with his friends at court, unaware that his country has been plunged into a fresh war. The number closes with Count Sachio and Count Frederick in a duel.

MANNA (Gold Seal), Nov. 16.—A two-reel number, featuring Olive Fuller Golden, Louella Maxam and others. The plot is simple, picturing the way in which a lame girl sits at her window and tosses biblical and other inscriptions into the street, seeking in this way to do some good in the world. By a series of interesting coincidences the inscriptions fall into the hands of people who act upon them and the girl is thus able to serve humanity as she desired. This of course must be taken with due allowances for the improbable, but makes a pretty helpful sort of story.

THE LIL' NOR'WESTER (Victor), Nov. 17.—A three-reel sea story, featuring Mary Fuller, Paul Panzer and others. The yarn is a pleasing one, with a touch of heart interest in it. It pictures the story of a fisher girl, who is suddenly left alone by the death of her grandfather at sea. The storm scene is well presented. The girl is loved by three men, but Jim wins her after a period of doubt and numerous adventures. Mary Fuller is very pleasing in this role.

BLOOD HERITAGE (Imp), Nov. 19.—A three-reel number, by W. H. Lippert, introducing Lionel Adams, Betty Grey and Gladden James in their new affiliations. The plot is based on the medical theory that the blood corpuscles are so formed as to show relationship of people. A young doctor, while examining the blood of an alleged criminal, discovers it to be that of his own brother. This of course is led up to by a series of happenings, but it makes the dramatic feature of the plot. The cast is an agreeable one and while the story itself is not extremely powerful, it at the same time holds the attention closely throughout.

THE HEART OF A TIGRESS (Bison), Nov. 20.—A three-reel wild animal story, by Paul Bourgeois, featuring Madame Bourgeois, Ed Wilson, Betty Schade and the author. The African jungle settings are picturesque; later the scenes change to California, where an interesting reception is held. The home of the hostess is filled with Royal Bengal tigers and other beasts, which she seeks to employ to criminal ends. The plot, such as it is, is not very exciting, but merely serves to exploit the wild beasts. The number is pleasing in settings and animal features, though not strong in story value.

World Film Corporation.

THE COWARDLY WAY (Equitable), Nov. 15.—Marc Edmond Jones is the author of this unusual five-part picture, in which the chief character, that of a selfish woman, is played by Florence Reed. Suicide is held to be the cowardly way out of difficulties. The woman kills herself but her spirit is forced to remain on earth until the misdeeds of her life are atoned for. An interesting picture that probably will be enjoyed, if not fully comprehended, by the average audience.

Metro Boosters Dine

Interesting Little Gathering Held at Keen's Chop House, New York.

THE first of a series of dinners arranged for the Metro Boosters' Club, the new social organization within the Metro Pictures Corporation and its allied manufacturers, was given on Thursday evening, November 4, at Keen's Chop House in 44th street, New York, and the new organization was launched with a preponderance of the element known as "pep." Paul Henkel arranged a special menu of Metro dishes and covers were laid for thirty-five. Informal addresses were made by President Rowland, Treasurer Joseph Engel, Producing Directors Noble, Carewe, Jones and Belmore, and then the makers of pictures had a chance to learn what the sellers of pictures thought of them and their product.

Louis B. Mayer, of Boston; Harry Weiss, of Chicago; E. M. Saunders, of New York; James A. Fitzgerald, of Detroit; John D. Clarke, of Philadelphia, and Cresshon Smith, of Des Moines, Metro managers in their respective territories, all spoke of the satisfaction expressed by their exhibitors with the consistency of Metro pictures and congratulated the manufacturers on the great strides in the high artistic quality and increasing power of their pictures as box office attractions. Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Rolfe Photo Plays, Inc.; Lawrence Weber, president of the Popular Plays and Players, and George A. Wiley, manager of the Quality Pictures Corporation, spoke for the manufacturers.

At the close of the dinner Treasurer Joseph W. Engel distributed tiny gold pins, with the word "Metro" in letters of attractive design on a blue enamel background, among the diners. Every Metro booster is expected to wear one of them in his coat lapel, and the demand has already exhausted the supply.

Charles J. Richman

Charles J. Richman.

WHEN Charles J. Richman, one of the prominent Vitagraph stars, was asked what he thought of motion pictures, he answered: "I like them so well, I don't care if I never appear on a speaking stage again," and this in face of the fact that he was one of the best known leading men and matinee idols on the legitimate stage. Although his father and mother are natives of New York state, Mr. Richman claims Chicago, Illinois, as his "home town," and received his education in the public schools there. He also studied in the Chicago College of Law, but gave up Blackstone to become an actor. Determination with a steadfastness of purpose that would brook of no defeat, soon established him as an actor of merit and won for him a degree of distinction that attracted attention. His first big parts came as leading man with A. M. Palmer's Stock Company, where his versatility, together with his natural talents attracted the attention of Augustin Daly, who signed him for an engagement as leading man in his famous stock company, to play opposite Ada Rehan. Mr. Richman stayed with this organization six seasons, of which he played four in America at Daly's Theater and two in London. Then followed three years with the Empire Theater Stock Company, and engagements as leading man with such well-known theatrical stars as Annie Russell, Mrs. Langtry, Mary Mannering, Blanche Bates, and starring tours in such successful productions as "Captain Barrington," "Gallops," "The Revelers," "Bought and Paid For," etc.

When Mr. Richman was first asked to appear in motion pictures he was skeptical as to their value as a medium for expressing that dramatic unity of action that would carry the same degree of weight registered by an actor on the legitimate stage. He was also apprehensive as to the damage they might do to his status as a speaking actor. His first picture dispelled the first and made the second negligible, besides making a convert to the camera's lure. When Mr. Richman became a member of the Vitagraph Stock Stars, he had worked for only two other picture producing firms, but had a thorough knowledge of the camera's requirements. The pictures in which he has starred under the Vitagraph banner include "Heights of Hazard," "The Battle Cry of Peace," "The Surprises of an Empty Hotel," "One Night," etc.

NEEDLES WILL BUILD NEW THEATER.

M. Needles, who has operated a motion picture theater for several years on Twenty-third street, near Seventh avenue, New York City, is planning to build a modern house on Eighth avenue between Fifteenth and Sixteenth streets. The new house will seat six hundred persons and its estimated cost is about $20.000. Mr. Needles says that he hopes to have it ready for buiness in four months.

As a manager of motion picture theaters M. Needles has been very successful, and his Twenty-third street house is quite popular with the residents in its vicinity. His methods should bring success in the new location, which is particularly desirable and much in need of a good house.

"The Reproach of Annesley"

The Biograph Company Makes a Three-Part Adaptation of a Novel by Maxwell Gray—A Griffith One-Reel Re-Issue.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

OWING to an exceedingly pretty production, quite as much as to the story material found in Maxwell Gray's novel, "The Reproach of Annesley" will make satisfactory entertainment. It is not an extraordinary picture, but contains good points in the clear presentation of a plot that offers a few unforeseen twists; in the uniformally pleasing backgrounds, and in the acting of a capable company which includes Jack Drumier, Herbert Barrington, Louise Vale and Franklin Ritchie.

Scene from "The Reproach of Annesley" (Biograph).

The story revolves around the love of three men for one woman. Paul has every reason to believe that he will win Alice's love until she takes a sudden fancy to his cousin, Edward. The two young men come to blows, though no fault of Edward's, and the end of the fracas finds the aggressive Paul rolling down a steep cliff. Then Alice's guardian, who wants to marry her himself, assures Edward that he has killed his cousin, and as the man in question is not to be found, the story is credited. In due time the supposedly deceased Paul reappears as a priest in a monastery and the girl is saved from marrying the guardian, whose misdeeds are forgiven. The scenes are nicely arranged to keep up the suspense and without exception the dramatic passages are acted with feeling.

A Biograph single-reel Griffith re-issue that is certain to attract favorable comment is "Two Daughters of Eve," acted by Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Claire McDowell and many other old favorites. Mr. Griffith chose two sharply contrasted women, one a musical comedy actress of flirtatious nature, the other a married woman of irreproachable reputation, and made them the central figures in a thoroughly dramatic little sketch. Like so many of the Griffith productions, it has a sound psychological background, and, of course, is excellently acted.

First of Vim Comedies

"Midnight Prowlers" and "A Pair of Birds" Are Ready for Release on General Film Program.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE Vim comedies, being produced by the Meliss Company under the direction of Louis Burstein, will be a valuable asset to the General Film program if the pace set in the first two pictures is maintained in subsequent productions. "Midnight Prowlers," to be released November 12, and "A Pair of Birds," scheduled for a week later, come under the head of slapstick presented with a dash that fulfills the promise of the brand name. Bobby Burns and Walter Stull are genuinely amusing without being vulgar in their playing of Pokes and Jabbs, two low comedy characters whose adventures will be a prominent feature of the Vim films. Moreover, they are supported by an able company and in the first releases, at least, profit by the work of a scenario writer who knows how to construct a slapstick story.

The plot in "Midnight Prowlers" is ample to carry a picture that to a large degree depends upon the humorous acting of the two featured players. Awakened by strange noises in the middle of the night, a husband and wife believe that the house has been entered by a burglar. In attempting to locate the intruder they wreck most of the furniture and the following day each engages a detective to work on the case. During the remainder of the story the detectives, one of them a woman, the other Pokes, contribute to the lively complications.

Pokes and a character called Runt are the central figures in "A Pair of Birds," the birds in question being two convicts who escape from a penitentiary. Their experiences during captivity and after their entrance into the outer world are varied and of the kind certain to entertain audiences partial to slapstick handled in a clean manner.

"A Western Governor's Humanity"

Governor W. P. Hunt, of Arizona, in the Cast of a Three-Reel Lubin Photoplay, Written by Romaine Fielding.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A PHOTOPLAY written and directed by Romaine Fielding may always be depended upon to have several unconventional touches that instantly rivet the attention. "A Western Governor's Humanity" is no exception to the rule. This three-reel picture is sheer melodrama, and relies solely upon celerity of movement and vigor of situation; study of character and the deeper meanings of life have no place in its development. Mr. Fielding, however, both as author and director, has found opportunity to give it the personal stamp mentioned above. The story relates the doings of a band of horse thieves who are led by a mysterious individual known as White-Mask. Sheriff McKnight and one of his deputies round up the gang. In the melee, the deputy is shot and killed. When the sheriff removes the mask from the leader's face, he finds the outlaw to be his own son. Young McKnight is tried and convicted of killing the deputy. The young man has been idolized by his parents and his two sisters, but the father sternly closes his heart to everything but his sense of justice. It was he who arrested his son, and he is prepared to carry out the sentence of death and hang the prisoner in the jail yard, at the appointed hour. The mother goes to the Governor and pleads for the life of her boy; then the elder sister goes on the same errand and the result is the same. Finally, Robert's baby sister finds her way into the great man's office and wins the reprieve. He takes the child in his arms and hurries to the jail, arriving just in time to stop the execution.

The novelty of having Governor W. P. Hunt appear as himself will assist in advertising the picture, but adds nothing to its artistic worth. Although Dogberry holds that "Reading and writing comes by nature," acting before the camera, assuredly, does not. Romaine Fielding acts the leader of the horse thieves with the proper amount of romantic exaggeration, and makes him an engaging figure, in spite of his rascality. But he should have denied himself the pleasure of appearing in those elegant evening clothes. Any native son of Arizona would feel justified in shooting him on sight. Roscoe Karnes is the Sheriff to the life, and excellent impersonations are given by Jack Lawton, Audell Higgins, Elsie Burns, Vinnie Burns, and little Pinky Bell.

"The Butterfly on the Wheel"

Shubert-World Film Offering in Five Reels—Features Holbrook Blinn and Vivian Martin—Will Be a Popular Picture.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THIS World Film offering from the drama, "The Butterfly on the Wheel," telling a story that has proved its popularity, and charmingly presented, will, we have no doubt, be welcome on any program. There is that quality in the story that will make people who have seen the play bring their friends who haven't to the picture—not because it is wonderfully artistic, but because it is pleasing.

The first three reels have that double gift of making you interested in the dramatic action, making you want the story to keep going that you might see how it is turning out, and also of making you interested in the action for its own sake, so that you are willing to have the story delayed since the by-play is so pleasing in itself. This is very true of the first reel, in which a ball is given by Lady Attwill—it helps the story, but is mighty interesting aside from the story for its humanity and its humor. The spectator has a good time at the ball.

Pretty Vivian Martin plays the "Butterfly," a young society wife too careless to keep out of dangerous waters, but good and true in her irresponsible way. She is so charming and so adequately fills all the demands on her in the first three reels that most spectators will be more than ready to forgive her for her failure to measure up to the demands of the tragic parts of the action, as in the divorce court, where her shortcomings as an emotional actress are too apparent. Handsome George Ralph, as the society man whose attentions get her into trouble, ably plays the youth not bad hearted, but dangerous from his Romeo-like, blind star-drifting, follower of his feelings without counting the cost. June Elvidge is an acceptable Lady Attwill—she is only the "deus ex machina" and her plot to separate the "Butterfly" and her husband, unsupported as it is by mordant character drawing, is the weakness of the film. Holbrook Blinn, as the husband of the "Butterfly," is good indeed. The staging of the picture, except for one instant, is worthy of high praise, but the director, Maurice Tourneur, or the editor, left one crack open and the studio peeped through at the audience—in all its undress of pipes and wires. The photography is fine.

"Inspiration"

Audrey Munson Plays an Artist's Model in Five-Part Thanhouser Mutual Masterpicture.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

PRESENTING a conventional, but reasonably diverting story, "Inspiration," a five-part Thanhouser production released on the Mutual Masterpicture service, depends very largely upon the interest aroused by Audrey Munson's playing of an artist's model. The picture is not in the least unusual in theme—a sculptor seeks, finds and eventually marries the ideal model for his masterpiece—the treatment however, is enough out of the ordinary to excite comment. Moreover, it may be noted in favor of "Inspiration" that it possesses an artistic and, at times, even an educational value. Good taste has been displayed in the handling of scenes that might easily become coarse.

Considering the production reel by reel we find that the first two reels present the conventional predicament of a young sculptor who dreams of finding a perfect model to inspire his work; but meanwhile is forced to put up with poor substitutes. His three friends search the streets for the perfect woman and return with Audrey, who is soon recognized by the artist as the incarnation of his beautiful and innocent dream girl. So much for the first two reels. Reel three offers something different, something brand new to photoplays; for we see each step in the difficult process of moulding a plaster cast on a human figure, Miss Munson supplying the figure. These scenes are undeniably novel, interesting, and, of course, a bit daring.

When this operation has been completed and Miss Munson's graceful lines have been perpetuated, the story is continued along orthodox lines, telling how the model, despairing of winning the love of the sculptor, wanders off and is found at the end of a discouraging search, during which the artist visits all the famous pieces of statuary for which she had posed. The picture is finely staged and contains many clever bits of photography. The cast is adequate, although Thomas A. Curran is hardly the type for an artist in whom spiritual inspiration is supposed to be uppermost. Virginia Tyler Hudson wrote the scenario.

"Adventures of a Madcap"

An Attractive Four-Part Pathecolor Featuring Jackie Saunders, and Made at the Balboa Studios.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

NO SUBJECT could be chosen into which Jackie Saunders would fit more readily than this prettily developed story of the simple maid adopted by the old flower grower Jason. At the death of Jason, which occurs suddenly, as he is in the act of picking flowers, she is adopted the second time by a man and his wife from the city who happen by in their automobile when Jean is weeping over her foster father.

The restraint placed upon her in the home of her newly found friends makes the child of nature very unhappy; and after handing out several shocks, such as dressing in a boy's knickerbocker suit and walking into the midst of a fashionable reception, she finally runs away and takes up quarters with a band of gypsies. Not until an attempted assault on Jean by the gypsy lover of the girl Carmio is her whereabouts discovered. Then it is her former country lover that accomplishes her rescue.

The production is attractive as a colored subject, and although not by any means faultless, will prove an interesting feature for the average audience.

"September Mourning"

Two-Reel L-KO Comedy Turns Up Some Laughable Moments, Regardless of Its Slight Plot.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS eccentric comedy number pictures the experiences of two talented but hungry artists. It begins with the usual park flirtations, in which they are joined by a number of hangers-on, the object of rivalry on the part of all concerned being a pretty girl, portrayed without the slightest effort by Gertrude Selby.

The opening reel is devoted to some diverting and nonsensical small business. Some of these whimsical antics prove very laughable, though they would have been more so with a little more definite plot to hold them together. The funmakers comprise H. Pathe Lehrman, Charles Wininger, Gene Rogers and others.

Scene from "September Mourning" (L-Ko).

The second reel pictures the artists in the act of invading a girls' school. Numerous young ladies, clad in scant, but artistic, attire, are the object of their interest. There are moments when an apprehensive observer thinks matters may go too far, but there is really no actual vulgarity, and while the general tone of the comedy is not of the best, it is after all a harmless sort of fun.

"Carmen"

Theda Bara, of the Fox Forces, in the Role of the Immortal Gypsy.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THERE is one quite apparent merit in this production: The producer puts on a version of "Carmen" which does not require any previous knowledge of the story on the part of the spectator. The story has a logical beginning, a fairly good dramatic development and a good climax. No attempt is made to follow either Merimee or Bizet but a strong coherent story is built out of the materials borrowed in part from the novel and in part from the opera. The ending of the story is strictly original with the writer of the scenario.

Theda Bara plays the part of Carmen. This actress has many admirers, who evidently think that her vampire specialty is interesting and well worth seeing. Through an excess of practice, perhaps, the vampiring of this lady is becoming somewhat tame. In her Carmen surely there was not a single chord which she had not frequently struck before.

What I liked best about the production were its settings and its direction. The latter was by no means faultless. In the attempt to create atmosphere there were altogether too many flashes pointing away from the story and at times the director indulged in digressions which positively threatened to interrupt the smooth current of the story. There is, however, such a distinct revelation of power in Mr. Walsh's work as to make these faults excusable. He did succeed in creating the atmosphere which means very much in a motion picture version of "Carmen." Many of his flashes showed brilliant talent scarcely inferior to the very best of our directors. He evinces an intuitive knowledge of human psychology and an extraordinary ability to follow the searchlight methods of Griffith. His sense of humor does at times seem grotesque, but he strikes the right chord far more frequently than the wrong one. He is beyond all question a young man of very great promise.

The settings, too, reach a high standard. There is a wonderful attention to detail which is highly pleasing. Some of the touches of characterization are particularly fine. The liberating of the dove by Carmen and the scenes immediately following are beyond all praise. Altogether it must be said that this Carmen is well worth seeing. The support of Theda Bara was just about fair. The type of Jose with which we have been made familiar in the opera and the type of Jose in this production are quite different.

The photography brilliant in spots is at other times not quite up to the average which we have a right to expect in a first class feature.

"Double Trouble"

A Five-Reel Fine Arts Adapted from the Novel by Herbert Quick.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THAT interesting problem in abnormal psychology known as "dual personality" affords an abundance of significant situations in all arts of expression, more particularly in serious drama or such intense novels as "Doctor Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and there is no reason why it should not be utilized in comedy, as is done in "Double Trouble." There is depth of meaning to the screen version, and it affords Douglas Fairbanks abundant opportunity to display his versatile talents, but there is a tendency to drag at times and more than one incongruity that could have been completely eliminated where the main purpose is so obviously that of light and amusing entertainment. The serious parts of the story lack strength under comedy treatment and cause interest to flag where it could be intensified by temporary abandonment of comedy treatment for the sake of a little high tension between amusing reversals of character.

Mr. Fairbanks plays the very human role of a man with two personalities, one of which, that of affected saintliness is dominant up to the moment a blow on the head releases a wilder human being of primitive instincts long held in suppression. He plays his role well—that goes without saying—but he is all alone—there is no other characterization from beginning to end calculated to provide an interest allied to his shifting personality and adventures. Such a one might easily have been the woman who had the power to transform him by hypnotic suggestion, but the story as it stands leads to little more than nothing at all.

"The Cowardly Way"

Unusual Drama Is Produced by the Equitable Corporation With Florence Reed in the Stellar Role.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN WRITING the scenario for this five-part Equitable production, Marc Edmond Jones dared to be original even at the risk of puzzling his audience. He causes his heroine to commit suicide at the end of the fourth reel, an almost unprecedented occurrence in a five-reel picture, and during the last thousand feet we see the spirit of the woman winning redemption for the misdeeds of a selfish life and a cowardly surrender. As may easily be imagined, the picture is well out of the ordinary and interesting in consequence, even if some of the author's deeper meanings pass unrecognized by an audience. The strangeness of the scenes, the weird atmosphere of the final reel, in which the spirit of Eunice and the ghastly figure of death float across the screen, and the indisputable power of Florence Reed's performance carry a certain appeal.

Scene from "The Cowardly Way" (Equitable).

Suicide, according to the argument of the story, is the cowardly way out of difficulties; furthermore, we are told that human beings have the power to destroy their bodies, but not their spirits, which must flit uneasily through the world until they have earned the right to a peaceful grave. The story prepared by Mr. Jones reveals Eunice in an unpleasant light.

Above all she is selfish and so dependent upon luxuries that when the crash comes, when her husband loses his fortune, she prefers death to deprivation. The tragedy not only drives her husband insane, but makes him a clairvoyant and gives him the power to communicate with the spirit of his dead wife.

Eunice, it appears, enjoys his companionship after death more than she did in life. She is given the power to restore his reason, but in so doing she will destroy the bond that unites them and Eunice, true to her selfish nature, is loath to make the sacrifice. The author works up to a strong climax in which the woman for the first time recognizes the interests of others, and by disregarding her own wishes earns salvation for her spirit. The picture is ambitious in theme, earnestly acted by Miss Reed, Bennett Southard and Isabel MacGregor, and creditably produced by Director John Ince. The many double exposures were finely handled.

"A Voice in the Wilderness"

"Stingaree," Second Episode—Two Reels—E. W. Hornung's Famous Hero Played by True Boardman.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

SERIES pictures are big money getters these days and perhaps no better name could be found to advertise one of them than that of E. W. Hornung, author of "Raffles" and popular writer of tales full of action that he is. Then this same "Stingaree" is perhaps his best work for filming in a series to appeal to the general picture-loving public. Surely the second episode, "A Voice from the Wilderness," makes an offering worthy of attention, for it both excites and amuses. There is human nature in it and situation. It is well acted and the direction is full of good things. One misses perfection of photography, though many of its scenes are perfectly taken, and as a whole it can be safely termed adequately serviceable.

The spectator will be well satisfied with the work of True Boardman, as the gentleman bandit, and with that of Paul Hurst, as his hearty partner, somewhat more elemental than "Stingaree" himself and hard, at times to restrain as though he did not quite understand the more humane workings of his master's mind. Marin Sais is as usual his sweetheart of old, before he became an outlaw. The crux of this episode is "Stingaree's" coming, with revolvers out, to the musicale at which her mistress (Ollie Kirkby) of the hideous voice is taking all the reluctant honors—just a different kind of hold-up. The two bandits enter and make Marin sing, and the audience though cowed is enthusiastic at the end. Thomas Lingham, as usual with him, gives a convincing character that helps the fun and the story not a little. There are many good bits of spontaneous humor at which one will laugh at once. The handling of the details reflects credit on James W. Horne, the producer of the series.

"The End of the Road"

A Spectacular Thunderstorm and Flood Are Features of This American Mutual Masterpicture.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IF AN exhibitor is looking for a picture with action from start to finish, a picture containing two highly spectacular reels and a story that carries suspense right up to the closing scenes, he will find it in this five-part photoplay produced by the American Company and released through the Mutual Masterpicture service. When we meet Paul Harvard, a young northerner destined to fall in love with a beautiful southern girl, and when we learn that a homestead is threatened by a mortgage, also that a secret service man is intent upon checking the nefarious trade of moonshiners, there is reason to expect another version of an oft-repeated tale. But let it be stated to the credit of the producers that "The End of the Road" soon passes out of the conventional rut and becomes an exceptionally stirring photoplay.

To the director and the players, more than the author, must go first credit for the strength of the last three reels. It is not unusual to see a violent storm pictured on the screen, but it is exceptional to find scenes of such startling realism as those contained in this production, and the outbreak of the elements, quite appropriately, comes at the dramatic climax of the story. A frame house is washed away in the rushing torrent of an overflowing river, and tossed about in the rapids we see the young hero struggling to save the life of a man who had misjudged him. It is all very thrilling and the most difficult scenes were handled with rare skill by the director.

Nor is interest allowed to drop at the close of these spectacular incidents. Vital points in the story still remain to be settled and in meeting them opportunities for effective drama are not overlooked. Harold Lockwood, playing the lead, shares the honors in this picture with May Allison, William Stowell, William Ehfe and others in a large cast.

"The Masqueraders"

Hazel Dawn Charms in a Five-Part Famous Players Subject That Is Well Made.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IT is an interesting story that is told in this five-part Famous Players adaptation of Henry Arthur Jones' play. James Kirkwood is the producer, and he has selected backgrounds of English atmosphere that finely fit the tale. The interiors, too, are of unusual depth, the great home of the Skenes being an example.

Hazel Dawn has the part of Dulcie Larondie, the girl of good birth but without means who marries a man of wealth because of his wealth and ignores the offer of marriage from the man she loves. Miss Dawn is finely fitted to portray the character that in this subject falls to her—she has the lightness of touch, the vivacity, the qualities of goodfellowship to draw to her, a barmaid, all the men who visit the Stagg Inn following the hunt; she has the poise and the grace that adorn the perfect hostess when as the mistress of the Skene mansion she sits at the end of the long table opposite Sir Brice.

Frank Losee as Sir Brice Skene gives a strong performance. As the Englishman of estate but spendthrift proclivities, the man accustomed to having his own way, in affairs of the heart as in other matters, he is commanding. Elliott Dexter as David Remon, the lover who wins out only after Dulcie has found from four years' experience with Sir Brice that her first match is impossible, gives a fine portrayal.

There is an absence of snap in the first two reels, but the action picks up at this point and runs smoothly and rapidly to the dramatic conclusion. There are situations of power in the scenes where for the benefit of a charity the privilege of kissing Dulcie is auctioned off to the highest bidder, and those in the home of Sir Brice, where the host, intoxicated, precipitates trouble and in the end meets his own death at the hand of the blackmailer he has just previously tried to kill; the turning of the cards to decide whether Skene takes Remon's fortune or Remon wins Skene's wife and daughter.

Scene from "The Masqueraders" (Famous Players).

Having finished the production of "The Blood of Our Brothers," the Centaur Star Feature release on the Mutual program for October, David Horsley has started work on the November release of this brand. He has selected a scenario entitled "Could a Man Do More?" written by Crane Wilbur, who was also responsible for "The Blood of Our Brothers." Besides being the author of "Could a Man Do More?" Mr. Wilbur will play the leading part. The subject is to be in three reels and will be released November 24.

"Sweet Alyssum"

A Selig Photodrama, in Five Parts, of Intense Interest, with Tyrone Power, Kathlyn Williams and Edith Johnson in the Leading Roles.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

I WILL venture to say that few, if any of those who view Selig's screen version of Charles Major's novel, "Sweet Alyssum," will go away with a half-hearted opinion of its strong photodramatic merits. There is not a spot in the whole five reels that can be called tame or commonplace. The story is big with strong situations and stirring climaxes and the web is never worn so thin that it fails to keep the spectator on the eager tip-toe of expectancy.

Scene from "Sweet Alyssum" (Selig).

The good and the evil in human life are brought out with a realism that excludes anything pertaining to the melodramatic. The film version is just an exciting, heart-interesting story of what might have occurred in ordinary life, in which the inexorable law that governs wrong and right living metes out punishment and due award in the end.

Director Campbell is to be commended for smoothing over the two tragedies that occur in about the middle of the story. The erring wife and the rich factory owner, who has lured her to ruin are both claimed by death—she by her own hand and he by accident—yet in such a way that the spectator is not shocked by the sight of the death of either. The heart is touched rather by the anguish of the wronged husband, as he bends over the dead body of his wayward wife and kisses the beautiful face, in token of his great sorrow and forgiveness.

Tyrone Power and Miss Kathlyn Williams can claim subtle acting in the respective parts of Robert Garlan, the rich factory owner, and of Daisy Brooks, wife of the night watchman in the Garlan factory. I mean acting before the camera that partakes of psychological significance, where a gesture accompanied by a slight change in the facial aspect and of the eye exposes the hidden secrets of the soul.

Take Miss Williams, for instance, when as Daisy Brooks she asks her husband for a new dress. Her feminine love for pretty dresses and her disgust for the begrimed skirt she wears while cooking over the stove are eloquently expressed in a disdainful touch of the loathed article of apparel and by a toss of her pretty head and a hard pressing of lips under gleaming eyes. Or again, watch her in the scene where Robert Garlan offers a roll of bills to her husband after he has just escaped with his life from the attack of the burglars, who had attempted to rob the factory safe. Roanoke Brooks, the independent employee, who feels that he has only done his duty, gently pushes the bills away. But not so on the part of his wife, Daisy. Her eyes and face reflect cupidity in its full measure, while one hand presses the arm of her husband in token that she wishes him to accept the gift, while the other hand holds her satchel wide open to receive it.

That other scene in her home, in the presence of her infant child, where she deliberates with herself as to whether she shall retain the same bills—which have been surreptitiously placed in her satchel by Robert Garlan, when they were drinking a glass of wine clandestinely on the day of the attempt to rob the safe—affords another fine illustration of the subtle acting referred to. Daisy Brooks dies all too soon in "Sweet Alyssum" in the case of such a capable actress as Miss Williams.

Tyrone Power is equally effective in expressing clearly his inmost thoughts by photo-dramatic acting. After the discovery by Roanoke Brooks of his wife's pretty clothes and hat in their only bedroom, and Daisy has saved herself from exposure for a time by lying, Mr. Power shows that Brooks, while wishing to believe his wife whole-heartedly, has a lurking doubt. We have seen that doubt once before on his face, on the day he was felled by the burglars, as he is standing in the door of the factory and catches sight of his wife and Garlan before they drive off in the carriage of the latter. A scowl of jealousy and anger clouds the face of Brooks for the instant at the time, but is succeeded gradually by the spirit of belief in his wife's goodness, after a mighty shrug of his big frame.

Edith Johnson is refreshing and piquant in the title role. Her part is made still stronger by the strong opposite furnished by Wheeler Oakman in the role of Wynne Garlan. The Robert Garlan of Frank Clark and the Thurlow of Harry Lonsdale are both fine characterizations. But we must not lose sight of little Gene Frazer, who plays the part of Sweet Alyssum when she was a baby. Little Gene is a smiling, winsome darling, and I waft her my purest and sweetest kiss.

"Still Waters"

Marguerite Clark Scores in Famous Players Subject in Which a Country Circus and a Canal Boat Figure.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IT IS an apt title that of "Still Waters," the five-part Famous Players subject featuring Marguerite Clark. Of still waters we see much—the mirrorlike surface of a Pennsylvania canal—and the film records these and their surroundings in all their serenity and pictorial beauty. The photography of this subject is one of its outstanding qualities. By no means, however, does "Still Waters" depend on its fine camera and laboratory work for its interest. There is a story, written by Edith Barnard Delano, that runs smoothly and entertainingly. There are many touches of comedy, too, that alternate with the more dramatic phases of the action.

Marguerite Clark scores as the girl brought up on a canal boat by her grandfather. Much of the charm of the picture lies in the simple coquetry of the unsophisticated maiden infatuated by a young country doctor. It is a character conceived by a woman and interpreted by one of her own sex. On the psychological side it will interest and amuse men accustomed to the ways of women who try to conceal those emotions which for the moment may be uppermost; and to these same women the success of Nesta may afford an interesting study in the value of frank revelation as compared with the policy of concealment—provided always the former be fortified by great personal charm and wonderful naivete.

A sure-enough country circus is another of the factors in the picture. There are present all the paraphernalia and panoply of the time-honored periodical rural invasion which constitutes so great an event in country life. The atmosphere is well maintained. When Nesta's grandfather, remembering how a circus had robbed him of Nesta's mother, refuses her permission to attend, the young woman arrays herself in the abbreviated professional finery of her mother and mounts the canal boat horse just purchased. When the animal hears the strident notes of the calliope his circus training impels him to start at a gallop for the show. It is when his little rider is thrown and apparently injured inside the big tent that the doctor is summoned. The following scenes—of the despair of the grandfather, his reconciliation with his long lost daughter, the rapid recuperation of Nesta when she hears her grandfather promise the doctor that if he can save his patient's life he may marry her—are of alternating comedy and drama. The denouement is a happy one.

"My Old Dutch"

Universal Presents Albert Chevalier and Florence Turner in a Five-Part Picture of Remarkable Appeal.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN was reputed once to have said that God must have loved the common people—he made so many of them. Surely "My Old Dutch," a five-part Universal subject to be released Nov. 22, will appeal to every last one of this great host—and likewise also to the uncommon people, if any of these there be. For it is a plain tale of two of God's humblest creatures and, too, of his noblest. The story carries Joe Spudd and his good wife who was Sal Grey through forty years of everyday life; through joy and sorrow, through periods of high expectation and bitter disappointment—but through it all there runs the wonderful affection between the peddler of green groceries and his sweet-faced courageous helpmeet.

Scene from "My Old Dutch" (Universal).

Albert Chevalier and Arthur Shirley have written a story that will live. It is an adaptation of Chevalier's best song—the one that has moved to laughter and to tears its thousands all over the world. The picturization has strengthened the original. Larry Trimble has produced the script, and for his backgrounds he has the quaint streets and homes of old London. Mr. Trimble has been in England nearly three years on his present sojourn, and we may be sure he knows the men and women to whom he introduces us.

Mr. Chevalier and Florence Turner are Joe and Sal. Of the former it may be said right here he is a remarkable screen actor. His expressive face reveals with the eloquence of the artist just those emotions he aims to portray. He lives before the camera the character he has so many times depicted on the stage.

Miss Turner is ideal in the role of the devoted wife who spends on her son the small fortune that falls to her. Sal and Joe aim to raise the boy a gentleman. He is sent to school in his infancy and his parents do not see him until he is man grown. There are in this picture many situations that stir, but none of these is greater than that of the moment when the son, after greeting his parents rather coolly, suddenly turns and embraces his mother. One of the bright sides of this many-sided story is the transformation of the youngster from a cad to a man.

"My Old Dutch" is a rare picture, great in its simplicity, strong in its appeal, and splendidly played by its two principals. It is wholesome. It is a story that might have come from between the covers of a Dickens—with its sunshine and shade, its quaint types, its Life.

"The Lily and the Rose"

Five-Reel Triangle Produced by Paul Powell Under the Supervision of David W. Griffith.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE story of a young wife neglected by her worldly husband for the sake of a fascinating "other woman," "The Lily and the Rose" does not depict the husband's eventual repentance and return home, there to have his hand joined to that of his faithful and forgiving spouse by their little child. When he finds the "other woman" to be as false to him as he has been to his wife, he puts a blot on his family name, on the future of his child and on whatever reputation he may have personally enjoyed by killing himself. This is all in strict accord with the traditions of French drama, from some example of which the story was probably derived, and the treatment is in harmony with the subject.

Lillian Gish, with her canary-like movements, wears some ravishing costumes, remarkable examples of originality and good taste, but her role as a jeunne fille is necessarily colorless and her opportunities are scant. Rozsika Dolly—what a compound!—is exceedingly shapely as the "other woman," and we are not permitted to lose sight of that fact. She is not only a danseuse, but she goes down to find out exactly what the wild waves are saying in a gauze veil and disports on the beach when no one but her protector and the audience out in front are looking. Quite naturally, under the circumstances, the modest young wife keeping within the bounds of convention, the danseuse wins. "The Lily and the Rose" is distinctly a sex drama.

"Aloha Oe"

Five-Reel Triangle Kay-Bee Produced by Thomas H. Ince and Featuring Willard Mack.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

AN INTERESTING story in spite of the fact that a form of construction is used that ordinarily destroys interest, "Aloha Oe" owes its charm almost entirely to the treatment of Ince. This does not mean that Willard Mack and Enid Markey do not respond to all the requirements of their respective roles, that of Mack being crowded with physical activity, for they round out and complete the work in a fashion truly artistic, but it is the treatment after all that counts in this case. Ince has shown some of the convincing power in handling his subject that marked his first work in the Kay Bee organization, an ability to handle large masses of people at a time without detriment to the psychology of leading characters, a rare gift even to-day.

"Aloha Oe" starts with a trial for murder, in which Mack appears as a dissipated and talented attorney for the defense. Practically all the scenes take place in a court room, but intense interest is aroused and sustained until he wins his case. The characters are then practically all dropped and a new set of stirring adventures set up on shipboard, where the brilliant young lawyer has been sent to rid him of the drink habit. Next he is wrecked in the Pacific and finds his way to a primitive people and the heart of Kalaniweo, a southsea island Princess. It is doubtful if many directors could have maintained a line of direct interest under the circumstances, but it is charmingly and successfully done, through admirable handling of details, a work the more creditable because of its many manifest difficulties.

"The Truth About Helen"

Grace Williams and Robert Conness in a Four-Reel Edison Drama of Love and Politics.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WILLIAM ADDISON LATHROP is the author of "The Truth About Helen." The photoplay has many excellent qualities. It deals with the life of to-day, and love and politics are about equally blended through its four acts. Although somewhat over-plotted and a trifle slow in stating its problem, it gathers a fair amount of speed, once the action starts, and holds the interest to the end. It also contains a warning to romantic young women with a tendency to elope. Helen Moore, the daughter of a clergyman, runs away with Raoul Kent, a fast young man of whom her father does not approve. Kent takes Helen to a suburban hotel, promising to marry her in the morning. The to-be-expected happens, and Helen is rescued by Hugh Graham, a young politician, who puts himself in the power of his opponents by his friendly act. The next time Hugh meets Helen she is the guest of Senator Foote, in Washington. Graham mistakes Helen's relations with the senator and follows them home. Kent, who is a nephew of the senator, attempts to rob his uncle of important papers, and is prevented by Hugh. In the struggle Kent is killed. Later, when Graham runs for Congress he is threatened with having the affair with Helen at the hotel exposed. The girl clears his name and Hugh learns that she has been living in the Foote home as companion to the senator's wife. A level-headed newspaper editor helps to straighten matters out and the last reel closes with the proper ending.

As already intimated, a lesser quantity of plot and a correspondingly closer weaving of incidents would have resulted in more workmanlike construction. The subject is thoroughly dramatic, deals with characters and incidents that are worth while, and the photoplay has been given the advantages of a competent cast and equally competent direction by Frank McGlynn. Grace Williams makes an attractive and appealing figure of Helen, and Robert Conness is an able impersonator of the young politician. Harry Linson, Augustus Phillips, Carleton King, Bigelow Cooper, Robert Brower, Herbert Prior, George Wright and Mrs. Wallace Erskine assist in maintaining the acting on a high level of merit.

Kleine Finishes "Bondwomen" with Maude Fealy.

"Bondwomen," the remarkable story written especially for Maude Fealy's film premier under the George Kleine management, was given its finishing touches at the Bronx Studios last week. It is said to be Miss Fealy's masterpiece. "Bondwomen" was carefully prepared and submitted to Miss Fealy prior to its making so that the scenario might contain the benefit of her suggestions. The result was to greatly increase the dramatic strength of the script, as many bits of business were added with which Miss Fealy is familiar and which she does especially well. "Bondwomen" exploits a theme well known to many housewives whose husbands believe them incapable of managing the family exchequer.

"Bondwomen" will be released through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service Dec. 15.

"The Nature Man"

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

SPORTSMEN, the normal boy whose dream of happiness centers around a camp in the woods, all lovers of nature, in fact, irrespective of age or sex, will find in "The Nature Man" a picture after their own hearts. These five reels, lacking the usual photoplay story, may not be exactly adapted to all motion picture theaters; none the less thousands of men, women and children will gladly pay to see them. They will find one of the most stirring depictions of a man's experiences when thrown on his own resources in the wilderness ever presented on the screen. Much of this picture is fact that is stranger, more interesting, and more thrilling than fiction.

A few years ago newspapers and magazines carried long accounts of the adventures of Joseph Knowles, who penetrated the heart of the Maine woods near Spencer Lake, without food, unarmed and, according to the story, without clothes. The Universal Company evidently persuaded Mr. Knowles to repeat his adventures, the only difference being that this time he had a cameraman for a companion and covered his nakedness with a shirt and a pair of trousers. It is difficult to believe that he could have lived through more thrilling experiences—running rapids on a log raft of his own designing, buffeted against rocks when the raft is overturned, fighting wild animals with such crude weapons as he can fashion without tools, facing starvation and the cold of a Maine winter. The picture is an inspiring illustration of the ability of a strong man to survive under the most trying of conditions.

There are many scenes in "The Nature Man" that call for mention, either because of their educational quality, their beauty, or the thrills which they cannot fail to carry. Audiences will marvel at scenes such as those presenting the fight between a badger and a wild cat, also those in which Knowles trees a bear and then manages to strangle it with a rope. Exhibitors appealing to patrons of the better class will find appreciative spectators for this Universal offering.

"The Strife Eternal" (Mutual).

More than 4,000 persons, including a cast of noted screen players, headed by Miss Blanche Forsythe, are presented in "The Strife Eternal," a colossal production in five reels and over 200 scenes, to be released by the Mutual Film Corporation Nov. 25 as a Mutual Masterpicture.

This production depicts the enthralling romance of Jane Shore, favorite of King Edward IV of England, who rose from the sphere of a humble goldsmith's wife to a life of lavish splendor at the English court to finally end her existence as a beggar in the streets of London. The story as revealed in "The Strife Eternal" forms a most tragic narrative.

Vividly depicted on the screen, the drama is a pageant of beauty. Old London forms a quaint, mediaeval background for gracefully moving throngs of gorgeously clad people, the pomp of the processional, the festivities of the court, the gayeties of the guilds and the artisans. Exceptionally interesting are the wonderful battle scenes, in several of which between 3,000 and 3,500 men are employed. These scenes represent as nearly as possible the hoisting of the Lancastrians, King Edward's return from Flanders and the landing of his vast hordes of fighting men at Ravenspur,

"Madame Butterfly"

In Atmosphere of Old Japan Mary Pickford in Famous Players Subject Portrays Tragic Heroine of Song and Story.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

FINELY acted, splendidly staged and beautifully photographed is "Madame Butterfly," the five-part adaptation by the Famous Players of John Luther Long's well-known story. In the role of Cho-Cho-San, the little Japanese woman who serves as a toy for an American naval officer on a few weeks' shore leave in the Flowery Kingdom, Mary Pickford is strong. She plays her part with a deftness and sympathy that draw out the deep pathos in the life of Cho-Cho-San, and she does not overlook the opportunities for moments of gayety.

Scene from "Madame Butterfly" (Famous Players).

"Madame Butterfly" will bring deserved honor to Sid Olcott, its producer, for the infinite care and artistry with which his work has been done. He has gone to great lengths to secure atmosphere. For his exteriors he has extensive Japanese gardens—miniature lakes, walks, diminutive trees, buildings, jinrikashas, the man-drawn vehicles; boats, and flowers. His interiors bear the same evidence of high craftsmanship. His players portray with fidelity all the extravagances of Japanese customs, all the quaint ceremonies of ordinary intercourse, inside the homes and without. Then, too, the Japanese wedding is shown with a wealth of detail.

There is an excellent cast. Marshal Neilan makes no pretense of playing a heroic part as Lieutenant Pinkerton, who deserts his Japanese bride within a few weeks of his marriage. His portrayal is virile. Caesere Gravina as the Soothsayer stands out in the small part which falls to him. Olive West as Suzuki, the companion of Cho-Cho-San, has an important role and finely plays it. N. T. Carleton as the United States Consul gives a strong interpretation of Uncle Sam's representative abroad. Jane Hall as Adelaide, the American wife of the false lieutenant, fails to win or is not allowed to win sympathy; her work is colorless. W. M. Rale as the Nakodo, the marriage broker, is good, and so is David Burton as the prince. The baby? Why, the infant-Jap at times "hogs the show." He is great. The mothering he gets from Cho-Cho-San seems more like life than art.

Dozens of Japanese men and women are seen in support of the star. A big United States cruiser off in the distance adds to the illusion on the naval side.

"Madame Butterfly" is a thing of beauty. The story interests and at times moves, but the production charms all the way.

"At Bay" Completed.

George Fitzmaurice, whose productions are being released under the Gold Rooster brand of Pathe Freres, has completed his latest feature, "At Bay," and it has been approved by the Pathe organization as one of his finest productions.

Fitzmaurice's cast, by the way, is one of the highest salaried if not the highest ever employed in pictures. Florence Reed is leading woman, and she is supported by Frank Sheridan, Charles Waldron, Lyster Chambers and De Witt Jennings, each one of them a Broadway favorite. The casting was done by Ouida Bergere.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"COLTON, U. S. N." (Vitagraph).

Cyrus Townsend Brady's "Colton, U. S. N.," a smashing navy drama just completed by the Vitagraph Company under the direction of Paul Scardon, is replete with the thrills of daring deeds performed by Uncle Sam's heroes and the tenseness on board ship as the huge fighting machines prepare for action in order to suppress an uprising in a country situated South of the Equator.

Two unusually interesting features in "Colton, U. S. N.," are fleet maneuvers by fifteen battleships, four torpedo boat destroyers and three colliers, under command of Vice-Admiral Henry T. Mayo, U. S. N., and a thrilling series of pictures of a landing of 280 marines, getting away from their battleships and making a landing on shore through the surf, and their advance in battle formation against a supposed enemy.

"Colton, U. S. N." (Vitagraph).

After finishing the scenes at Newport, the company went to Annapolis, Maryland, where the Naval Academy served as a background for tense moments as well as adding color to the story by showing glimpses of social life, in which the Cadets were prominent.

The principal players concerned in the enactment of "Colton, U. S. N.," included Charles Richman, Eleanor Woodruff, James Morrison, Zena Keefe, Anders Randolf, Charles Wellesley and Thomas Mills. It will be released as a Blue Ribbon Feature in five parts and promises to equal in spectatular value any naval picture that has heretofore been done by a moving picture company.

ELLIOT & SHERMAN GET GREAT NORTHERN SUBJECTS.

The Elliot & Sherman Film Company, the well known firm of Minneapolis, has recently acquired the following Great Northern productions for its territory: "The Heart of Lady Alaine," featuring the celebrated tragedienne, Miss Betty Nansen; "Pro Patria," featuring Valdemar Psilander, the monarch of the silent drama, and "John Redmond, the Evangelist," also featuring Valdemar Psilander.

"A WOMAN OF THE WORLD" IS READY.

The Terriss Feature Film Co., whose releases through the Picture Playhouse Film Co., Inc., have been coming along quite regularly during the past few months, are about to give the exhibitors another big dramatic subject entitled "A Woman of the World." Prints of the feature have been prepared and distributed among the Picture Playhouse offices throughout the country.

"A Woman of the World" is the picture which Tom Terriss and his associates made in New York during the summer which has just passed and which got not a little notoriety by reason of the unusual "stunts" used in the making of it. A high-powered automobile was driven over the Palisades one afternoon to get one big dramatic climax and another afternoon Rector's, the internationally known restaurant at Broadway and Forty-sixth street, was turned into a motion picture studio for a little while in order that a big banquet scene might be reproduced with exceptional splendor.

The new feature is said to have a story of unusual power and provides a big opportunity for the display of the stellar qualities which have made Tom Terriss so favorably known among theatergoers throughout this country and England.

PIONEER GETS "POLAR BEAR" FEATURES.

The Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, 126 West 46th street, New York, has secured the exclusive rights to "Polar Bear" features, produced by the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West 40th street, for the entire state of New York and northern New Jersey.

"Polar Bear" features will be released twice a month. These productions, in every detail up to the Great Northern high standard of quality, will be adaptations of well known plays and based upon novels and scenarios written by internationally renowned authors.

Nathan Hirsh, president of the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, has an exceptionally advantageous proposition to submit to all exhibitors in his territory who are desirous to obtain these high-class feature photoplays.

"THIS IS THE LIFE" (Mustang).

The three-reel "Mustang" motion picture adaptations of the famous "Buck Parvin" stories by Charles E. Van Loan, which are being produced at the American Film Company's Santa Barbara studios, are being highly praised by film fans. The clean, healthy, subtle humor of this famous author, transferred to the screen by able directors and an all-star cast of actors and actresses, gives the film-going public a delightfully new and entertaining type of comedy.

The third of this series is "This Is the Life," being the story of a society-loving woman with a mania for acting in the "movies." Her husband, a quiet, retiring man, at first remonstrates, then finally gives his consent, having previously interviewed the director and producer of the objective motion picture company. The result is that Addie Gribble (Adele Farrington) is added to the cast and put through a series of nerve-testing, hair-raising stunts that entirely cure her desire to be a movie actress.

Buck Parvin (Art Acord) has some dramatically comical situations that are deftly handled with all of the dry, convincing wit and humor of this famous cowboy-actor; and Miss Farrington goes the route of her dangerous and thrilling actions without a hint of hesitancy.

Scene from "This Is the Life" (Mustang).

Taken all in all, a strong cast under the able direction of William Bertram brings to the screen a story that is delightfully interesting and thoroughly worthy of the reputation of perfection enjoyed by the American Film Company. This film is to be released on the Mutual Program Saturday, November 13.

"A POLAR ROMANCE" (Centaur).

Irving Cummings makes his debut as a David Horsley star in "A Polar Romance," a two-reel Centaur Feature to be released on the Mutual program November 18. Prominent in Mr. Cummings' support are those of the Bostock animals from the North, including polar bears, seals, etc.

Most of the scenes of the story are laid in the Arctic Circle and some effective views of the land of ice have been obtained. The bleakness of this country makes the situation of Jennessen, the explorer, played by Irving Cummings, cast overboard from his exploration vessel by conspirators, marooned on a floating iceberg and later cast on a barren island of ice, all the more tragic and increases the interest in the picture. It is in these scenes that the animals are called into play and some very novel animal scenes staged.

Scene from "A Polar Romance" (Centaur).

There is a special interest attached to the picture since it is the first of this character Mr. Horsley has produced, all of the previous Centaur releases having had to do with stories of Africa and India. The change is in line with Mr. Horsley's plan to release animal subjects varying in nature, a plan he is well equipped to carry out with his exceptional studio facilities and the great collection of Bostock animals.

Jay Hunt, who has directed some of Mr. Horsley's biggest successes, is responsible for the staging of this picture, in which appear besides Mr. Cummings and the animals a big cast of players, including Josephine West, Mrs. Jay Hunt, Charles Whitman, Fred Gamble and Clarence Baker.

"LOVE, PEPPER AND SWEETS."

This Vim release of December 3 promises to be particularly funny, as this is the first Vim release in which the three comedians—Pokes, Jabbs and Runt—all work together. Pokes is the star boarder, while Jabbs and Runt are the neglected ones. Even in the matter of love Pokes has the best of them, while Jabbs and Runt are the "also rans." The efforts of Jabbs and Runt to beat out Pokes furnish the plot, but they find their task is a Herculean one.

Scene from "Love, Pepper and Sweets" (Vim).

Burns and Stull appear as Pokes and Jabbs, Billy Ruge as Runt and Miss Ethel Burton as the girl for whom they fall.

"THE PAPERED DOOR" (Essanay).

This photoplay is adapted from one of the clever stories by Mary Roberts Rinehart. It carries out all the subtlety and delicacy of touch for which the author is noted. It abounds in action and is thrillingly intense throughout, and while it is a bitter tragedy throughout the denouement is eminently satisfactory. Ruth Stonehouse takes the part of a woman who is abused by a rascally husband. He neglects her shamefully for another woman. Finally in a drunken brawl he kills another man and sneaks back to his wife for protection. She conceals him in a closet and papers over the door so that no one will suspect he is in the house. The search for him fails, but a sheriff is stationed outside her home to keep watch. Finally she invites him into the house to get warm on a blizzardy night. He falls asleep and she lets her husband out. He tries to board a freight and is killed. Edmund F. Cobb, in the role of the husband, does excellent work. He portrays all the various emotions of the cowardly husband, who runs from a swaggering bully into a being of abject fear ,with great skill. The story itself is drawn from life and is typical of the small town home where the wife is a sweet, loving woman, but too weak and too conscientious to turn from the man who abuses her, and the husband a coward and bully.

Scene from "The Papered Door" (Essanay).

"THE DOUBLE CROSS" (Cub).

George Ovey's new leading woman, Miss St. Aubour, makes her debut in the Cub Comedies with the release on November 12 of "The Double Cross," which incidentally is heralded as one of the funniest pictures ever turned out at the Cub studios in Los Angeles.

Miss St. Aubour plays the part of Jack's aunt and is incidentally the cause of the rapidly moving series of complications which provide the basis for the fun of this picture.

Scene from "The Double Cross" (Cub).

In the cast besides George Ovey and Miss St. Aubour are George George, Gordon McGregor, Janet Sully, Louis FitzRoy and others. The picture was made under the direction of Milton Fahrney.

"THE SHRINE OF HAPPINESS" (Balboa).

The first five-reel photoplay ever hand-colored is "The Shrine of Happiness," a forthcoming Balboa release on Pathe's Gold Rooster program. It is a simple heart story featuring Jackie Saunders, supported by William Conklin and Paul Gilmore. D. F. Whitcomb, one of Balboa's staff writers, wrote the scenario.

At the beginning of the story, Miss Saunders is seen in her favorite delineation—that of a child of nature, a sort of mountain sprite. Being left an orphan, she goes to an old friend of her father in the city. This is the part played by William Conklin. His son is done by Paul Gilmore.

Scene from "The Shrine of Happiness" (Balboa).

Bertram Bracken, the dean of Balboa's producers, directed this picture and it is replete with the deft touches for which he is so well known. "The Shrine of Happiness" does not depend on so-called thrills or punches. It is gripping because of the intensely humane thread that runs through the story. Miss Saunders plays a naive part with girlish sweetness, while Mr. Conklin's work is distinguished by manly reserve.

Pathe's color treatment of the subject is bound to make it a big feature when released, adding immeasurably to the effectiveness and convincing force of this Horkheimer production.

KALEM'S "VENTURES OF MARGUERITE" POPULAR.

According to advices received by Kalem company from exhibitors who are showing "The Ventures of Marguerite," this series has taken its place as the fashion authority of moving pictures and the gowns worn by Marguerite Courtot, who portrays the central character, are being accepted as criterions of advanced styles.

An innovation was established by Kalem company when this series was started recently, whereby Russek, of Fifth avenue, was commissioned to costume the beautiful star for the forthcoming episodes. As the result, Miss Courtot is shown in the advanced creations that are interesting Fifth avenue.

Scene from "A Society Schemer" (Kalem).

That this feature is proving particularly popular with the feminine photoplay patrons is apparent from the numerous letters received by Miss Courtot requesting for detailed descriptions of her various gowns. According to the exhibitors who have written Kalem, their patrons are already looking forward to "Marguerite Day," because of this fashion feature. At the same time, the writers express their gratification because of the fact that aside from the latter, the episodes are replete with dramatic action. As the result, the photoplays are popular with both sexes.

"The Veiled Priestess," and "A Society Schemer," are two of the November "Ventures." The first will be issued on Friday, November 19, while the second will be released Friday, November 26.

TO BLOW OR NOT TO BLOW.

Joe Brandt, general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, tells the following story in which he is made to say Sarah Bernhardt told him in a letter when she was negotiating for the Universal production of "Jeanne Dore":

"Mash notes, you call them, n'est ce pas"? she wrote. "Well. I received a very funny mash note once in a small town of your Far West. 'You are adorable,' my mash note ran, 'and I'd have preferred to send you orchids, but in this one-horse town I am reduced to molasses candy, of which I am forwarding you a two-pound bag. Will you take supper with me to-night? If you consent, blow your nose on the stage and I will understand.'

"And the worst of it was," continued the great Sarah, "I had a bad cold at the time and was afraid to blow my nose all evening!"

"A TANGLE IN HEARTS" (Casino).

Now another star twinkles in the heavens where each week the Gaumont company places a new one, following its policy of giving the public a new star with each production. This time it is John Daly Murphy, that inimitably suave comedian who makes the public laugh even when he merely rolls his eyes. Ever since Mr. Murphy ceased being a successful jockey and became a successful comedian, the whole country has been laughing at his humorous antics.

Scene from "A Tangle in Hearts" (Casino).

Mr. Murphy's name in front of a theater will have real drawing power, since he is so well established because of his work with Valeska Suratt, May Irwin, various Klaw & Erlanger comic operas, "The Laughing Husband" and "The Girl from Rector's." In "A Tangle in Hearts" Mr. Murphy appears as Harry Jones, a young man who attempts to save money by spending a quiet evening with a young lady, instead of going out with the boys. Mrs. Hart, the girl's mother, decides he is an eligible chap, and maneuvers so that he proposes to Rose, her daughter.

Rose is played by Miss Lucille Taft, who has made a big name for herself in Gaumont productions. Mr. Daly makes the part unroariously funny by his despairing solemnity when in trouble. Among those in his support are Mathilde Baring and Virginia Perry.

WAGNER IN WEST FOR STERLING.

Leon Wagner, of the Sterling Camera and Film Company, 145 West 45th street, New York, is now in the Central West with exhibition prints of "The Game of Three," "The Land of the Lost," "Over Niagara Falls" and "Richard III." Elsewhere in this issue, in a display advertisement, will be found more particulars concerning the above-mentioned features which Mr. Wagner is showing and disposing of by state rights. Mr. Wagner will be at Omaha, Neb., about Nov. 11. If interested address a post card or letter to him, care general delivery, post office, Omaha, and Mr. Wagner will call on you.

Charles Cherry Makes Film Debut

Frohman Star in Famous Players' Adaptation of Isaac Henderson's "Mummy and the Humming Bird."

CHARLES CHERRY, well known as the star of many Broadway successes, makes his motion picture debut by special arrangement with the Charles Frohman Company, in the Famous Players Film Company's adaptation of Isaac Henderson's great drama, "The Mummy and the Humming Bird." This subject is scheduled for release on Nov. 11 by Paramount.

Scene from "The Mummy and the Humming Bird" (Famous Players).

Mr. Cherry's delightful impersonation of the absent-minded peer who neglects his wife in order to devote his time to scientific experiments is one which he may justly be proud to add to the personal triumphs gained on the stage in support of such well known actresses as Mary Mannering, Henrietta Crosman, Maxine Elliott and Ethel Barrymore.

It is a brilliant play, depicting the crafty wiles of three able men whose efforts to out-think each other in this gripping struggle for the beautiful Lady Lumley forms an absorbing tale full of suspense.

Every effort has been made to give the piece the exquisite settings which it richly deserves. The views of the Lumley estate will prove especially pleasing to the critical eye.

In support of Mr. Cherry there appear Lillian Tucker, William Sorelle, Arthur Hoops, Claire Zobelle and others of equal merit.

THE CREST OF VON ENDHEIM (Reliance).

"The Crest of Von Endheim" is another of the poetic and stirring romances dealing with historical themes which have lately come from the pen of Francis Powers and have as Reliance features been produced by the author in person. Mr. Powers, it will be remembered, was some time stage director for David Belasco.

Scene from "The Crest of Von Endheim" (Reliance).

This feature has its plot beginning in northern Mexico soon after the fall of the Emperor Maximilian.

Madam Adoni Fovieri, formerly prominent in the support of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, is Gloriana. She gives a tender and eye satisfying interpretation of the romantic, staunch and true girl who so splendidly helps to establish her hero in his place. She is supported by the usual strong Reliance cast.

"ROMANTIC REGGIE" (Vitagraph).

"Sidney Drew Day," Friday, November 12, will be signalized by the Vitagraph Company with a typical Drew comedy, "Romantic Reggie," in which Mr. and Mrs. Drew are both happily cast. It was written by Templer Saxe and produced by Mr. Drew. It tells in delightfully pictured sequence the adventures of an exceedingly romantic young man with an unknown woman who hands him a card on which is written "You are my soul mate. Meet me midst the hills of Kuperskill." The fun develops in huge chunks when Reggie goes to meet his lady love followed by his sweetheart, who enjoys showing him up as the chaser of a crazy woman who has been captured and returned to her padded cell.

Scene from "Romantic Reggie" (Vitagraph).

VIM SECURES HELEN GILMORE.

Vim Comedies have secured the services of Helen Gilmore, popular for her clever screen characterizations. She comes to the Vim Players fresh from her triumphs in Universal comedies. Prior to that time she was for three seasons with the New York Hippodrome and on the road with the "Count of Luxenbourg.

Miss Gilmore will now appear regularly with the Vim funmakers and promises to be ready with an entirely new line of comic antics.

"THE BLACKMAILERS" (Terriss).

"The Blackmailers," a two-reel comedy which has just been released by the Terriss Feature Film Co. through the Picture Playhouse Film Co., Inc., is one of the first moving picture comedies with which the name of Tom Terriss, well-known legitimate actor, has been identified. Mr. Terriss says he started out to make a picture filled with action of the rough and ready kind which seemed so acceptable to photoplay fans and those who have seen "The Blackmailer" admit that he has accomplished his purpose. The picture was made at a popular summer resort in the vicinity of New York City and some of the most interesting comedy situations are ones in which the principals appear as bathers.

Scene from "The Blackmailers" (Terriss).

"THE SUBSTITUTE MINISTER" (American).

"The Substitute Minister" affords Miss Vivian Rich a part entirely to her liking, and this black-haired little film star scores a conquest therein.

"The Substitute Minister" also brings to the fore Alfred Vosburgh, a new star in the American firmament, who henceforth will play opposite Miss Rich in "Flying A" dramas.

The piece is the story of a young ministerial student who is led into evil ways. By a queer quirk of circumstances he finds himself masquerading as a country minister. The gentle influence of his housekeeper (Miss Rich) leads him to forsake the evil of his ways and struggle again to lead an upright, honest life. His deception, however, is discovered, but before his "flock" the false churchman confesses his sins. He does not plead for forgiveness, but forgiveness is unanimously given. The post of pastor which the young man held through misrepresentation is tendered and accepted. Truly repentant, the young man seeks the hand of her who led him back to the worthy path of life. Of course, he is accepted.

Scene from "The Substitute Minister" (American).

In "The Substitute Minister," Miss Rich is as pleasing as ever. If the picture is a criterion of Mr. Vosburgh's ability, it is safe to assert that his connection with "Flying A" dramas will be long and a source of much enjoyment to fans of the screen.

"THE PRINT OF THE NAILS" (Selig).

"The Print of the Nails" is a Selig Diamond Special in three reels, written by Mrs. Owen Bronson, and produced by Geo. N. Nichols. It is released through regular service on Thursday, November 18. It is a story of politics, the underworld and of love. An all-star cast, including Earle Foxe, Vivian Reed and Al. W. Filson, appear in this feature. There are a number of tense situations not the least of them being a raid by police officers on the underworld. Some elaborate scenic effects and beautiful photography add to the entertainment of this Selig Diamond Special.

The plot concerns Margaret Macy, a slum worker, and Tom Mason, mayor, who stands for reform. The political powers plot to discredit Mayor Mason and try to do so through Margaret Macy, who is the Mayor's friend. Through the machinations of the political "boss" the girl to whom Mayor Mason is engaged discredits him, and Margaret Macy is lured to a questionable resort for the purpose of a big newspaper story which will involve the Mayor. The Council prepares to remove the Mayor, but Margaret and her brother have secured evidence against the political ring. Mayor Mason's name is cleared and the gang have to face the law for their misdeeds.

EUGENE MULLIN TO WRITE AND DIRECT FOR VITAGRAPH.

Eugene Mullin, who has given to the screen a number of dramatic successes, several of which have been produced by the Vitagraph Company as Broadway Star and Blue Ribbon Features, has begun work on the production of "The Ruse," an original society drama, written by him with Joseph Kilgour in view as the hero. Mr. Mullin took as his theme "and the serpent in the guise of a friend invaded the peaceful calm of the happy home." A husband suspecting his wife's fidelity, resorts to an original ruse to put her to the test. The result is the series of happenings, startling, unusual and almost tragic, that culminates in the just punishment of the unprincipled home-wrecker. Mr. Kilgour, Naomi Childers, Charles Kent and Denton Vane will be seen in the portrayal of the principal characters in "The Ruse," which will be released by the Vitagraph Company as a Broadway Star Feature.

EDWIN ARDEN IN "THE GRAY MASK."

In the forthcoming World Film drama, "The Gray Mask," taken from the story of that title by Charles Wadsworth Camp, which was published in Collier's, Edwin Arden, the star, is given an opportunity to display again his capacity for that fine feeling for his part which has always characterized his work on the stage, and which has made him an actor of distinction.

It is the role of a detective. He must play in this picture a scientific detective who finds himself in predicaments of more than ordinary complication and danger. It is none of the swaggering, heavy set detective who dogs the footsteps of the villain with the usual murderous air.

Scene from "The Gray Mask" (World Film).

It is the slender, keen, scientific man, who puts his knowledge of science to work in solving his troubles, which the detective Mr. Arden interprets must be.

"The Gray Mask" is being directed by Frank Crane. It will be filled with the most hair-raising of thrills from beginning to end.

In it Mr. Arden will keep up the splendid reputation he has gained for himself in his brief career in the pictures.

NOVEL POSTERS PROMISED BY M-in-A.

Believing that in the making of comedy film too little attention has been paid by the manufacturers to the matter of posters, M-in-A Comedies have adopted a new policy. A poster department of experts has been employed and the company promises to turn out a comic poster more novel and attractive than has ever been displayed heretofore.

"In turning out a first class comedy film," says a leading member of the M-in-A forces, "why rest content with an ordinary poster? If the poster is to advertise a clever film, surely the poster should be clever too. We are going to deviate from the regular poster path and allow the exhibitor to display a one-sheet which will make the passerby smile and lure him in. Our posters are going to depict some situation of the photoplay in a semi-cartoonic manner."

Louis Geisenberg, well known in picture circles in New York, has been appointed general traveling representative of the American Correspondent Film Co. He left New York last week on a trip which will take him to the principal cities in the United States.

Initial Pallas Subject

Booth Tarkington's "The Gentleman from Indiana" Starring Dustin Farnum First Subject On Paramount Program.

THE initial production to be offered on the Paramount program by Pallas Pictures will be released Nov. 25 and presents Booth Tarkington's well known novel, "The Gentleman From Indiana," starring Dustin Farnum.

In producing this subject, Pallas Pictures has gone to unlimited pains and expense to give it a most pretentious background, as is evident in the elaborate sets and immense scenes which have been included in the photoplay. In order to get the desired atmosphere a replica of an entire Indiana town of true Hoosier type was built and mob scenes including over five hundred people are displayed with striking realism. Among the spectacular features presented are the mob riots, election parades and campaigns, an electric storm at night resulting in the destruction of many buildings, and a circus parade on which occasion the entire town turns out in true "circus day" style.

Scene from "The Gentleman from Indiana" (Pallas).

Many dramatic situations are intrusted to Dustin Farnum, which he handles in his usual effective manner. The supporting cast includes such artists as Winifred Kingston, Herbert Standing, Howard Davies, Page Peters, Signor Juan de la Cruz, Elsie Cort, Helen Eddy, C. Norman Hammond, Joe Ray and others of equal ability.

Frank Lloyd, the young director whose work in this production will readily class him with the foremost producers in this country, encountered many difficulties in staging Booth Tarkington's subject. Securing a terrific rain storm in rainless California was one of the problems which he had to solve. In order to get the desired effect, 14,000 gallons of water had to be carted from a well three miles away. His success in obtaining the desired results is said to have been marvelous and displays something new in the way of film directing. Many striking night scenes have been secured and Lloyd's handling of immense mobs demonstrate unusual ability. In the care of Fred Dobson, the photographic work offers many beautiful innovations. Night scenes and lightning flashes have been filmed with remarkable success and that the work of the photographer measures up with that of the star and the director is assured by the producers. Reports from the coast all indicate that the initial subject of Pallas Pictures will establish a high standard for the new Paramount producer from the start.

"The Nation's Peril"

A Lubin Production Dealing with the Question of Preparedness.

"THE NATION'S PERIL," the big Lubin feature film of the topic of the hour, our country's preparedness and the hyphenated Americans, which for the past four months has been under the course of construction by Director George Terwilliger and his Lubin company at Newport, R. I., has its finishing touches at the Lubin plant and is scheduled for release on November 22 through the V-L-S-E Inc. offices.

The picture is to be presented at Washington during the coming week before Secretaries Daniels and Garrison and the Army and Navy League, and then taken to Newport, R. I., where it will be viewed by the officers of the Newport Naval Training Station.

"The Nation's Peril" is truly a big picture in its every sense, and Director Terwilliger has ably acquitted himself in the production. The magnitude of the picture may be gathered from a short review of its tremendous scenes.

In it are shown the entire soldier, sailor and marine strength of the U. S. Atlantic fleet and the troops stationed at Newport—the entire U. S. Atlantic fleet in action—the actual sinking of a ship by shell fire from the battleships—a night artillery attack in which is destroyed an entire street built especially for the picture by Director Terwilliger—several mine explosions and the workings of the wireless stations.

In addition in appearance in the picture are to be seen Secretary Josephus Daniels with the entire Newport War College—Admiral Fletcher, Admiral Winslow of the Pacific fleet; Captain Roger Welles, Lieut.-Com. Frank Taylor Evans and Lieut. Ernest Durr, of the Naval Training Station at Newport; Captain Hugh Willoughby of the Naval Aviation Corps; Captain Newton and his staff of the U. S. S. Patterson; Captain Fitch and staff of the U. S. S. Yankton; Commander Watson of the U. S. S. Utah, and Captain W. S. Sims, commandant of the torpedo flotilla.

"THE ALSTER CASE" (Essanay).

A company of Essanay players under the direction of J. Charles Haydon is now at work making a five-act photoplay of "The Alster Case," taken from the novel of that title by Rufus Gillmore, author of "The Opal Pin," "The Mystery of the Second Shot" and other widely read detective novels.

The photoplay will be Essanay's December release on the V-L-S-E program. It is an intensely fascinating mystery play and carries out the stirring incidents of the book with great faithfulness of detail.

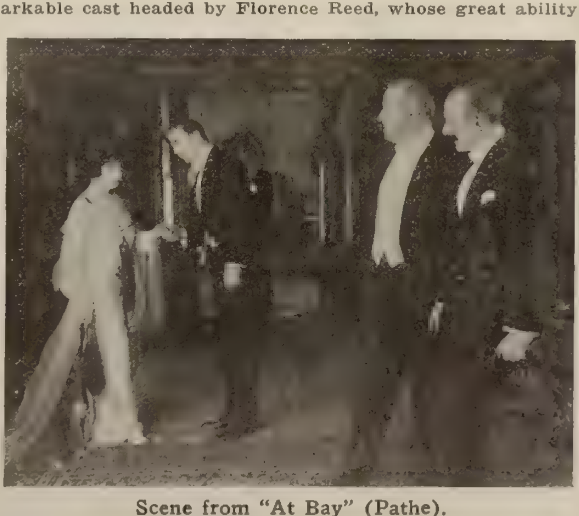
Bryant Washburn takes the leading masculine role and Miss Ruth Stonehouse the leading feminine part. The mystery surrounds the slaying of Mrs. Alster, and is solved in an unusual and thrilling manner at the climax of the play. The suspense is sustained until the very end, the finger of guilt pointing at several innocent persons, so that the discovery of the real slayer comes as a complete surprise.

WANTS UNIVERSAL TO FIND HER BOY.

Now the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is asked by a mother to assist her in the search for her lost boy. She is Mrs. Charles L. Glass, of 13 Lienau place, Jersey City, N. J., and says that her son, James Douglas Glass, aged 4 years, of fair complexion, with heavy light hair, cut Buster Brown style, double crowned, blue eyes, good teeth, full face, about 3 feet 6 inches tall, and weighing at the time 35 pounds. He was last seen in Greeley, Pike County, Penn., on May 12, 1915. He wore tan overalls with pink trimmings, white stockings, black shoes, no hat, and he does not talk very plainly. Mrs. Glass offers $500 reward for the return of her little son.

PATHE'S "AT BAY" (Gold Rooster Play).

George Fitzmaurice's latest Gold Rooster play, "At Bay," adapted from the famous play by George Scarborough, enjoys the distinction of being characterized by Charles Pathe himself as being beyond question the greatest picture yet put upon the Gold Rooster program. Those who saw "At Bay" upon the stage will remember that it is full of intensely dramatic situations, the natural result of its theme, the alliance of politics with the underworld. Mr. Fitzmaurice assembled a truly remarkable cast headed by Florence Reed, whose great ability is recognized by every follower of things theatrical. Such sterling high salaried players as Frank Sheridan, Lyster Chambers, De Witt C. Jennings and Charles Waldron give most efficient support. The beauty of the sets and locations, the artistic attention to the smallest details in addition to the splendid story and acting, round out a production which is as near perfection as the modern motion picture is capable. "At Bay" will be released November 19.



Scene from "At Bay" (Pathe).

PRINCIPALS IN "BLOOM CENTER" COMEDIES.

Since the inauguration of the Selig rural comedy series, "The Chronicles of Bloom Center," much admiration has been expressed for the principals whose adventures furnish the fun in this series. The types are so well played and so true to rural life that thousands of movie fans have requested more information anent the principals.

John Lancaster assumes the role of Postmaster Pash in "The Chronicles of Bloom Center." His work in this comedy series has won for him thousands of new admirers.

William Hutchinson.

Lyllian Leighton.

John Lancaster.

William Hutchinson has made a hit in the character of "Druggist Phil Pickel." His make-up and comical character delineation has made him a film favorite.

Lyllian Leighton enacts the part of "Mrs. Constable Plum" in the Bloom Center chronicles. Miss Leighton is at her happiest in motion picture comedy and she has proven one of the favorites in this comedy series.

MUTUAL TO SHOW BASEBALL PICTURES.

"The World's Championship Baseball Series of 1915" is the title of a release in two reels on the Mutual program for November 15. This special release is included in the regular program at no increase in rental charges to the exhibitor. For that week it replaces the Monday and Wednesday Novelty brand comedies.

These pictures were made by the World's Series Film Company, a company organized to co-operate with the National Commission. The Mutual has purchased the rights for the distribution of these pictures and is now making them available to exhibitors as part of the regular program service. Previously motion picture exhibitors have been able to get baseball pictures only as expensive specials.

The World's Series pictures are altogether remarkable films, showing all the thrilling plays and fine close-ups of the important personalities both in the game and among the spectators. One of the many interesting subjects is that portion of the film showing the flower-bedecked Presidential box. President Wilson is seen approaching with Mrs. Galt, his fiancee. He has some little difficulty with one of those "cussedly obstinate" folding chairs when he arranges a seat for Mrs. Galt's mother and a secret service man goes to his rescue. The President throws the ball into the diamond, it is put into play and then returned to him as a souvenir of the memorable occasion.

Scene from World's Champion Base Ball Series (Mutual).

C. O. Sprenger, a newspaper man who for many years was on the staff of the Denver Times and the Rocky Mountain News, and who for the past five years has been doing general publicity work in California, has been placed in charge of the publicity work for the David Horsley interests at the Los Angeles office.

Director William J. Dunn, of the Eagle Film Manufacturing & Producing Company, has left Chicago for Jacksonville, Fla., where the new company's outdoor studio is being erected, to oversee the installation of a number of scenic devices of his own invention.

"THE CAVE MAN" (Vitagraph).

"The Cave Man" has been produced by the Vitagraph Company under the direction of Theodore Marston, featuring Robert Edeson in the character of Haulick Smagg. The story was written by Gelett Burgess and originally produced in Providence, as a legitimate comedy-drama, with Mr. Edeson in the portrayal of the leading character. His familiarity with the leading character's possibilities became apparent when he began work on the story for the screen.

In producing "The Cave Man," Director Marston spared neither pains nor labor, used every known device and camera trick to enhance the value of its situations, and with Mr. Edeson, Fay Wallace, Lillian Burns and George de Beck in the enactment of the principal characters has turned out a screen story that for brilliancy, consummate artistry in the portrayal of the characters and photographic achievement sets a standard of exceptional quality. It is in five parts and is the most typically representative Blue Ribbon Feature yet announced by the Vitagraph Company for release.

ETHELMARY OAKLAND POPULAR.

Since her completion of the role of little "Amy Fisher" in the Charles K. Harris feature, "Hearts of Men" (formerly entitled "School Bells"), Ethelmary Oakland, the seven-year-old child, has had several unusual engagements. She played in "Stolen Orders," until it closed, and is at present engaged with the Boston Opera Company in "Madame Butterfly." She plays the role of a Japanese child, supposed to be three years of age, and Miss Tamaki Miura, the only Japanese prima donna, who sings the title role in the opera, is delighted with the child, and says that she is the most adaptable stage child she has ever seen.

Pavlowa, the Russian dancer, who waits in the wings to go on with the Russian ballet, after Ethelmary is taken off the stage, is also delighted with the child, and stops to pet her every time after her performance. "Hearts of Men," the picture in which Ethelmary Oakland will appear, will be released Nov. 8 through the World Film Corporation.

MISS ELEANOR FAIRBANKS GOES WITH GAUMONT.

The Gaumont policy of "new faces in each production" brings to the studios at Flushing Miss Eleanor Fairbanks, late star in "A Pair of Sixes." Miss Fairbanks closed in the Frazee farce to appear with Harry Vokes in the Casino Star Comedy, "The House Party," by Adrian Gil Spear. "Bud" Ross is also appearing in the same comedy. Miss Fairbank's last picture was "Tillie's Tomato Surprise" with Marie Dressler.

George Melford is resting before starting in on the second Goodrich picture, which is being especially written for the star by Hector Turnbull, of the Lasky photodramatic staff.

JACK PICKFORD IN "THE MAKING OF CROOKS."

Jack Pickford will make his initial appearance under the Diamond S trade mark when he appears in the strong character role of Toney, a pool shark, in the Selig Diamond Special in three reels, "The Making of Crooks," released Thursday, Dec. 16. Mr. Pickford will be supported by an all-star cast.

"The Making of Crooks" carries a strong moral lesson against the evils wrought by disreputable pool rooms. There are a number of tense situations and the methods by which young men are swindled by "pool sharks" are realistically shown. One of the most exciting scenes in the production is where Pickford and the daughter of the political boss escape from a Cabaret in a stolen automobile. The car collides with a speeding locomotive, is shattered into a hundred pieces and the lifeless body of the girl is carried on the pilot of the engine.

There is also a sensational raid on disreputable pool rooms in which hundreds of policemen in a large city participate.

PARKS' NEW FORT FAIRFIELD THEATER.

From John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World, Bangor.

WORK is progressing rapidly on the new motion picture house being erected by G. W. Parks in the rear of the Scates & Co. store at Fort Fairfield, Me. Moore Bros. are contractors and the building when completed will be one of the largest of its kind in this part of the state. It is expected that by the first of May the theater will be finished. It will be entirely of concrete, only the finish being of wood. The gallery will be large and will be approached from Main street through the Tyler block or from the side where the main entrance will be located. There will be ample provisions for fire. Two commodious fire escapes will be erected on the west side of the building and an escape will lead from the stage. An excellent concrete walk will be laid from Main street to the theater between the building occupied by the Fort Fairfield Clothing Company and the Tyler block.

SUNDAY NIGHT SERVICES IN BELFAST THEATER.

A novel experiment for Belfast, Me., will be tried on Sunday evening, Nov. 14, when a service will be conducted in the Nickel theater by Rev. Haraden S. Pearl, Rev. Arthur A. Blair and Rev. Arthur E. Wilson. In place of a sermon, a religious film of seven reels will be used. There will be appropriate music, the singing of old familiar hymns and an introductory service of religious nature. The ministers are acting as individuals and have not committed their churches in any way to this unusual program.

Much of the credit for the idea belongs to H. H. Maddocks, proprietor of the Nickel theater, whose family are members of the Congregational church

M. GRANBY BOOSTING THE BALL THROUGH MAINE.

Mitchell Granby, northern New England representative of the Fox corporation, was a visitor to Bangor on business this week and found the exhibitors so busy attending to their crowds that they have only a very short time to give to buying new pictures, but he has been disposing of a large number of productions nevertheless. Mr. Granby is boosting the coming Moving Picture Ball, to be held in Boston December 1, when the Fox company hopes to have Theda Bara present. He is furnishing exhibitors with free slides for the purpose of making known to audiences the fact that there will be a voting contest in connection with the ball.

Mr. Granby reports that theaters that have recently taken on Fox service are the Empire, William Gray, manager, Lewiston; Princess theater, Berlin, N. H.; Majestic, Rumford; Colonial, Augusta; Bijou, Skowhegan.

Officious and Meddlesome Interference

Manager J. A. Eslow, of Universal Exchange in Boston, Summoned by Secretary Fred Lake, of Fire Commission—Found Reels Being Cleaned.

It appears as though the Massachusetts exchange managers are facing a critical situation at the present time, which it will be to their advantage to fight. Secretary Fred Lake of the Massachusetts Fire Prevention Commission has started to wage war.

He has summoned J. A. Eslow of the New England Universal exchange into court for not having his reels in cans. He happened to visit Mr. Eslow's office as the reels were about to be cleaned. It will benefit every exchange manager in the state if they join together and help Mr. Eslow in his fight against such treatment as he has received from the fire commission secretary. If the state should win this case, it is very evident that victory will encourage Lake in his persecution.

It is also said that Lake has been trying to force the managers to use a certain type of film box for their reels.

A ROCHESTER COMBINATION.

By Billy Bison, 229 Oxford Ave., Buffalo, Correspondent Moving Picture World.

ON Nov. 5, according to a Rochester, N. Y., report, the Regent and Gordon moving picture theaters, of that city, have affiliated. The new arrangement does not affect the ownership of either property. The owners of the two houses have formed a holding company which will direct affairs of both theaters. The incorporators and directors for the first year are George E. Simpson and Jacob Gordon, of Rochester, and Nathan Gordon, of Boston. The object of the affiliation is to insure to both houses a continuance of the best film productions made. With the two theaters working together and offering to the producers the choicest bookings in the town they will naturally be given the first consideration by the film makers.

QUEEN CITY FILM CORPORATION.

The Queen City Film Corporation has been formed in Buffalo. It is capitalized at $25,000, and the directors are George A. Orr, Henry L. Jauch and Christian H. Schaefer.

DEATH OF HENRY M. MARCUS.

"A great vacancy," says the Buffalo Enquirer, "is created in the realm of music in Buffalo through the untimely death of Henry M. Marcus. He had been identified with musical organizations for many years and was one of the best known men in the city. Not alone will Buffalonians regret his going. He was intimately acquainted with a majority of the members of the theatrical profession of the country, many of whom owe much of their success to his exceptional accompaniment as director of the music for their acts. Of a kindly disposition, those who knew Mr. Marcus became endeared to him. He was an excellent citizen, one of an excellent family and to them goes out the sympathy of a wide acquaintanceship."

HYMAN & WALLINGFORD LEASE FAMILY THEATER.

Hyman & Wallingford have leased the Family theater, Buffalo, and are installing a $3,000 organ. An electric fountain is another new feature of the house. They are using the Metro and Fox programs. They are experienced showmen and are arranging for a chain of theaters. A photograph of the Family audience appears in the Buffalo Enquirer each day. A line is drawn around the picture of some person in the throng and the fortunate one is entitled to a cash prize. Miss Margaret Erlenbach, of the Buffalo Enquirer staff, who has been giving exhibitions as "Miss Movie," was recently featured at the Family theater.

MANAGER CARR GIVES PARTY TO POOR CHILDREN.

At Shea's theater, Buffalo, recently, Manager Carr entertained a hundred children. The party was chaperoned by Mrs. Andrew Murdison, Mrs. J. F. Wadsworth and Mrs. D. O. Baker. Those who have made the comfort of poor and unfortunate children their special care, arrange this theater party each year, and it is always looked forward to by the children as one of their greatest treats.

Children's Aid Has Doorman Arrested.

A ticket taker at a west side moving picture theater, Buffalo, was recently fined $50 by Judge George E. Judge. The defendant was found guilty of admitting two children, a boy 13 years old, and the lad's sister, 6 years old, unaccompanied by either parent or guardian. John C. Sanderson, superintendent of the Children's Aid Society, and one of his agents, saw the boy buy the tickets at the theater. They were admitted without question the men told the court.

Nixon Theater Shake-Up

Many Changes of the Managerial Staffs of the Theaters Operated by the Nixon and Zimmerman Firm of Philadelphia—F. G. Nixon-Nirdlinger Becomes Assistant to President—House Managers Shifted.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

IMPORTANT changes of the managerial staffs of the theaters operated by the Nixon & Zimmerman firm and others which are under the direction of Samuel F. Nixon were recently announced. That the changes were in the nature of a real surprise may be gathered from the fact that J. Fred Zimmerman, who is a shareholder in the Garrick, Forrest and Broad Street theaters, has no knowledge of the affair, and appeared amazed when informed of the fact upon his return from a trip to New York.

Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, a son of Samuel F. Nixon, has been appointed general assistant to his father under the new management and will have personal supervsion of all interests in connection with the management of the theaters. The status of Thomas M. Love will not be affected by this change, as he will continue in the same capacity.

On account of the many duties in connection with his new position, Mr. Nixon-Nirdlinger has appointed Frank Wolfe as his assistant general manager of the Nixon theater, in West Philadelphia; the Colonial theater, in Germantown, as well as several other playhouses showing vaudeville and moving pictures. Mr. Wolfe will be the general manager of the Nixon-Nirdlinger Booking Office, which books and operates a number of theaters in this vicinity.

Charles Thropp, who for several years has been manager of the Colonial, will assume the management of the Nixon. F. Frederick Leopold, who for five years has been connected with the Nixon, will be transferred to the Colonial. William Nields has been made manager of the Coliseum. It is reported that there will be a general shakeup in the minor positions of the various theaters controlled by the Nixon interests.

THEATERS MUST PROVIDE SEAT OR REFUND ADMISSION.

Proprietors of moving picture theaters in Atlantic City, N. J., must refund the money paid by patrons for admission in case they fail to provide a seat for the party in question. This decision was handed down by Judge Smathers, sitting in the district court, when he ordered the Snellenberg Amusement company, which conducts the Virginia Avenue theater, to pay 40 cents to Arthur F. Schneider, a Philadelphia attorney, together with the cost of the proceeding.

It appears that Schneider visiter the theater last summer in company with Bessie Houck, also of Philadelphia, and paid for two admissions after being assured that there was plenty of seating space available inside. Upon entering he discovered the theater to be crowded and prompetly asked for a return of his money. This was refused and he brought suit.

This decision, while of a seemingly trifling nature, means a great deal to the proprietors of moving picture theaters in Atlantic City, as they will now be forced to cease the sale of tickets after their seating capacity has been reached. It is no thought that the decision will be accepted as final.

OLD DREAMLAND CLOSED.

Due to the expiration of the rental lease, the Dreamland theater, 835 Market street, William F. Boozar, proprietor, has recently been forced to close its doors to the public. This establishment has been open to the public for seven years and was one of the most popular 5-cent photoplay houses in Philadelphia. Upon the expiration of the lease the property owners demanded such an exhorbitant sum for re-rental that it was impossible to comply with their demands. Mr. Boozar has been very successful with his theater, the 5-cent Mutual program having appealed to many moving picture fans. He has not announced any plans for the future as yet, declaring that he has not yet decided what his future activities will be.

WALTER SMITH PROMOTED.

Walter Smith, the popular manager of the United States Astor theater, located on West Front street, Plainfield, N. J., has been promoted and transferred to the United States Playhouse, a vaudeville and moving picture theater in Passaic, N. J. Mr. Smith's successor will be S. P. Whiting, of Gloversville, N. Y.

New Doyleston House.

E. J. Bowlby has recently opened a new moving picture theater in Doylestown, Pa., known as the Princess theater. Mr. Bowlby was a recent visitor to Philadelphia, and while here paid a visit to the Swaab Film Service, where he purchased much new equipment, including a Power's No. 6A and an inductor.

Manager Mutch Takes New Position.

Mr. Mutch, former manager of the Apollo theater, Fifty-second and Stiles streets, has recently taken a position as manager of the Oxford theater. Mr. Mutch is a thoroughly experienced exhibitor and should experience little difficulty in attracting large audiences to his latest theater.

Spruce Theater Sold.

The Spruce theater, Sixtieth and Spruce streets, has been sold by Mr. Morganstein to Messrs. Insley and Lewis, proprietors of the Tivoli theater, Eleventh street and Fairmount avenue. Mr. Morgenstein has encountered severe financial troubles of recent date and wished to be relieved of some of his responsibilities.

Picture Man Leaves Business.

Mr. Sickinger, proprietor of the Howard theater, Second and Tioga streets, announces his withdrawal from the moving picture industry, having recently closed his theater. Mr. Sickinger found it impossible to operate his house at a profit under present business conditions.

Pennsylvania Theaters Co. Opens Offices.

The Pennsylvania Theaters Company, a million dollar corporation, recently chartered under the laws of Delaware, is soon to enter the moving picture field of this city. Present plans of the company contemplate the operation of a circuit of moving picture theaters, first in Philadelphia and later to extend their activities throughout the entire state. J. E. McCanna, general manager of the company, has opened an office in the Bellevue Court building. It will be the aim of the new concern to raise the standards of the motion picture industry. Only theaters that are operating on a paying basis will be purchased.

Mrs. Hoffman Will Run Theater.

The Hoffman theater, Fifth and Tioga streets, is now being operated by Mrs. Hoffman. The theater was formerly managed by Mr. Reed, who has given over his interests to Mrs. Hoffman after having unsuccessfully tried to make the theater a success.

New Baltimore Theater

Gertrude McCoy Theater Latest Addition to Lord Calvert Theaters Company—Site Is Fulton Avenue and Baker Street—To Be Managed by F. C. Weber—Its Namesake Player and Others Present at Opening Reception.

THE Gertrude McCoy theater is the latest addition to the string of houses owned and operated by the Lord Calvert Theaters company, of Baltimore. This house is located at Fulton avenue and Baker street and is to be conducted under the management of Frederick Clement Weber, president.

This theater is as near fireproof as modern construction can make it. It has a capacity of 800 persons and no expense has been spared in the effort to guarantee comfort. One of the main features is an excellent ventilating system which has been brought about by placing windows in all four walls of the building, with vents 24 by 12 feet in the ceiling.

The decorations of the theater have been carried out in ivory and sky blue. The color scheme is soft and extremely restful to the eye. Special designs of semi-direct lighting from ceiling and ornamental wall brackets provide the means for displaying the interior decorations of the ceiling and walls to the best advantage, as well as giving a comfortable, well-diffused illumination.

Two Baird motion picture projecting machines have been installed in the operating booth. A mercury arc rectifier changes the alternating current to a direct one. The machines are both motor-driven and the arc controller attachment is that manufactured by the Speed Controller company, of New York. The pictures are projected on a gold fiber screen. An automatic ticket machine has been installed in the box office. Girl ushers are employed to escort patrons to the comfortable armchairs which are raised on a six-foot pitch, assuring each patron of an unobstructed view of the screen.

In the erection of the new theater the officers of the company were desirous of giving to northwest Baltimore that which would be one of the handsomest architectural features of the section and that would compare favorably with many of the city's finest buildings. Prior to the commencement of the plans by Architect F. E. Tormey, the officials went deeply into the situation and left no steps unturned towards securing one of the finest theaters in the city, and one that would do credit to a downtown site. Many of the most important and best known theaters in the East were visited by them and many of the best features of each of these were incorporated in the plans for the Gertrude McCoy theater. The chaste architectural lines of the Italian Renaissance period which have been adopted in the new theater create a most favorable impression from an exterior viewpoint. While the type is original in all respects, yet there is nothing that would suggest the gaudy and unstable, the whole testifying in appearance as in fact to its deep sense of permanency. The heating system is excellent and is controllable both from the main auditorium and the basement of the house. The plumbing includes all of the latest sanitary devices and equipment.

On the opening day Miss Gertrude McCoy, for whom the theater was named, of the Edison Players; Duncan McRae, of the Plimpton Epic Picture Company, and Edward Earle, all of the Edison Company, held a reception and greeted the thousands who visited the theater at that time.

The other theaters operated by the Lord Calvert Theaters Company are the Lord Calvert, at 1627 Hartford avenue; The Pastime, 2026 Greenmount avenue, and the Carrolton, at 1203 West Baltimore street. The offices of the company are located in the Calvert building.

CHILDRENS' SHOW AT PARKWAY.

The Parkway theater, in Baltimore, on Saturday last gave a children's matinee which proved exceptionally successful, and from the large attendance at the opening day it is believed that these will prove very successful and popular with the youngsters. Prior to the opening of the program, consisting of productions suitable for children and including many having pictorial beauty and educational value, the juvenile audience sang "The Star Spangled Banner." Shows especially for the children are not very frequent in Baltimore, and it is believed that those parents who do not care to have their children visit the theaters at night will take advantage of this Saturday morning opportunity.

OPERATORS PRESENT NEW WAGE SCHEDULE.

An Advance of $2 a Week Asked—Some Exhibitors Already Accede.

The moving picture operators of Baltimore recently presented a new wage schedule and working agreement to the exhibitors of the city to go into effect on Nov. 3 and to run for a period of three years. The new wage schedule contemplates an advance of $2 per week for the operators and some few changes were contained in the proposed agreement. A number of the exhibitors immediately agreed to the new demands, but there are some others who do not care to do so. The operators, however, are confident of winning over all of the exhibitors of the city.

E. R. PRICE IS NOW MANAGING BERMAN'S PHOTOPLAY.

Optimistic Report by Federal Reserve Board

Conditions in Group of States Near the Capital Are Much Improved—Promise of General Prosperity for Amusement Enterprises and Film Business.

BOTH exhibitors and exchangemen in this territory will no doubt be interested in the glowing report of general business conditions in this territory—the District of Columbia, Maryland, the Virginias and the Carolinas—made by the Federal Reserve Agent to the Federal Reserve Board, who states that after watching the slow and at times halting development of business during several months, it is now possible to report that this district is experiencing much improvement.

Cotton has been moving freely, permitting of generous liquidation. The movement is allowing local jobbers and merchants to replenish with confidence. Tobacco has been of excellent quality and is selling at good prices. Vegetable and fruit packing conditions are decidedly better than was the case two months ago. There is noted a very much better tone to business and a very marked change for the better in the demand for goods. Lumber, always slow to recover from stagnation, shows some real signs of improvement. Retailers are quite generally feeling the effect of changed conditions, while automobile dealers, certainly in some sections, report more business at the moment and prospectively than for several months, which fact, while indicating immediate comfort of mind, may also suggest that the resolution prompting economy undertaken when in distress some months ago may have been forgotten. Cotton milling is prosperous and the mills are running full time, taking cotton as offered. Coal is in good position and its great tonnage is materially helping the railroads in caring for its territory. Labor seems to be fully employed and on a basis satisfactory to all interests. Public service utilities, such as street railways, gas and electric concerns, report an enlarged use of their facilities. From present indications everything is brighter.

Sunday Shows in Toronto

With the Patriotic Purpose of Aiding to Get Recruits, Many Managers Are Giving Free Shows on Sundays in Conjunction with Leading Exchanges—Military Authorities Glad of the Help—Theaters and Exchanges in Movement.

By W. M. Gladish, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SEVENTEEN exhibitors and seven film exchanges of Toronto have stepped forward with an offer to help recruiting which has already been accepted by the Canadian military authorities. The scheme arranged provides for the establishment of recruiting stations at moving picture theaters throughout the city and the military officers were delighted with the idea, knowing that the picture shows are the magnet for many young men every evening and that the theaters had been located in positions best suited to reach the public. Not only are the proprietors of the shows allowing their premises to be used during the week, but the buildings are to be used for concerts and recruiting meetings on Sunday evenings, rent, light and labor free. The idea of Sunday performances is something entirely new—almost shocking for Toronto.

The machine operators and the musicians have also caught the fever as they have promised to do their bit in the campaign while the film exchanges intend to donate the use of appropriate films for the Sunday performances. On week nights, recruiting sergeants will be given an opportunity to address the crowds at intervals and recruiting slides will also be shown on the screen.

The exchanges who have promised to provide films include the Famous Players, General Film, Select Feature, Allied Features, Pathe, All Features and the United. The theaters which will be used in the campaign include the York, Red Mill, Mary Pickford, Garden, Playtorium, Broadview, Iola, Greenwood, Rex, Teck, Peter Pan, Ideal, Wychwood, Vermont, Eclipse, Belmont and York.

Two automobiles are to call at each of these theaters every night to take the prospective recruits to the Armory.

UNION'S ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN.

The Moving Picture Operators' Union of Toronto are engaging in an aggressive advertising campaign. Union slides are thrown on the screen in the various recognized theaters and display cards, drawing attention to the Safety First principles of union operators, have been inserted in the daily papers.

A typical advertisement of the Toronto union says:

"Patronize theaters displaying this card. This theater employs 'SAFETY FIRST,' a union operator."

Paramount Incorporated.

The Canadian Paramount Pictures corporation, with headquarters at Toronto, has been incorporated with a Canadian charter and a capital of $2,500,000, for the purpose of distributing and manufacturing photo-play films in the Dominion.

Police Seize Pro-German Films.

There has been a great deal of talk about pro-German moving pictures in Canada but the first real evidence, apparently, of an alleged anti-British film was found in a fake war picture, "The War of the World," which was shown at the Maple Leaf theater, Toronto, 94 Queen street, west, for a few days recently. The police authorities first seized the posters outside of the theater and later a representative of the moving picture censors confiscated the film itself although it had been officially passed by the board of censors. Mr. William Appleton, the exhibitor, has been summoned to appear in police court to answer to the charge of exhibiting posters which had not been passed by the police. The picture is said to glorify the Kaiser and to show Germany, with only one ally, fighting the world.

Unreasonable Musicians

Cincinnati Exhibitors Receive Demands from Musicians' Union to Discard Their Expensive Mechanical Orchestras and Employ a Real Orchestra in Order to Give Employment to Musicians—Exhibitors' League Holds Meeting to Discuss It.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE latest demand which has been made on the long-suffering exhibitor by the unions, or, more accurately, by a union, is perhaps one of the most illuminative which has been heard of yet, on account of its utter unreasonableness.

Cincinnati exhibitors were informed last week by the Musicians' Union that the union feels that moving picture theaters should afford work for more men, and therefore demands that not less than three men be employed in the larger houses—preferably, of course, a larger number. The suggestion accompanying the demand was that the large organ-orchestrions now very generally used be replaced by orchestras consisting of several men, solely for the purpose of giving additional men employment. The point made was that the use of these so-called "one-man orchestras" has deprived many musicians of work—although, of course, they are used in most cases in theaters where orchestras never were and never would have been employed—and that, therefore, the exhibitors should remedy this theoretical wrong, add heavily to their expenses, and junk their investment in organs ranging in cost from $10,000 to $20,000, by putting in orchestras.

Much disturbed by this demand, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League held a special meeting to consider the matter, and to ascertain the opinion of its members on the subject. The various objections to meeting the demand were pointed out, chief among them being the very pertinent one that an orchestra of several men could not possibly follow a picture with appropriate music, as a single man in control of a mechanical orchestrion can do. The item of expense was, of coures, also considered, and the League decided, virtually without dissent, that the demands of the union could not possibly be met.

It is understood that several musicians employed by moving picture houses have stopped work in consequence, but there has been no trouble so far. The exhibitors are a unit in their determination to resist the unreasonable demands of the union, one of which, it is claimed, is that in small houses where an automatic piano is used a member of the union should be employed, if only to watch the piano do the work!

CINCINNATIANS ARE WATCHING PATHE POSTERS.

Some of the most ambitious and most conspicuous advertising yet attempted by any moving picture company is being used in Cincinnati for the Pathe people. It comes in the shape of great displays on painted boards placed on the numerous advantageous sites afforded by the contour of the city. There are probably more billboards and painted boards in Cincinnati than in any other city of its size in the country, on account of the convenient places given by the numerous hills; and the Pathe management, through Manager C. E. Holah, in charge of the Cincinnati exchange, has secured space on which the new "Gold Rooster" brand is being emblazoned artistically for the benefit of the passing thousands.

In connection with the permanent painted part of the boards it is planned to show regularly the names of Pathe features showing in the city, and the names of the theaters where they can be seen.

FILM TO SHOW EVOLUTION OF A STORE.

Something new in the way of advertising and educational films is being arranged by the National Cash Register Company, of Dayton, O., whose pre-eminence in business is largely due to its readiness to take hold of modern publicity methods. The company employed the Essanay Co. to do the work. Under the direction of Richard F. Baker, a company of Essanay stars came down to Dayton to participate in the making of "The Evolution of a Store," which is the appropriate name of the National Cash Register film. The film will consist of about 2,000 feet, and will be extensively used by the company in its general publicity work. Advertising films, of course, are by no means new, but this is the first time that an instance has come to light where one of the leading dramatic producers has been called upon to furnish facilities for taking a picture for advertising purposes, and it is significant of the growing appreciation of the effectiveness of this form of publicity.

FAMOUS PLAYERS BRANCH MANAGERS MEET.

A meeting of branch managers of the Famous Players Company was held last week at the Hotel Gibson, with James Steele, of Pittsburgh, head of the company and vice-president of the Paramount Company, in attendance to add interest to the gathering. Mr. Steele is well known in Cincinnati, as he conducted a film exchange here several years ago, under the name of the Pittsburgh Calcium Light Company. Associated with him at that time were R. O. Laws, now Cincinnati manager of the Famous Players office, and F. M. Brockhill, the Chicago manager. These gentlemen were among those attending the meeting, others being Paul Allison, assistant manager at Cincinnati, Leo Dennison, of Detroit, and S. Plame, of Indianapolis.

CINCINNATI FOX BRANCH TO MOVE.

The offices of the Cincinnati branch of the Fox Film Corp., in charge of Manager A. M. Muller, are to be moved on Dec. 1 from 132 East Fourth street to larger quarters at 431 Main street, where a three-story building will be occupied. There is at present no film exchange in the block indicated, but it is just around the corner from the quarters of the Triangle and the Pathe exchanges, so that Mr. Muller will not be lonesome. District Manager Paul Mooney, of Cleveland, was in the city last week, and was much pleased with the proposed new location.

Small Blaze in Dayton Theater.

A blaze at the Lafayette theater, Dayton, O., which began when five reels of film caught fire, resulted in damage of about $600 before it could be extinguished by the fire department. The theater had just been reopened after extensive improvements and redecorations for the winter season.

Refused to Let Exhibitor Put Up a Canopy.

Manager Abrams, of the Odean theater, Canton, O., was considerably surprised a few days ago when the city authorities stepped in and stopped work on the erection of a handsome canopy over the entrance to the theater. Mr. Abrams declared that he would go into court over the matter, if necessary, as he is firmly convinced that the city has no right to prevent the work from being done.

EDWARD WHITESIDE MAY MAKE FILM IN CHATTANOOGA.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Representative of Moving Picture World.

EDWARD WHITESIDE, formerly of Chattanooga, Tenn, who a few months ago organized a film producing company in New York, which markets its productions through the Pathe Company, recently visited relatives in Chattanooga, and while in the city discussed a plan whereby he may shortly promote a moving picture producing company at Chattanooga to turn out films in a studio to be located at Signal Mountain. TRIANGLE FEATURES AND ROAD SHOWS.

John Twinam, who recently purchased the Bijou, of Chattanooga, Tenn., has just returned from New York City and has made some interesting announcements concerning the future aims of the theater's management. Road shows will be booked at the theater, but whenever the road shows are not playing moving pictures will be shown. Arrangements have been made to show Triangle Film Company features at an admission price of 25 cents, and only two shows will be given on days when these pictures are being shown. A new mechanical orchestra costing $7,000 has been installed to use in connection with the moving pictures when shown. Howell Graham, manager of the Quality Way picture houses and the Majestic theater, is associated with Mr. Twinam in the management of the Bijou.

Proposes Chattanooga Film.

O. W. Lamb, of the Paragon Feature Film Company, was recently in Chattanooga, where he put a proposition before a special meeting of directors of the Chattanooga Chamber of Commerce whereby a Chattanooga film will probably be made shortly to boost the city. It is proposed to run the film for a total of 182 days in cities to be named by the Chattanooga Chamber of Commerce. Members of the Rotary Club, the Retail Merchants' Association and other organizations were present at the meeting and warmly supported the movement. A similar film was made at Memphis, Tenn., a few months ago under the title "Cotton Bolls and Wedding Bells." This film was shown all through the South and boosted the city considerably.

At Clarksville, Tenn., the management of the Elite theater has just announced that a contract has been closed whereby the theater will hereafter show the famous Gold Rooster features. The first of the pictures shown at the theater was "The Galloper," taken from Richard Harding Davis' novel.

Mutual Officials Stop Over in Louisville.

W. C. Banford, a traveling auditor of the Mutual Film Corporation, was in Louisville last week, where he checked up Norman M. Dixon, manager of the local office. Shortly following Mr. Banford was E. Anger, an efficiency expert of the company, who stopped off on his return trip from Atlanta, where he straightened out affairs after the big fire, and put in new books, etc., to replace the records lost in the fire. Mr. Anger stated that it was his first visit to Louisville, and that he was greatly surprised at the size and beauty of the Louisville theaters. He said that the larger theaters in Louisville compared favorably with the best to be found in the East, and that the Broadway theater was undoubtedly the finest suburban theater he had visited in a long time.

Triangle Films at Walnut

Louisville Theater Signs Up with Manager C. C. Hite of Triangle Film Corporation for Full Program at $52,000 for the Year—Prices Will Be 50-25-15 Cents—Fifteen-Piece Orchestra with Shows.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IT develops that there was a basis in fact for the recently announced rumor to the effect that the Triangle program would shortly be shown in Louisville. The Walnut theater has begun advertising that the Triangle pictures would be shown at that theater, and the rumor concerning prices, etc., to be charged, has been confirmed. Prices will be 50, 25 and 15 cents, and a fifteen-piece orchestra will be used. The shows will consist of fourteen reels, two five-reel subjects, and two two-reel subjects.

The contract is the first signed up for regular service south of the Ohio. According to a telegram, which has been reproduced in the local newspapers, signed by C. C. Hite, manager of the Triangle Film Corporation, at Cincinnati, and addressed to the Broadway Amusement Enterprises, the theatrical management is paying $52,000 for one year's exclusive Triangle film service in Louisville. The telegram also stated that the deal was the largest ever undertaken by a motion picture concern in the South, and should prove a winner.

IT IS ONE GOOD REASON.

That "There's a reason" for legitimate theatrical houses in many instances being turned into moving picture or photo play houses was plainly shown in Louisville a few days ago when two consecutive shows were cancelled at one of the leading theaters. The first of these shows was cancelled after the entire house had been sold out clean, because of the illness of the star, and the show failed even to come to the city. On the following week the big production "Bluebeard" was cancelled on account of certain exactions of the Kentucky child-labor law, which virtually rules from Kentucky stages all representations of life that do not deal wholly with adulthood. The consequence has been that the management of the house was forced to return the entire receipts of the seat sales besides having the worry and outlay for press notices, etc. Of course fires, railroad accidents, etc., sometimes keep a moving picture theater from getting its features on time, but these cases are rare, and there is almost always some good feature which can be obtained through local exchanges which will keep the house lighted until a new bill can be acquired.

TO VISIT INDIANAPOLIS AND MEET ROTHAPFEL.

Norman M. Dixon, Louisville manager for the Mutual Film Corporation, is arranging a party of about twenty local exhibitors to make a trip to Indianapolis, Ind., on the evening of Nov. 20, to attend the Rothapfel-Mutual Tour Banquet, which will be held at the Claypool Hotel. Mr. Rothapfel, of New York, the famous moving picture exhibitor, will deliver a message on the subject "Success." It is proposed to have a private car which will leave Louisville in the afternoon so as to enable the exhibitors to arrive in time for the banquet which will be served at 7.30 in the evening. The Louisville men will board the train again about midnight for Louisville.

M. SWITOW DOES A WEEK'S WORK.

M. Switow, of Louisville, has "put over" a couple of new moving picture deals during the past few weeks, one of which was the opening of the new Grand theater, at Corydon, Ind., a house seating 275 people, and built by the Switow Amusement Company, of Louisville. Mr. Switow has also purchased the controlling interest in the Shelby theater, of Louisville, in which he was already interested.

FRED. SHELDON GOES TO SHELBYVILLE.

Fred Sheldon, formerly connected with the S. & P. Film & Supply Co., has gone with the Majestic Amusement Company, of Shelbyville, Ky., which recently took over the Green Dragon theater, and which is making arrangements to acquire a chain of theaters in the Bluegrass section of the state. Mr. Sheldon has had years of experience in moving picture circles, both from the exchange and exhibitors' standpoint, and is expected to make a big success of the new venture.

MIDDLE OF FILM NO PLACE FOR NOTICES.

Several of the Louisville theaters threw state election returns on their screens on Tuesday evening, Nov. 2. Some of the larger houses which were showing big film productions did not show election returns until the end of the films, so as not to break the thread of the production. Other houses showed returns between reels, but this action was criticized by many persons, who said it detracted from a good photo play, and among women especially election returns are of little or no interest. However, elections involving woman suffrage were of interest even to the fair sex. L. J. Dittmar, manager of the Majestic theater, stated that in former years he had shown returns between films, but this year he was showing "Carmen" and let the election returns go until the end of the play.

DENNIS LONG AND BRIDE ON TRIP.

Dennis H. Long, secretary-treasurer of the Fourth Avenue Amusement company, operators of the Alamo, and interested in other local moving picture theaters, left the city on Nov. 3 for the North and East, where he will spend a month or so. Mr. Long was married to Miss Mary Shreve Lyons, of Louisville, at Calvary Church, on that day. A reception at the Woman's Club followed the wedding. The affair was one of the largest social events of the season in Louisville.

DOLLE LEASES FRANKFORT THEATER.

Fred J. Dolle, of the Broadway Amusement Enterprises, of Louisville, recently signed a lease for the Capital theater, of Frankfort, Ky., at an annual rental of $2,450. The lease is for a period of three years with the privilege of two additional years at the same price.

The theater, which is now being remodeled, is owned by the city of Frankfort. Bids were recently asked on the theater and seven concerns made bids, including the Majestic Amusement company, of Shelbyville, and Fred Sheldon, of Louisville. Mr. Dolle has not made any definite plans as to who the manager of the theater will be, but its policy will be directed from the Louisville office. It is understood that the lease provides for the right to show road attractions as well as moving pictures. The lease becomes effective on Dec. 1.

Censorship Rampant

In Holland, Michigan, U. S. A., Local Censorship Board Feels Its Oats—License of Exhibitor J. W. Hinebaugh Revoked for Showing "Tillie's Punctured Romance" —All the Aldermen Except Two Voted Tyrannously in the Matter.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THE license of J. W. Hinebaugh, manager of the Royal theater at Holland, was revoked for showing "Tillie's Punctured Romance." F. E. Fell, superintendent of schools and a member of the board of censorship, warned the manager of the theater not to run the picture. The warning was not heeded, whereupon Fell called the other members of the board to the theater. Recommendation to the council that Hinebaugh be brought before the city board to show cause why his license should not be revoked followed.

The entire council, with the exception of Aldermen Congelton and Brower, voted to revoke the license, with the provision that the mayor and the license committee have power to act in regranting him a license. Editor's Note: Revoking an exhibitor's license for showing "Tillie's Punctured Romance" seems almost incredible to us. The state of grace of those in authority at Holland, Michigan, would make an entertaining study, if we could investigate it.

THE MARTHA WASHINGTON AT YPSILANTI OPENS.

The Martha Washington theater, Colonial in design, has been opened at Ypsilanti by Mrs. Florence Wilson Signor. The stucco work is designed after the time of Martha Washington, many of the details and enrichments of the plastic relief are fac-similes taken from her home in Mt. Vernon. The borders, especially those on the ceiling, are taken from some of the ceilings in the White House at Washington, D. C., and other Colonial homes in the East. Bas relief portraits of Martha Washington enhance the two side panels of the proscenium arch. The antique gold frame which surmounts these portraits is an exact fac-simile of the portrait of Martha Washington which enriches the walls at Mt. Vernon. The general color scheme of the entire house is in subdued tones of old rose, French greys and antique ivory. The main panel of the ceiling is in mellow sky effect, containing pearl greys and ivory tints.

PIERCE TALKS TO FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS.

HOWARD O. PIERCE, publicity director of the John H. Kunsky, Inc., enterprises in behalf of Mr. Kunsky and the Detroit Theatrical Managers' Association, delivered an address on Wednesday afternoon of last week before the Detroit Federation of Women's Clubs. Mr. Pierce chose for his subject "The Uplift and Development of the Motion Picture."

Mr. Pierce assured the club of the fullest co-operation at all times on the part of the leading Detroit theater owners and managers, and stated that they were just as much opposed to the undesirable pictures as were the people. Stricter censorship of all programs, rigid exclusion of children from evening performances when not accompanied by their parents and the presentation of special Saturday matinees for children were among the things Mr. Pierce promised the Detroit club women in behalf of his constituents.

He briefly outlined a history of the motion picture industry and told of its wonderful development, how it was affording amusement daily to the masses at a low price and how much better was the photoplay of to-day than the "movie" of a few years ago. The association has plans under way to prevent the displaying of lurid posters advertising only the sensational scenes of the pictures. On this point Mr. Pierce said that none of the larger theaters would tolerate such posters in front of their playhouses; that as a matter of fact too often lurid posters shown would have no real connection with the picture itself, and that they were put out by unscrupulous managers for the purpose of drawing business.

Evanston Will Censor

Ordinance for Local Censorship Passes with Few Changes—Inspection Fee 30 Cents a 1,000 Feet—Gives Mayor Privilege of Discretion in Revoking Licenses—A Sane Editorial in Local Paper.

EVANSTON passed its local censorship ordinance with a few changes. The inspection fee was raised from 20 to 30 cents for each 1,000 foot reel. The mayor "may" revoke the license of offenders instead of making it imperative by "shall." The Chicago standard no longer will be accepted; all films must pass the local board.

In few cities have newspapers treated the censorship problem as intelligently as the editor of the Evanston News. Referring to the address of a local man at the council meeting, the News said: "He expressed what is too often the opinion of the men who give negative or mild support to public work of women. He didn't understand the situation or know just what it was proposed to do, but he was with the ladies in their endeavor to secure what they wanted.

"The provision for the censorship of the pictures to be presented here is one of the biggest questions which has had to be decided recently. It means the supervision of the business of four firms engaged in what is recognized to be legitimate trade. It provides for the creation of several official positions to be filled by appointment, officially by the chief of police, presumably by the mayor. It means the elimination of such restrictions as we have had and the installation of others imposed by persons unknown and untried."

"The effects are viewed with doubt. It is not beyond the possibilities that the tax levied against the films shown will have to be made good in the supplying of cheaper pictures, and cheaper pictures, even though they may come within the conditions of the ordinance, may yet be far worse than those which we have been having. It is possible that the standard of the average of the pictures provided in the future will be lower than those of the past. Indeed, it is the natural thing to expect."

What School Children Spend on Pictures

Freeport, Illinois, Furnishes Interesting Data Showing That Money Spent by School Children on Shows is Small.

School children of Freeport, a city of about 17,000 population, spend $147.70 a week in moving picture theaters, according to the survey made by Superintendent Raines of that city. The figures are of interest to exhibitors because they show that a house could not afford to cater especially to children more than once a week. The high school topped the list with a weekly amount of $46.20, averaging per room $2.13, while a small ward school was lowest, with $5.30 weekly, an average of $1.30 per room. The main grade schools spend between $13.00 and $19.00 to see the films, each room contributing about $2.00.

Multiplying the amount by 52 gives $7,680.40 spent annually by the school children. The total number going at least once a week to the moving picture shows and the number who attended more than once brought the number to 2,650 a week. Half of the attendance was at night and one in twelve had never attended a picture show.

FILMS THAT INVITE TROUBLE.

A local board of censors was asked of the city council at Murphysboro by the Woman's Club. The matter was laid over for thirty days.

Governor Edward F. Dunne was angered by seeing a handbill of a Murphysboro moving picture house which advertised "Nineteen views of the execution of Joe Deberry." This execution of a negro was one which elicited nation-wide comment because the sheriff erected a stockade in the public square and allowed 1,000 persons to see the hanging. To evade the law which limits the attendance, countless persons were sworn in as deputies.

The convicted man's sister informed the governor. No negroes are allowed to see the pictures.

The handbill also decared: "Many prominent citizens pronounce these pictures a great moral lesson. They prove false the slanderous attacks on Jackson county and Murphysboro."

Censorship Hearing

In St. Louis, Legislative Committee of City Board of Aldermen Hold Public Hearing on the Question of Local Censoring of Film—Representatives of the National Board and of the Local Exhibitors Are Heard.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

AT the public hearing of the Legislative Committee of the Board of Aldermen on Oct. 29, about a hundred theater managers and motion picture exhibitors were present to oppose the proposed censorship bill for St. Louis.

O. G. Cox, secretary of the National Board of Censorship of New York, was present to explain the methods of the National Board, and told why he did not think local censorship necessary or beneficial, on account of causing even more friction with the public, the producers and the exhibitors than national censorship. Wm. Sievers, manager of the New Grand Central theater, said the public approved criticised films. This was demonstrated in the picture, "The Isle of Regeneration," which, due to its popularity was leased for a second week after E. V. P. Schneiderhahn, an attorney, had requested the elimination of scenes showing a girl swimming. Mr. Sievers said the picture was condemned by Schneiderhahn and two policemen who were brought by the attorney to view it. Mr. Sievers called in fifty men of various professions, among them clergymen, and all said they saw nothing objectionable about the film. Schneiderhahn declared that the National Board of Censorship was a joke, because the board is supported by donations from film manufacturing concerns.

Park Commissioner Nelson Cunliff announced that he would offer a third censorship bill, which was introduced the next day at a meeting of the Board of Aldermen by Alderman Koenig. The measure requires that film exchanges submit films to the park commissioner for censorship, and a payment of 50 cents for each 1,000 feet of film inspected. The fees shall be paid into the city treasury. At this writing the bill has not been passed.

TWO TRIANGLE THEATERS IN ST. LOUIS.

The American theater, 7th and Market streets, has been selected as a Triangle theater in St. Louis, and beginning Sunday, Nov. 7, will be operated in conjunction with the Knickerbocker theater, New York, the Chestnut Street opera house, Philadelphia, and the Studebaker theater, Chicago, except that by special arrangement the scale of prices for St. Louis will be 10 cents and 25 cents, while the other cities have a range of prices of from 25 cents to $2.

The King's theater, Kingshighway and Delmar boulevard, has been leased by representatives of the Triangle, from Harry Koplar, to be operated as a companion theater to the American. These two theaters will have exclusive rights for Triangle productions in St. Louis. Beginning Nov. 7 the first film will be shown at the American for one week, the following week it will be shown at the King's, which will be its last appearance on the screen in St. Louis, it is claimed. The two theaters will be under the control of Louis A. Cella and Frank R. Tate.

The Shubert theater, a straight dramatic house, departed from the spoken drama for the week of Nov. 1, and showed the "Battle and Fall of Przemysl." After the one week of pictures the Shubert went back to straight drama.

Good Business Prevails.

The theatrical business in St. Louis this fall has been exceptionally good. Many new theaters have been built, and several buildings have been converted into picture playhouses, such as the Cinderella, a former dancing palace; the Lorelei, a former natatorium; the Ritz, a former restaurant, and many others. All these theaters have been beautified and improved with new equipment and comfortable chairs. The Lears Theater Supply Company claim that during the month of September they have broken all records for that month in supplying theatrical equipment to old and new houses, and there is a decided tendency to buy better furnishings, and more modern appliances than in the past among these progressive showmen.

Big Features in St. Louis.

There is a surprisingly large number of St. Louis theaters that make a specialty of big multiple reel features. Practically all the new theaters that have opened this fall use special features, and any number of well established houses have changed from one and two reel subjects to large features. The New Grand Central opened several years ago with a permanent program of one big feature a week, and showed such subjects as "Les Miserables" and "Cabiria." Other houses took up the idea and began showing only special features, with perhaps a comedy or news weekly to liven up the program. Within the past few months a whole flock of houses have put on big features, and the move must have justified the expense, for all these houses are advertising in the daily papers.

Some of these houses change program daily, and others every other day, or twice a week. Among the two changes a week houses is the West End Lyric, which was built shortly after the New Grand Central, and which has always maintained a big feature bill. The King's, the Strand and the Pageant also change twice a week; others that change daily or every other day are the Congress, the Cinderella, the Plymouth, the Gravios, the Lafayette, the Rialto, the Chippewa, the Monroe. and others, all specializing on large features, and some of them nve cent houses.

Atlanta Girl Signs With Harris.

Lottie Lou Eady, who last week signed with the Charles K. Harris Feature Film company, is an Atlanta girl, born and bred. With her sister and brother she went through the public school here. It was then she first got her taste for theatricals in Christmas entertainments and last day exercises. From Atlanta she went to Greenville, S. C., graduating from Chicora College; thence to New York where she studied for the stage. She was an accomplished dancer and soon got her chance in a big musical production on Broadway. Her last appearance in Atlanta was in Hanky Panky at the Atlanta theater last winter. On this same tour Miss Eady happened to be in St. Augustine, Fla., and the Pathe company gave her a tryout in the moving pictures, when they learned she had had much stage experience. Atlantians are looking forward to the next Harris release in which Miss Eady is likely to be the star.

It will handle the Triangle features, and the prices will be increased from 5 cents to 20 cents and 10 cents. The Vaudette has doggedly refused to increase its price of admission until now.

The Pathe is showing war pictures taken at the French front, at the Strand theater this week. The pictures are crowding the theater.

Following the announcement that Atlanta was to have the "Birth of a Nation," a committee of three citizens called upon Mayor Woodward to ask the suppression of the spectacle. Of this committee only one had seen the picture. Mayor Woodward, while silent on the matter, will doubtless ignore the protest, inasmuch as the picture has been shown in a number of southern cities, and will be seen in others before coming here. In none of the southern cities where shown has any disturbance of any character marred the performances.

WISCONSIN NEWS LETTER.

Thankful for the Films.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

I THANK God that I live in an age where one is given the opportunity to grasp, by masterpieces of the moving pictures, such things as 'The Birth of a Nation' and 'The Eternal City,'" said Rev. Paul MacKinney, pastor of the Bay View Baptist church, to his congregation. "I do not think that picture shows can be classed exactly with the cabaret, and while there are many things in the moving pictures that the screens could do well without, for it is not necessary to show up all the ghastly and seamy side of life only to leave unfit impressions on the minds of the young, there are many things in the moving pictures that are a real benefit to the public.

"Nothing," he continued, "could be of greater educational value than Pathe current events; and to be shown the workings of the submarine, aeroplane and other wonderful things is certainly something to be thankful for. How many people have it within their grasp to see and understand things, that without the moving pictures would always be but a vague and indistinct outline."

Patrons and Also Friends

An Exhibitor's Wholesome Relationship with People of His Town, Which Is Marion, Kansas, Where All Indorse Manager H. K. Rogers—He Works for His Patrons—They Work for Him.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

EXHIBITOR H. K. ROGERS has two moving picture theaters at Marion, Kan., the only houses in the town of about 3,000 people. And he seems to have solved the "local censorship" problem. There is never a peep from any local people about the "necessity for supervision," or the "danger to the children." What Mr. Rogers would do if somebody did insist on censoring his films, is another story—but the fact is that with the pictures he shows he has the whole town with him, from preachers to kids.

His Auditorium is now running, and the Garden, his other house, will probably be reopened soon. Among his patrons is former Governor E. W. Hoch, one of the leadnig citizens of the state, and for many years identified with those movements that are commonly referred to as "moral." Governor Hoch is an ardent moving picture "fan," and he particularly enjoyed recently the serial, "The Broken Coin."

Mr. Rogers has built up his patronage by good service and careful selection of subjects. And there is never any question as to the character of the programs. An example of the strength of the local support was given recently, when a traveling evangelist took a rap at the moving picture industry, and specifically condemned the Auditorium show. This was at a public church meeting—but the slur did not go unanswered. One of the leading ministers of the town rose from his place on the platform.

"I must ask you to retract what you have said about the Auditorium moving pictures," the minister declared, addressing the evangelist, but talking also for the benefit of the audience. "This show is run on a very high plane, the pictures are clean and wholesome, and there is no criticism whatever that could be made against Mr. Rogers."

The evangelist gracefully withdrew his statement.

Mr. Rogers was able a few weeks ago to render a special service to the churches of Marion. Union services were being held, and especial importance attached to them. An accident to the light plant made it impossible to use the large meeting place that alone would accommodate the audiences. Mr. Rogers has his own light plant in the Auditorium. He offered the hall for Sunday nights, an offer that was gratefully accepted. When the meetings were over, a committee insisted on paying for the use of the hall. Mr. Rogers refused. They sent him a check anyway—which he endorsed, and returned to the committee, as the foundation for a Christmas fund.

AD. FILMS AND CENSORING.

The latest problem as to censorship which is being discussed in Kansas, has to do with the advertising films that are rapidly increasing. It is suggested that if the State Board of Censors feels duty bound to inspect everything to be shown on films, the advertising subjects will doubtless be included.

MANAGER A. JUDAH DIES.

A. Judah, one of the best known managers of theaters in the United States, owner of the Grand at Kansas City, died October 26; he was 66 years old. He leaves a widow, and a daughter, wife of Symour Rice, formerly in minstrelsy, later a program publisher.

Mr. Judah had been in the theatrical "game" in Kansas City 32 years. He gained fame as being the only theater manager in the United States who got independent bookings, as well as bookings from Klaw & Erlanger and the Shuberts.

MANAGER ROY BETTIS.

Roy Bettis.

Roy W. J. Bettis is perhaps the newest exchange manager in Kansas City in point of connection with the film business. Mr. Bettis was a dry goods salesman, traveling out of St. Joseph, Mo., until about three months ago. Then he went on the road for the Picture Playhouse Film company in Kansas City territory—and in six weeks turned in an extraordinary amount of business. About that time Charles Werner went to St. Louis as manager of the Metro, leaving the position of manager of the Kansas City exchange of the Picture Playhouse Film company open—and Mr. Bettis was ensconsed therein. He has fitted efficiently for the past month, caring for the territory without a traveling man. About October 1 he found the man he wanted in C. J. Campbell, an old show man, formerly advance agent for Ringling Bros. circus, and more recently selling Royal typewriters. Mr. Campbell is now out on the territory.

A LITTLE PICTURE SHOW WAR IN CLYDE, KAN.

The merry war for the moving picture business of Clyde resulted last week in Bloom & Auten being forced to show in the open air, no admission charged, while waiting for a tent in which they will establish their equipment. They can hardly charge admission as long as the general public can stand outside the imaginary line and see the pictures for nothing; but they are receiving nickels and dimes from spectators, much as patrons of a revival make their contributions, only a formal collection is not taken.

It is a real war at Clyde, the details of which may be interesting and instructive. Bert Auten first gave moving pictures to the people of the town, eight years ago. He sold his Wonderland theater to Collins & Johnson, for a reported price of $2,500; and it is alleged that he agreed not to reenter the moving picture business in Clyde. Last spring L. W. Bloom of the White Way theater at Concordia opened a show in Clyde, and it was said that Bert Auten was associated with him; he was acting as local manager. Sharp competition immediately began, which the firm of Collins & Johnson did not care to continue. They sold to a group of local business men, seven in number, of which R. A. Crumrine was the head. Mr. Crumrine is a dry goods merchant, but he manages the theater for the syndicate. The sharp efforts of the two shows to get business resulted in record crowds attending the pictures in Clyde during the summer. When the cool days came, Bloom and Auten moved to the opera house. After three weeks there, they were forced to move. The business men operating the Wonderland told the opera house owner that they could help him more if he did not have pictures there; two or three nights a week was the schedule for the theatrical entertainments, and the manager of the theater decided that he needed all the support he could get. So the White Way showed in the open, admission free.

A member of the business men's syndicate remarked recently that their purpose was to resist the effort of Auten to get back into the moving picture game in Clyde, understanding that he had agreed not to do so when he sold to Collins & Johnson. He said that the Wonderland was making money. It shows Universal service, and has run one serial, "The Diamond From the Sky." The White Way showed "Officer 666" during its open air period.

NEWMAN HEADS COMPANY TO BUILD THEATER.

A company headed by Frank L. Newman, proprietor of the Theater Royal, one of Kansas City's most elaborate and successful moving picture houses, has leased at $12,000 a year for 99 years, a 40 foot lot, 100 feet deep, at 109-11 East Twelfth street, and has begun the erection of a new moving picture house. The building will cost about $50,000, and will be used exclusively for pictures. The value of the ground is estimated at about $250,000. Mr. Newman was not ready to announce the policy of the new theater. He said it probably would be opened about March 1.

PARKER & HINSHAW TO BUILD

Parker & Hinshaw, proprietors of the Linwood Garden at Linwood boulevard and Prospect avenue, for several years a prosperous open air theater, have leased a proposed theater at 31st street and Prospect avenue. This building is to be erected on the site of one of the old Kansas City residences in a very populous district, a few hundred feet from Linwood boulevard. The building is to be erected by F. Elmer Scott for Parker & Hinshaw and will be 60 by 128 feet and a ceiling height of 20 feet, where a balcony will later be installed.

HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS RUN SHOW AT KINCAID.

The town, Kincaid, Kan., four hundred inhabitants, has a first class moving picture show, controlled and operated by students of the high school. The enterprise has just completed its first year and its financial success is announced. Boys of the high school operate the machine and high school girls handle the tickets and act as ushers. Boys and girls also play the piano and operate the talking machine, both of which are being purchased with proceeds. The enterprise is a semi-public one, in that the revenue is used for the benefit of the school, the net income going to the purchase of athletic and other equipment. The faculty of the high school advise the students in the management of the show and in the selection of pictures and the town is highly satisfied with the result of the enterprise.

Shows in Home Districts

Minneapolis Has a Spirited Contest Between Picture People and Some Ultra-Conservatives Over Show Houses Near Schools and Churches in a Home Neighborhood—City's School Superintendent on Side of Films.

By Grace L. Polk, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ONE of Minneapolis' most thickly settled residence districts is in the throes of a spirited contest as to whether picture shows shall be allowed to enter or whether they shall be confined to the downtown district and other portions of the city.

The district affected takes in Hennepin avenue from Nineteenth to Twenty-fourth streets and at present has practically no moving picture houses although several applications for license are now pending in the city council. The district embraces a number of schools and churches and many of the teachers and several pastors are on record against granting the permits and many home owners have joined the protest.

The principal argument is that the presence of the shows would detract from the purely residential nature of the community and would also interfere with the progress of the children in their school work. On this latter point the teachers and residents find themselves at variance with Dr. F. E. Spaulding, superintendent of the Minneapolis public schools.

When the matter was called to his attention Dr. Spaulding said: "Motion pictures have so much educational value that I think they are an asset to a community if they are high class. I am not opposed to them in the vicinity of schools when they are properly conducted. It is the concern of the parents to regulate the attendance of their children at motion picture theaters and to investigate the character of films shown.

"I believe parents will take the opportunity to select the films where managers are willing."

Dr. Spaulding in his last remark refers to the offer of one prospective manager to allow a committee of mothers to act as censors on the films to be shown in that district. Dr. Spaulding also says a high class theater near a school, where properly selected films can be shown, would prove an educational aid.

Henry Deutsch, a member of the Minneapolis Board of Education, said he approved the idea of a contract between the managers of picture theaters and the Parent Teachers' Association providing a committee to censor the films. As an attorney he said such a contract could be made which would be binding and that it might prove the solution of the problem of motion picture houses in residential portions of our cities.

PLANS FOR NEW THEATER.

Plans are now on file with the Minneapolis building inspector for four new motion picture houses to cost $200,000. One is to be a downtown show house to seat 750 persons and will be constructed by Finkelstein & Rubens who now own a string of houses in Minneapolis and St. Paul. The others are contemplated for sites in the outlying and residential parts of the city.

BEST FILM COMPANY OF MINNEAPOLIS.

A new organization known as the Best Film company has just been organized, backed by business and theatrical men of the city. Its object is the showing of special many-reel programs in the towns of the state. The first program was shown last Saturday (Oct. 30) in Brainerd. The independent producers films are used. Prices are the usual ten cents with several more reels shown.

PROPOSE ORDINANCE TO PROTECT SCHOOLS.

A new sort of zone to be established around Minneapolis public schools to prohibit motion picture shows, and candy and confectionery stores has been proposed by representatives of a local Parent-Teachers' Association. The board of education laid the communication on the table.

COMPETITION FOR THEATER SITES.

Minneapolis is looked upon as such a desirable field for motion picture theaters that five applications are now pending before the city council for two locations. The locations are in widely separated sections of the city but such is the interest of local residents in the movies that there is a sharp contest being made for each permit.

NEW HOUSE, EAST FRANKLIN.

The Minneapolis building inspector has just issued a permit for the erection of a $25,000 motion picture theater to seat 900 persons at 1021 East Franklin avenue. The permit was issued to C. E. Marr. The application of Marr, Moore and Thulin for a theater license at this location is being considered by the city council.

New Minneapois Stars.

Minneapolis has furnished three prospective film stars through the "Beauty and Brains" contest which has been carried on by "Photo Play" and the World Film company. They are Miss Mable Soucie, Miss Mollie Weisman and Miss Margaret Prothero. If animation and personal pulchritude count then these three would seem certain to rank high in the list.

Pictures at the Public Library.

Moving pictures in the Minneapolis public library for the benefit of child patrons is the announcement of Miss Gracia Countryman, public librarian, as a feature to be installed in the near future.

"Two branch libraries have already been fitted up for the exhibition of pictures and we hope shortly to have an appropriation for film rentals and other expenses," said Miss Countryman.

Denver No "Movie" Town

By Muriel Lee, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

EXHIBITOR DEWITT C. WEBBER, formerly owner of the Iris theater in Denver, hit the subject of popular name "movie" for a moving picture exhibition from a new angle, in a conversation recently.

"I don't like that slangy name, any more than I like 'jitney,'" he said. "But we aren't bothered with the use of either, in Denver. Most of the shows charge ten cents or more; so the 'Jitney' show is comparatively unimportant.

"And whenever two people meet and suggest going to a moving picture exhibition, they say, 'Let's go to the show.'"

Thus, in Denver, the word "show" means a moving picture exhibition. Perhaps in a short time, in other cities and districts, the popular mind will always think of pictures, when the word "show" is spoken. And while the word does not explicitly connotate moving pictures if the public makes it mean pictures, the dictionaries will have to add a meaning to the word in later editions.

Denver is perhaps peculiarly situated with reference to picture shows, that no such result can occur. There are perhaps a dozen first class houses; and all the shows are downtown. The houses are elaborately equipped, three at least having organs worth $30,000 to $50,000, and one maintaining a large orchestra. They have in the past few years got practically all the show-going business, because they have have given the very best of service. And the "legitimate" theatrical houses have almost been eliminated. Therefore it is that when one person says "show" in Denver, his companion knows he means a moving picture show. He has to go into detail when speaking of a stage production.

A SALT LAKE LIVE WIRE.

Road Man R. J. Clark, working out of Salt Lake for the World Film Company, and whose picture is printed below, has just returned from an extended trip through Montana and says that the exhibitors in that district are just chock full of optimism and business. A smile of welcome greeted him all along the line. Present conditions there are exceptionally good for both exhibitors and producers. We may add that reports like Salesman Clark's are coming to this office as the rule nowadays. The prospects for the winter's business are bright indeed, and it extends all over the country.

R. J. Clark.

"The Disciple" by a Denver Man.

S. Barrett McCormick, a well known Denver man, is the author of the recent Triangle picture, "The Disciple," which was directed by Thomas Ince, and which is arousing so much favorable comment by all who have seen it.

Three years ago, McCormick was a clerk in the office of the Denver Times. From that position he rose to become the head of the business office, at the time when the Times was on Champa, between Seventeenth and Eighteenth streets. This was about two years ago. Then he became interested in moving pictures, and went into the Mutual office in Denver, taking charge of the booking of "The Million Dollar Mystery." From that he gradually drifted into writing.

Luncheon for Rothapfel.

Manager H. Lustig of the Denver Mutual office, is making extensive preparations for the entertainment of S. L. Rothapfel, on his arrival in Denver November 12. Many of the prominent exhibitors in Denver, and exchange men, as well, are co-operating with Manager Lustig to give Mr. Rothapfel a real western welcome, and one which will stand out as a bright spot in his long trip.

A luncheon has been planned to be held at the Savoy hotel, to which all the film men have been invited. Automobiles have been secured in which to take Mr. Rothapfel sightseeing.

Several of the prominent exhibitors of the community are acting as a committee together with the manager of the Mutual office, to see that nothing is left undone to give Mr. Rothapfel the heartiest of welcomes. All are looking forward with interest to hear what he will tell them at the luncheon in his message of success to the exhibitors.

The Colonial Sold.

The Colonial theater, one of the smaller theaters in Denver, has changed hands. J. B. Wilton, well known in Georgia as proprietor of moving picture houses there, and now located in Denver, has secured part interest in it.

Features in Denver—Business Notes.

"Damaged Goods," the Mutual feature, had a most successful seven days' run in Denver at the Paris theater. The Paris is a five cent house, but the admission was increased to from fifteen cents to fifty cents, for box seats, and the house played to capacity the whole time. Much credit is to be given to the able management of C. C. Percy. Denver educators and clubwomen heartily endorsed this picture.

Manager Guilmore of the World Film corporation in Denver leaves Saturday morning for about a week to attend the manager's meeting in Chicago. There the new policy of the World will be discussed.

Manager Ellison of the Princess theater has Farrar in "Carmen" on for a week's run. He has arranged for a unique production here. The orchestra, in the first place, has been increased to eighteen pieces. Farrar records have been secured and the full orchestral score which was used at the time that these records were used have been secured. The Princess orchestra, which is one of the best in town, will use these scores to accompany the Farrar records. This is decidedly an innovation. The lobby has been attractively and appropriately decorated, and to further give the Carmen atmosphere, Manager Ellison has had his ushers wear torreador costumes. The effect is quite picturesque, and is causing much favorable comment.

Kiowa Company Building a Studio in Colorado

Kiowa—selected people; that is the definition of an Indian word, and that is why it has been chosen as a title for the new Colorado producing company which has been organized since September 4, but which has been lying low and saying nothing until ready for "real work."

Archibald Allison, the manager of the company, has just announced: "There have been so many failures and fakers here in Colorado who have made a big splash, and who have then dropped out of sight, that we know Colorado people are getting skeptical about moving picture production here, but now we feel confident that we can show them."

The Kiowa Film company, backed by eastern capital, and representing now $200,000, is building a studio at Elizabeth, Colo. The foundations are in and the work is progressing as rapidly as the carpenters can make it. The company has bought twelve acres and has an option on eighty more. Archibald Allison, the playwright, is the manager, and Mr. Laney is the financial agent. Mr. Allison is a man of theatrical experience. His sketches are on vaudeville circuits all over the United States. Amongst the most famous are "The Menace," "The Day of Reckoning," "The Prophesy of the Japanese Invasion," which was recalled by Bryan due to the feeling against the Japanese which he feared it would stir up, and the "Fighting Chance." George Spaulding, who has also had extensive experience in the theatrical world, will direct the pictures. Mr. Spaulding is now directing for one of the big picture companies in southern California. It is promised that some of the greatest stars of the moving picture and theatrical world will be seen in the Kiowa films, but announcement of who they are has not as yet been made public.

The first production of the Kiowa people will be for a fraternal organization, and will be made here in Denver. The first picture to be made in their own studio in Elizabeth, however, will be a six reel feature, "The Girl from Kiowa," which bids fair to be something different. Work will be started on these pictures some time about the first of next month.

EDUCATION BY PICTURES.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE extension division of the University of California at Berkeley has inaugurated its system of visual instruction and this plan of education is now in operation in Alameda county. All of the public schools in the state have access to this new course and the present collection of reels and stereopticon slides will be added to as rapidly as funds permit and the desired subjects can be found. Moving picture reels, stereopticon slides and a traveling museum containing specimens illustrating the progress of industrial manufacture will be sent out, each school being allowed to keep them for one week. At the close of the Exposition it is expected that it will be possible to secure possession of a large quantity of films of an industrial nature, there being not less than a quarter of a million feet of film now being shown at the fair, much of this being of the nature desired.

WORLD FILM MEN AT CHICAGO MEETING.

Ralph Clark and W. E. Knotts, of the San Francisco branch of the World Film corporation, left recently for Chicago to attend the meeting of branch managers of this company. Business has been picking up materially at the San Francisco office of late, country business showing a large increase. The Turner & Dahnken circuit has contracted to show Equitable (on World Film program) films throughout its entire chain of houses and has booked "Trilby" for the week of November 14 at the Tivoli theater.

MUTUAL MEN STEP UP.

J. R. Crone, who for the past two years has had charge of the Mutual exchanges in California, has been appointed manager of the Vogue Film company and left for Los Angeles this week to take up his new work. This change has been planned for some time but nothing definite was decided upon until this week, when Mr. S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film company, arrived for a short stay. Mr. Crone was one of the most popular exchange men that ever held a position in San Francisco and under his guidance the business of the Mutual here has reached a high level. He has been succeeded by Mr. X. K. Stout, who has been with the local office for a year and a half, and who for some time has been filling the position of assistant manager. The appointment of Mr. Stout to this position is a source of gratification to exhibitors in this territory, who realize that he is in very close touch with their needs.

TRIANGLE DATE ADVANCED.

The Triangle Film corporation has advanced the date for releases from the San Francisco office, and, according to the present schedule, November 7 has been set as the date when active business will be inaugurated. It is announced that splendid success has been met with in signing up country exhibitors, but as yet the service has not been placed in any large downtown house in San Francisco, although an announcement along this line will doubtless be made soon.

NEW CONCERN ENTERS FIELD.

The Pacific Coast Film Advertising company, of which H. F. Coates is president and treasurer and W. S. Hollenbeck general manager, has opened offices on the fifth floor of the Pacific building. This concern plans to make a specialty of comic cartoon advertising and has already placed service quite extensively. M. M. Rosenberg, a well known local film exchange man, is associated with the new concern.

BIG COMMERCIAL PLANT READY FOR BUSINESS.

The Sphinx Film company, formerly located on Jessie street, has taken quarters at 660 O'Farrell street, and has installed a large plant for handling commercial work. Developing and printing will be done for outside concerns, as well as for the producing department of this firm. Considerable of this has already been lined up and some Government work is being done. Frank J. Costello and Benj. S. Dean are directors with this company.

SOL LESSER IN LOS ANGELES.

Sol. L. Lesser, head of the Golden Gate exchange, and the All Star Features distributors, left recently on a short visit to Los Angeles to look over business interests and to visit the studios. The Golden Gate exchange is now releasing a weekly, with a comedy cartoon.

PRODUCER VISITS EXPOSITION.

Jesse Robbins, manager of the Essanay studio at Los Angeles, is in San Francisco to see the Exposition. He was formerly at Niles, near this city.

Nelson E. Edwards, who has been here for some time as local representative of the Hearst-Selig Pictorial Weekly, left recently for New York, en route to Rotterdam. He will join the Austro-German armies in the Balkans to take war pictures. Just before his departure from the Exposition City he was tendered a farewell dinner by leading publicity men.

Ackerman & Harris of this city have taken over the Spreckels theater at San Diego and the Victory at San Jose. Moving pictures and vaudeville will be shown in both houses.

THE TWO "CARMENS."

Portland Picture Lovers Compare Farrar with Bara—No Doubt About Which One Is.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE opera-loving public of Portland was given an opportunity to feast its eyes on two film versions of the famous opera, "Carmen," both playing in Portland the week of Oct. 31. Both are founded on Prosper Merimee's novelization of the story and a peculiarity of each production was that after seeing the film by one company, the other was treated so differently as to be highly interesting.

"Carmen," produced by the Lasky Company and featuring Geraldine Farrar, held the boards at the People's theater playing to big houses Sunday, Oct. 31, with the balance of the week unaccounted for. Harry Thorne, organist at the People's, is playing an elaborate score of music to the picture, having practiced several weeks to put the music in shape.

William Fox's "Carmen," with Theda Bara in the title role, drew immense crowds at the Majestic. Mr. James' musicians also arranged special "Carmen" music for the week.

Both productions were very well advertised and there was no perceptible falling off of business in either house, and the fact that two rival productions were showing the same week seemed an incentive to bring out crowds of theatergoers to both houses to compare the productions.

"STAR" CHANGED TO "PICKFORD"

Portland's newest picture theater is the Pickford. After a thorough overhauling and remodelling, the old name "Star" on the front of the building located at Park and Washington streets was painted over and a new playhouse, the Pickford, replaced one of Portland's pioneer picture theaters.

The building has been undergoing a thorough remodelling for several weeks and its opening, Oct. 30, revealed a larger and cozier theater than the old Star, with a finish that was a masterpiece of decorator's art. An entirely new marble front has been installed with a marquise extending along the entire front of the building. The entrance to the theater is on the corner instead of in the center of the building as formerly. New seating arrangements have been made, the balcony has been rebuilt and comfortable loges installed. The seating capacity is now 800.

The name "Pickford" was, of course, selected in honor of the screen star and the owners of the theater, the People's Amusement Company, will show first-run Paramount and World service. The opening bill was "Trilby," playing to the biggest Saturday night audiences in the history of the house. An orchestra has been added which is known as the Pickford Symphony Orchestra. Louis Christ is the manager of the new house.

NEW MANAGER FOR PEOPLE'S.

With the opening of the Pickford theater and the active management of that house by Louis Christ, the People's Amusement Company, also controlling the People's theater, has employed C. J. Stille as house manager of the latter house. Mr. Stille was formerly house manager of the Columbia theater under O. T. Bergner.

MUTUAL'S DOINGS.

J. S. Woody, who supervises the northwest offices of the Mutual Film, with headquarters in Portland, is making arrangements for the dinner to be given S. L. Rothapfel Nov. 7. Mr. Woody has been getting the Oregon exhibitors lined up for the past few weeks, and from the hearty responses received to Mr. Woody's invitations a rousing time is expected.

Mr. Woody recently called the managers of the northwest Mutual offices together in conference in Seattle to discuss the company's future policies. G. A. Reed of Seattle and W. J. Drummond of Spokane were present.

A. S. Kirkpatrick, road man out of Portland, and Jay Harrington, occupying the same position out of Seattle, have gone to Spokane to stimulate business in that territory. Mr. Kirkpatrick and Mr. Harrington have met with much success in spreading their propaganda showing exhibitors how to get results in the territory they have covered.

WITH LOCAL ROAD MEN.

Wallace Potter, Universal's sales expert, has come from Seattle to spend his allotted in the Portland territory. "But," said Emil Erickson, the assistant manager at the office of the Film Supply Company of Oregon, to the writer, "Don't publish what part of the territory Mr. Potter is working in." Mr. Potter divides his time between Portland and Seattle.

The Portland Metro office has added L. T. Pennybaker to its sales staff. Mr. Pennybaker was formerly with Universal and also in the film business on his own account.

SIMONTON RETURNS.

After an absence from Portland of nearly a month, F. M. Simonton, of the Standard Feature Film, has returned from a business trip through the Pacific Northwest, bringing with him news of returning prosperity. Conditions in Montana and Idaho have gotten past the promise stage, says Mr. Simonton, because the business is now there and prospects are favorable for its general westerly trend.

"TEMPLE" AGAIN "COZY."

The Temple theater, Pendleton, Ore., Downey and Rhodes, managers, which was remodelled and enlarged a short time ago, has changed its name to the "Cozy" by which it was formerly known. The Cozy reports big business with "Damaged Goods." Road men from Pendleton and Eastern Oregon report a steady continuation of good business.

Oregon Briefs.

The Opera House, Jefferson, Ore., formerly owned by R. Herkimer, has been sold to Woods and Miller.

The Anabelle theater, Archer Place, Portland, has reopened.

The Misses Clark and Ryan, special entertainers for children, gave an interpretation of the film version of Hansel and Gretel at the Echo theater, Portland, recently.

N. Olness, of the Economy Cinematographers Specialty Company, Portland, is back to work after several weeks' absence from his office following an operation for appendicitis.

In a Country Theater

Spuds and Cabbages, Wood, Fruits and Produce Are Good for Admission to Manager Beaver's Elk Theater in Small Washington Village—Is a Hustler—Good Programs, Advertising and All.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DOING a credit business part of the time, also taking in exchange for admission to his picture show onions, carrots, parsnips, celery, radishes, potatoes and other farm and garden produce as well as fuel is the way E. H. Beaver of Elk, Wash., located about 28 miles northeast of Spokane, reports he is making a success of his business. In response to an inquiry for some pointers on his proposition, I received the following from Mr. Beaver:

"I run the only show at Elk, a sawmill town of 200 people at present, one quarter of the population being Dutch, the balance being from nearly every part of the globe including Missouri. The show runs nights on Thursdays and Saturdays and the regular admission is 10 cents for children under 13, and 15 cents for adults. At present I am showing 'Perils of Pauline' on Thursday, having showed 'Kathlyn,' 'Lucile Love,' 'Trey O' Hearts' and 'Master Key.' I found that during the week the serials draw the crowds. 'Lucile Love' proved the best trade getter so far. My programs for Saturdays I have been picking from Mutual, World, Universal, Pathe and Kleine attractions, having used 'Anthony and Cleopatra,' 'Last Days of Pompeii' and several others including 'Officer 666' which was liked by every one. My admission for all the Klein attractions is 25 cents and 10 cents except 'Officer 666,' which was 20 cents and 10 cents.

"In order to get business in such a small place I find it necessary for me to do it the same as a store, on credit and taking farm products in exchange.

"I have taken in ten ricks of cordwood, several sacks of spuds, vegetables of all kinds and fruits. I advertise mostly by mailing lists, also by selling season tickets in advance for the serials, by contests such as giving tickets to people getting the most words from Beaver theater, also by taking pictures of events of interest to people locally and showing them on the screen. I also advertise by lantern slides, by cartooning jokes on Elk people, by mailing samples of moving picture films to every one and by house to house canvassing.

"By cartooning a series of slides about a bossy cow which walked into a home while the ladies were alone, and which did all kinds of damage before being put out by the men folks (who, by the way, were Dutch) I was able to increase my attendance that evening considerably just because people wondered what I would show on the screen about the event. Other things have happened that gave chances for such advertising. In fact one has to mix the show business with the home, the mill and the church to get results."

HEARD AT LOCAL MUTUAL OFFICE.

W. J. Drummond, manager of the Mutual Film corporation exchange in Spokane, just returned from Seattle where he attended a branch managers' meeting which was also attended by J. S. Woody and G. A. Reed. He announced that starting October 30 the Mutual would start remodeling and enlarging its exchange in Spokane by the addition of an adjoining room on First avenue thus doubling the size of the exchange.

A. S. Kirkpatrick of the Portland office and Jay Herrington of the Seattle office, both traveling representatives of the Mutual, returned to the city with Mr. Drummond and will cover this territory temporarily, working from the Spokane office.

One of the latest features to be started by any school in this section is that the Vera public school has purchased a moving picture outfit from the Mutual branch and is showing the Mutual Masterpictures in the school.

Manager J. W. Allender of the Lyric reports excellent success with second run Mutual masterpictures at five cents and that Seena Owen, in "The Yankee From the West," was a good drawing card.

A SPOKANE PATHE MAN.

Peter Carroll.

Engaged in the show business in one way or another for the past 25 years, P. L. Carroll, manager of the Pathe exchange, which he recently opened in Spokane, Wash., is doing his own road work in the field. He has been with the Pathe people since last March and previous to that was northwest man for William Fox with headquarters in Seattle for a time. He was also with the General Film company for a year, about three years ago and previous to that was with Sullivan & Considine for 12 years, during which time he was stage manager of the old Washington theater, Spokane, for a time and later was manager of the former Orpheum at Spokane for five and a half years.

Mr. Carroll is claimed to be a constant worker and a man who hangs on when he has a prospect in view for his products. One of his aims is to get an exhibitor to view any special film he is working on and it is reported of him that he told one exhibitor he would show the picture any time it suited the man if it were 4 a. m. He covers the greater part of this section including Idaho towns.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Short Items.

It was estimated that fully 1,500 children attended a Children's Hallowe'en party in the Liberty Saturday afternoon, October 30, when a "Spook Cap" was given to each child and special cartoons were shown aside from a special reel for the children.

The Clemmer theater gave a Hallowe'en program at 10 a. m. the same day as its regular Saturday morning program for children and reported an attendance of from 400 to 500 children.

Exhibitor Rues Having Prize Contest

Automobile Was the Prize—Man Who Managed Contest Played Double—Left Exhibitor Joseph F. Krom of Spokane Empress in Trouble.

A mob scene not on the bill and to quell which a squad of Spokane policemen was needed was enacted at the entrance to the Empress theater, Saturday night, October 23. This is a program with pictures and some vaudeville acts.

An automobile was to be awarded to the person selling the most tickets and Miss Josephine Lein of Hillyard was declared the winner. She got into the automobile mid the cheering of the audience and blew the horn then announced she would take all who helped her for a ride. At this juncture John Raymond appeared with an attachment for the machine showing that it had been assigned to him. An investigation showed that Charles F. Adelsperger, contest manager, had disappeared and at the same time the cash to pay for the machine vanished and the automobile had been assigned to Raymond who advanced the last $500 to pay for the car. He was to have been reimbursed the night the contest closed and the management announced the money was set aside for this purpose. The car cost $900. Friends of the girl cried, "Take the automobile away, we will help you," and assembled about the girl and the man until dispersed by the police. The police are now looking for Adelsperger on a charge of embezzlement.

Joseph F. Krom, manager of the Empress, ceased trying to adjust matters and turned all over to his attorney, George Crandell. The car is in the possession of John Raymond, who took it from Miss Lein, and Manager Krom in a later statement announced that Mrs. Raymond and not Miss Lein was the winner of the car on the final count which he said did not at first include a note for $500 Raymond had turned in for votes and which was not counted at first.

Krom then surrendered his interests in the theater and the talent called in L. C. Brown, former manager, and arranged to run the theater the remainder of the week and George Kelly of San Francisco has taken over the interests and is operating the theater starting October 31.

Vancouver Notes

New Features and Serials—Interesting Business Notes—Exhibitors.

The Bijou theater at Edmonton, Alberta, started off "The Broken Coin" to packed houses, induced by the wholesale distribution of presents, certain numbers on broken coins handed to patrons entitling them to prizes.

Robert Foster, chief operator at the Dominion theater in Vancouver, was married last week to Miss Peacock, of Sunderland, England. The bride-to-be came from England to join her future husband.

A. Farmilo, secretary of the Edmonton Trades and Labor Council, has announced that the striking employees have again returned to work at the Pantages theater, and the matter is well on the way to being settled definitely.

The first of the new Kleine-Edison features to be shown in Western Canada opened at the Orpheum in Vancouver Oct. 14, when Mrs. Fiske in "Vanity Fair," opened a three-day engagement. This picture is being brought in from the Kleine Seattle office by the Dominion Film Exchange of Vancouver. Manager E. R. Fauser reports that all Kleine features which have not been shown here will be imported for showing at the Orpheum here and the Royal Victoria in Victoria.

Vincent C. Knowles of the Westholme opera house, Prince Rupert, B. C., who has been quite seriously ill for some time, is expected to be out soon. A successful Red Cross entertainment was given at the Westholme one night last week, under the auspices of the Daughters of the Empire.

C. Barnard has replaced George Mellish at the Pathe Exchange in Vancouver.

The first of the Universal Broadway Features to be exhibited in Winnipeg was shown last week at the Lyceum. The entire series will be shown at this house. The Empress theater at Edmonton, Alberta, has also contracted for these features.

E. R. Benson is the new manager of the Columbia, one of the National Amusement company's houses in Vancouver, showing vaudeville and moving pictures.

The Regent theater in Calgary reports good business with its special programs of children's films, which are shown until 4 p. m. on Saturdays.

CENSOR AND EXHIBITOR.

The One is a Czar, Is the Other a Child?

"The Magic Skin," a Kleine-Edison feature release imported by the Dominion exchange of Vancouver, and booked for showing at the Orpheum, was rejected last week, and the World Film subject, "The Boss," filled the date. Manager James Pilling stated that in this instance he fully agreed with the censor's decision, and that while the picture would undoubtedly be acceptable in many cities, he himself seriously doubted the advisability of showing it in Vancouver. Standards have become so narrow here that when better conditions in the government finally arrive, it will probably be found necessary to broaden the viewpoint gradually, and by degrees to prevent a possible reaction. This instance, however, well illustrates the attitude of the great majority of exhibitors, and it might be pointed out to the little Czars of the British Columbia government that the manager of a moving picture theater is just as anxious not to displease his customers as a merchant in any other line of business.

One of the ridiculous decisions of the week was the rejection, among other short subjects, of Essanay's George Ade comedy, "The Fable of the Roystering Blades," which was condemned for the crime of "ridiculing the temperance movement." Said a local exhibitor: "If I care to show a picture such as this harmless comedy, and take the risk of offending some temperance people, with a consequent loss of their patronage, that should be my own affair, and no concern of the censor. We may next expect to discover a new regulation prohibiting the showing of the jitney bus, on the ground that it might be distasteful to the local street car company."

Changes at the Patricia, Powell River.

William Carr, chief operator at the Patricia theater at Powell River, B. C., ever since the house was taken over by R. H. Scanlon, has left for Bend, Oregon, with the intention of acquiring a house of his own in that section. In 1912 Mr. Carr owned the Grand in Rainier, Wash., and has operated all over the coast, as well as in Mexico.

Miss Helen Covert, formerly of the Crown theater in Courtenay, B. C., is now Mr. Scanlon's secretary, replacing Miss Trovinger. Myron McLead is now chief operator. With a new assistant operator, and a new musician engaged, Mr. Scanlon says he has his hands full.

A Chinky Charlie Chaplin.

Two Chinamen and one white man dragged a third Chinaman into the police station in Vancouver one night last week, and released him before Sergt. McKay. "You no savvy me?" inquired the Celestial. "I Chollie Chaplin"—and he clattered across the floor in approved Chaplin style. He next informed Sergeant McKay, very confidentially, that he was a German spy. He was finally locked up, to be examined as to his sanity.

Bans "The Spoilers"

British Columbia Censor Fastidiously Refuses Permit to Show Selig Feature as "Immoral"—Vainly Tries to Forbid Private Showing—Local Newspapers Take Matter Up—Will Lead to Better Censoring.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BRITISH COLUMBIA last week achieved the doubtful distinction of becoming what is said to be the first place in the world which has seen fit to prohibit the showing of the Selig nine-reel production of Rex Beach's Alaskan story, "The Spoilers." The fastidious censor in Vancouver actually had the effrontry to condemn this picture as too "immoral" to be exhibited. George L. Broy and Sam W. Whitehead, who are handling the subject in Canada, and have just completed a successful tour across the entire Dominion, pointed out to the local official that censorship boards in all the other provinces had not only passed the picture in its entirety, but had enthusiastically praised the production as one of the greatest ever brought into this country; hundreds of press notices were submitted, demonstrating the favorable impression created by the picture in all parts of the world—interviews in which ministers and others indorsed the film; but these had no effect on the censor and his minions. When it was suggested that he cut out the objectionable portions, the official stated that if all the scenes which were objectionable to him were cut out, there would be no story left.

Local Newspapers Take Up the Fight.

Local newspaper offices were visited by those in charge of the picture, and arrangements were made for a private showing at the Colonial where Manager Hector Quagliotti had intended to show the feature next week. The censor, evidently perceiving that he was about to get into hot water, attempted to prevent the private showing, by informing Mr. Quagliotti that even an exhibition not open to the public would be against the law. As a regulation such as this would prevent the projection of an uncensored picture even for the benefit of an exchange manager or exhibitor, the bluff failed to succeed, and after legal advice had been secured on the question two private performances were given, at which were present newspaper editors and other prominent citizens.

As a result, every paper published in Vancouver editorially disagreed with the censor's decision and called for a more sensible administration of the office, while among all those who witnessed the exhibition there was considerable mystification as to why the picture should have been questioned at all.

Will Help the Cause.

While the present case works an undeserved hardship on Messrs. Broy and Whitehead, the fight which they have undertaken will undoubtedly be of vast benefit to the exhibitors of this province, by awakening the newspapers, and through them the people, to the silly rulings of the censor.

Mr. Quagliotti was hard hit this week, as several other pictures, booked for exhibition at the Colonial theater during the week, were also rejected; among them "Just Jim" (five-reel Universal Broadway Feature).

Rather a peculiar feature of the case is that one of the two owners of the Colonial property is Attorney-General Bowser, who has throughout supported the censor in his ridiculous decisions, and has been reported to be decidedly unfriendly toward the moving picture industry as a whole. Mr. Quagliotti, taking with him the rejected "Just Jim," has left for Victoria to interview the Attorney-General, and put the matter squarely before him. "If a large proportion of my features, after being extensively advertised, are condemned by the censor," said Mr. Quagliotti, "I cannot continue under the large rent I am at present paying for the Colonial." Although he has heretofore been a very extensive user of newspaper space, he now contemplates confining himself to heralds exclusively, unless some relief can be obtained.

Messrs. Broy and Whitehead also went to the capital, to lay their case regarding "The Spoilers" before the attorney general.

Rev. Stillman Criticises Us All.

At a meeting of the Social Service Council in Vancouver last week, the National Board of Censorship, the manufacturers of moving pictures, and even the MOVING PICTURE WORLD itself came in for considerable adverse criticism during a talk on the censorship question by Rev. R. F Stillman. It was a source of amazement, said Mr. Stillman, to discover that the National Board of Censorship consists of individuals in the employ of the manufacturers, from whom they must necessarily take their orders, and pass anything, no matter how objectionable, that the manufacturers may see fit to produce. Evidently it did not occur to the reverend gentleman that individuals engaged in inspecting the product of any industry must of necessity be supported by that industry, and that if those engaged in the trade in British Columbia were not forced to contribute the censor himself might have to go to work.

The speaker read from the censor's files several reasons for recent rejections, but gave no titles in connection with them, so that his auditors could not ascertain whether or not the reasons given were sensible and just. The censor's findings were accepted without investigation as being correct in all cases. Although Mr. Stillman admitted that he had not seen the picture, he severely condemned "The Spoilers," because the censor had said it was immoral. Editors of local newspapers, who have freely commented on the situation since the private showing of this production, were censured for ridiculing the censor.

The speaker had at hand copies of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, characterized as the mouthpiece of the manufacturers in their great campaign for unrestrained license in moving pictures. Statements in the World to the effect that "film men . . . know how to strike back at the reactionary politicians" and "the screen is not a pulpit" were quoted as showing the sinister intentions of the picture interests. Headlines of the Vancouver correspondence in the issue of October 23 were read, and the speaker pointed out that the great political conspiracy had extended even to this city.

Bishop Greer and National Board.

Rev. Mr. Vance, who also made some remarks on the subject, was pained and surprised to find the name of Bishop Greer among those serving on the National Censorship Board, and announced that he was taking the matter up through the proper channels, with a view to informing the Bishop of the undesirable nature of the body which was using his name. When this is accomplished, Mr. Vance expects to see the Bishop make trouble for the film men, "right there on their own doorstep." This speaker announced that he doubted if there was really any censoring done at all, and as proof that it is not done submitted that some films have incorporated in the strip bearing the title, the legend "Passed by the National Board of Censorship." Mr. Vance recognized the great expense involved in bringing a picture into this province, but stated that if a subject is brought in and rejected, the picture men deserve no sympathy.

LOVE AND LAW (Nov. 22).—The cast: William Duncan, George Stanley, Ann Drew.

Jimmy and the Deacon are rivals for the rich widow's hand, and the Deacon with his little Flivver has so far won out. Jimmy desperately spends his bank roll on a classy little racing car, and the widow thereafter refuses to even go near the "Flivver." The Deacon, to get square, uses his pull with the Town Council to pass an ordinance making it unlawful for any one to go over sixteen miles an hour on the surrounding roads and Jimmy is one of the first victims of the new law. He and the widow are dragged to court and Jimmy gets ten days. Along with most of the town's prominent citizens, Jimmy is set to work on the country roads a la Chain Gang, but they hire a bunch of "husks" to do the work and the prisoners enjoy themselves with cabaret performances in the jail.

The Deacon attempts to butt in, but they tie a beer keg to the back of his Flivver, then a boy tells him his house is on fire. The Deacon breaks all records getting home, draws down ninety days in jail and several damage suits because of the terrific speed he makes to rescue his insurance papers. Jimmy and the widow on their honeymoon leave the Deacon massaging the road with a shovel and pondering over Jimmy's advice: "When placing tacks on the other fellow's chair to wear iron trousers himself."

So devoted to his books that he gradually grows away from his wife, Margaret, and daughter, Eileen, Ashley is suddenly brought to realize this by their friendship for Jack Arden, a widower with one child. Margaret's sister, Dora, and Ross, her husband, come on for a visit, and Dora, who is weak and frivolous, starts a flirtation with Jack Arden. The affair grows serious and Margaret worries greatly. She attempts to help her sister escape from the attentions of Arden, which have now become annoying, and gets herself into trouble. Her husband, in his present state of mind, misunderstands the situation, and when he sees Arden embrace Margaret by mistake shoots and kills him.

Ashley then denounces his wife, despite her frantic explanations, and turns her out of the house, without even permitting her to say goodbye to their child. Fifteen years later, Ashley is still unrelenting, and his innocent wife is in a convent, while Eileen is the only ray of sunshine in Ashley's gloomy home. Eileen, now a young lady, falls in love with young Robert Arden, the image of his dead father, but Ashley sternly separates the young couple without a word of explanation. Ashley is stricken with apoplexy and dies. Robert, determined to get to the bottom of the mystery, finds letters which give him some light on the subject. Meanwhile, Dora Ross, who had gone to India, returns and in a powerfully dramatic manner tells the whole story. She goes with Robert to the convent, where Eileen's mother is found, and complete explanations follow. Margaret forgives Dora and Robert marries Eileen, thus providing a happy termination all around.

Daddy Jim, remembering Aunt Susan's boyhood doughnuts, is delighted to receive an invitation from her to spend Thanksgiving with her, and to bring his family. After a long and tiresome train ride, they find no one at the station to meet them but the driver of a dilapidated Ford. They make the best of it, climb in, and after a bone-racking ride over the rough country roads, the little car suddenly stops dead. The driver "reckons they lost some of the machinery back a ways," so all have to get out and walk the rest of the way. Mother Dear and Daddy receive a warm welcome from Auntie, but Sonny is the object of continual teasing by his five little cousins, "The Imps." Trouble follows rapidly, until Sonny unfortunately knocks over a cherished plant of Auntie's and is sent to his room dinnerless. Sonny climbs out of the window and runs back to a roadhouse they had passed, where he makes friends with Tubby, the owner's son. The dinner is spoiled, so all go to the roadhouse, where they find the little rascal enjoying a royal dinner. A happy reunion follows.

GHOSTS AND FLYPAPER (Nov. 25).—The cast: Anne Schaefer, Marguerite Reid, Geo. Kunkel, Alfred Vosburgh, Otto Lederer.

The Widow Brown strongly disapproves of her daughter Grace's love affair with Billy Hill, and the young people almost despair. The widow has a house for rent that is reputed to be haunted, and it is a great burden. Billy's father, Silas Hill, and his cousin, Jasper Green, are rivals for the buxom widow's hand—and property. With an eye for business, the widow coyly suggests Silas and Jasper secure a permanent tenant for the haunted house, promising to marry the one who succeeds. Silas nearly wins out, but Jasper plays ghost and frightens the tenant away. Jasper gets a tenant for the house, but Silas happens to hit on the same scheme, and his ghostly antics drive out the would-be resident.

Billy sees his dad with the ghostly raiment on and after securing a promise from the widow that Grace shall be his if he locates the spooks Billy tells Silas and Jasper he has a tenant for the house. Both men decide to play ghost. and with the help of flypaper, some rope and some rough and tumble mixing in the dead of night the "ghosts" are captured and brought to the widow. She angrily drives both men out with a broom, then when Billy says he and Grace are the "permanent tenants," smilingly gives her consent to their marriage.

ALL FOR THE LOVE OF A GIRL (Nov. 26).—The cast includes Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew.

After meeting Elizabeth Ann, the Chairman of the Publicity Committee of Woman Suffrage, Mayor Hawkins allows his infatuation for her to grow into love and gradually overcomes his prejudice against Woman Suffrage, until he is finally converted to the Cause. He is coerced into promising to speak on Woman Suffrage, and, worn out by overwork, he collapses during his speech, and is carried to the hospital. There he dreams a terrible dream, in which he seems to be attired in the latest feminine fashion of the year 1950, with a wrist-watch, vanity case, etc., and being walloped all over the place by huge man-like women dressed in exaggerated suffragette style. Then the poor fellow is turned out into the cruel world with his three children, and in his delirium he yells so hard for his children, the hospital doctors and Elizabeth Ann, who is by his side, borrow three children from an orphanage nearby, to soothe and humor the patient. Hawkins safely passes the crisis and under Elizabeth's tender care, is soon well once more. When last seen, Hawkins is welcoming three new babies to his home.

A MODEL WIFE (Special—Two Parts—Nov. 27).—The cast: Lillian Walker, Antonio Moreno, Louise Beaudet, L. Rogers Lytton, Lillian Burns, Helen Pillsbury.

Robert Blake, whose father has a big dressmaking establishment, is in love with Kitty, who works in her aunt's, Mme. Helene's millinery shop. Blake, Sr., wishes his son to marry Violet, daughter of one of his biggest customers. The girl is ill-tempered and snobbish, but has fallen in love with Robert. Her mother invites him to accompany them to the Vitagraph theater, but he declines, pleading previous engagement, which they discover, is to take Kitty to the same theater.

Mother and daughter contemplate revenge. They warn John Blake of his son's infatuation for the little milliner, and he goes to the shop, where he has been told Robert is calling, to give him a piece of his mind. There he is persuaded that Kitty is in reality not a girl at all, but a wonderful model or automaton. Kitty poses on a pedestal without winking an eyelash, and Blake is completely fooled. Robert persuades him to buy it for their showroom, and dad insists on having it delivered at once. However, Kitty is game and allows herself to be crated in and carted off to the Blake concern in an express wagon. During her enforced imprisonment in the showroom, Kitty catches a burglar with the pistol-like electric flashlight Robert has given her. Robert on learning this sends for his father, explains all to the astonished gentleman, and expatiates on Kitty's bravery until he relents and gives his consent to their marriage. All return to the basement shop where Madame Helene is appraised of the happy ending of the little romance.

Craddock tells young Ranson his story. General Craddock, years before in India, was very happy with his wife. Captain Alva stole the woman's affections. On a visit to the temple where the jewels of Rannah were kept, Alva and Craddock's wife are informed that all those who had attempted to steal the jewels in the past met with a terrible fate.

That night Alva arranged with a ship captain to carry Craddock's wife and him away. Alva returned to the temple to steal the jewels. In the meantime General Craddock ordered a salute to be fired that night in honor of Hassam Bey, the martyred hero. After a terrific fight Alva obtained the treasure and he and Mrs. Craddock started toward the waiting ship in a rowboat after he had hidden the jewels in the mouth of the cannon. Captain Craddock and the soldiers came to the cannon and Craddock personally fired the honor shot. Out on the sea, Alva and Mrs. Craddock fell dead as the shot struck them.

"Thus through the vengeance of Rannah and the friendship of Hassam Bey, which he pledged to me even after his death, I learned the awful truth about my wife," says General Craddock to Ranson, as he finished telling him the story. Then he urges the young man to be thankful for the discovery of his supposed sweetheart's real character.

Blaisdell and Bill enter the office and hear Simpson inside the vault. The crook fears that a concussion incident to blowing the safe might kill the man within and flees.

Inside, Simpson signals the word "help" by pencil tapping. Blaisdell recognizes the telegrapher's code, and taps on his side of the vault, "Signal the combination." Blaisdell opens the vault as the combination is signaled to him in time to save the cashier's life. Simpson then surprises Blaisdell by extending his hand and saying: "I am going to invest in a human soul. Go to another city and start clean."

Ruth Rising, a society bell, is beloved by both Mason and Humphries, rival candidates for Mayor. When Ruth hears that Mason has been elected, she agrees to become his wife purely through ambition. Humphries vows revenge, and plots to assist Walker, the "boss," in the latter's plan to "get" the new Mayor.

Mason meets Margaret Macy in the park and she is enthusiastic over his determination to clean up the city. "Boss" Walker, seizing upon the fact of Margaret's friendship for Mayor Mason, and that in her reform work Margaret often visits questionable resorts, plans to ruin the reputation of the Mayor. He makes it appear through a letter that the Mayor is accepting bribes from the underworld. Will Macy is given the letter to place in the Mayor's pocket, but he falls asleep when he gets home, and Margaret finding the letter, changes it and writes another one pointing to the innocence of the Mayor. Will places this letter in the Mayor's pocket.

Foiled in this plot, they have Ruth Rising see Margaret call at the home of the Mayor and when Ruth publicly breaks her engagement with the Mayor they have a newspaper story which they hold until their big card is played. Walker lures Margaret to visit a questionable resort. The house is raided during Margaret's visit and she is arrested. Then it is they play up a big newspaper story which involves the name of the Mayor. Will Macy, when he hears what has happened to his sister, upbraids Walker in such a manner that Walker also has Macy jailed.

The Council prepares to remove the Mayor. The Chief of Police, in the meantime, has listened to Margaret's and Will's story and is convinced there is a plot against the Mayor. The three start for the Council chamber. Just as the Council is about to take action Will and Margaret enter with the Chief of Police. They tell their story and produce the evidence showing the conspiracy against the Mayor. Mayor Mason's name is cleared, and Walker, Humphries and the gang then have to face the law for their misdeeds. Mason takes Ruth's hand and they see more than friendship in each other's eyes.

CARTOONS IN A SANITARIUM (Nov. 24).—"I met a girl in the country and loved her from the first. But she was a nurse and had to go back to work. When a fellow's in love, he'll do anything, so I played sick and went to the sanitarium where she worked. That part was easy, but—the fussy old patients in that place always kept yelling for something or other, and I hardly got a moment to talk to nursie."

"Then I got a briliant idea. I got out my copy of the Animated Grouch Chaser, and every time a patient yelled, nursie gave that patient the book. That kept them quiet, all right. And no wonder when they saw Kid Kelly's stunts."

"Kid Kelly has a lolly-pop. Little girls like lolly-pops, so Kelly just naturally gets in strong with girlie. Then Fido swipes the lolly-pop, and girlie starts to bawl. Poor Kelly has an awful time getting girlie to shut up. Then Sissy Boy comes along, and tries to steal Kelly's kid, ah! what Kelly does to Sissy Boy. Poor Sissy Boy!"

"Then there's Hicks and his trip to Dr. Cook's pole, chased by a bear just mean enough to do anything. Then there's Tom, the Tamer and the Trick Kangaroo. No wonder those other patients stopped yelling. They weren't patients any more. The book cured them."

"Needless to say, I won nursie. She agreed to be my wife, and the doctors couldn't stop her either. I must say, though, if it weren't for the Grouch Chaser and the way it kept those cranky patients still, I never would have gotten a chance to tell nursie I loved her."

THE RING OF THE BORGIAS (Special—Four Parts—Nov. 26).—The cast: Cora Linton, Augustus Phillips, Helen Strickland, Richard Tucker, Margaret Prussing, Carlton King.

Lola and Valasquez, to adventurers, are sorely in need of funds. They chance to meet Archibald Rivers, a banker, in a cafe one night, and begin to weave their web about him. Rivers has been entrusted with the care of Mary Harrison, an orphan. He is trustee of the fortune left her by her father. Mary has come to live in Rivers' house. She meets Donald, his stepson, and the seeds of love soon take root in the young folks. Mrs. Rivers is taken up entirely by her social duties. Her lack of interest in her home and husband causes Rivers to fall an easy prey to the wiles of Lola. Soon we find him enthralled by her, lavishing gifts upon her and satisfying her every wish. During all this time Rivers has been suffering severe financial reverses and, on many occasions, has been employing Mary's money to help him in his own business.

Lola, meanwhile, has been inflamed with a passionate longing for Rivers. She wants him as her own, unmolested by any others. She has been reading of the crimes of the Borgias, and her fiendish mind evolves a plan to get Mrs. Rivers out of her way. One evening, as Mrs. Rivers gives a masque ball at her home, Lola, disguised by her long domino and mask, enters the ball room. She has prepared the fatal ring with its prong dipped in the venom of a Cobra snake. It takes but a moment and Mrs. Rivers is dead. Donald is determined to root out the mystery. Rivers, whose speculations have caused him to lose Mary's fortune, sees that his only chance to escape from punishment lies in his marriage to her. But Lola is firm. With Mrs. Rivers out of the way, Rivers must belong to her only. Donald, however, has labored ceaselessly, and his efforts have determined Lola as the murderess of his mother. But Fate has decided to become mistress of the situation. The drama shall be ended as she decrees! Valasquez, whom Lola has discarded for Rivers, kills his rival in a jealous rage. Lola has but one course left—she turns her weapon against herself, and as the Cobra's poison rushes through her veins, she falls across the body of Rivers. In the web she wove for the fly, the spider found her own undoing! Donald and Mary are left alone. Together they will strive to recover her fortune, and to spend their days, wrapped in a love as powerful and unfailing as the Cobra's venom in the Borgias ring.

ROSES OF MEMORY (Nov. 27).—The cast: Edward Earle, Bessie Learn, Augustus Phillips, T. Tamamoto.

Robert and Bessie Townsend have just been married and in memory of the day, each presses a rose. Jack Charleton, one time rival of Robert for the hand of Bessie, still presses his attentions upon her. Returning home one evening, Robert is injured in an automobile accident. Weeks pass, and we find him wheeled about in an invalid chair. The doctors shake their heads in doubt. Whether he will ever regain control of his limbs is a question. Bessie, worn and tired from nursing Robert, goes to the country for rest.

Here Jack Charleton makes his appearance again. He plays upon Robert's weakness, and convinces him that Bessie should be released to marry a man who is not a cripple. Robert arranges with his lawyer for the necessary papers for a divorce and Charleton follows Bessie to the country to press his suit once more. At this point Fate plays a hand. Bessie, who has been listening to the words of Charleton, comes upon the rose she pressed on her wedding day. Memories spring back, and her love for Robert once more outweighs all else. She rushes back home to be at his side.

That morning a burglar enters the house. He prepares to leave with a jewel case, but Robert, making an almost superhuman effort to walk, attacks him. Of course, the fight is brief. Robert is overpowered, and left unconscious on the floor. In the struggle, the jewel case has been opened, and in place of the expected jewels it contains—the withered leaves of a rose. In a rage, the burglar crumples the flower in his hand and throws it on Robert's unconscious form. As Bessie enters the house, she discovers the body on the floor. She bends over him, and sees these sacred leaves once more. Again her heart fills with love for Robert, a better and a stronger love than she had ever known before. Hereafter her place will be by him, to help, to nourish and to make him strong again, even as her love was made strong by the rose.

THE CHIEF INSPECTOR (Sp.—2 parts—Nov. 16).—The cast: Charles H. Mailes, Vera Sisson, G. Raymond Nye, Jose Ruben, Madge Kirby.

George Palmer, a corrupt Internal Revenue collector, is bribed by Jones, a small distiller, to falsify records of shipments. Palmer's daughter, Lucille, goes to Washington to visit her school chum. At the country club she meets Arthur Wheeler, an inspector of the Internal Revenue office. Lucille has had a love affair with Bob Hicks, son of a distiller; but she develops an affection for Wheeler. Hicks and his father are introduced by Jones to a lobbyist named Kendig, who is active at Washington. During Lucille's absence Bob Hicks takes up with a former sweetheart, Molly Grant. Lucille returns betrothed to Wheeler, and starts to tell her father the great secret; but he is preoccupied by fears of discovery, and she retires with wounded feelings. Bob Hicks renews his suit, but she tells him she is engaged to Wheeler. She also says that she would never have married him, anyhow, because she disapproves of his father's business. In a huff Hicks retorts that some day he will tell her about her father's business, and leaves her vaguely alarmed.

Kendig writes from Washington that Wheeler is on the job and cannot be bribed. Nevertheless Bob Hicks tries to bribe him. He pretends to consent and telephones his superiors at Washington. In the records of the Hicks business he finds evidence of Palmer's crookedness, and, despite the fact that the crook is his sweetheart's father, goes to Palmer's office. Palmer threatens him with a pistol. Wheeler snatches the weapon, which explodes during the struggle. Palmer falls dead. Hicks accuses Wheeler of murder; but before he can be arrested, a girl rushes in and declares that Palmer was shot by accident from the house across the street. In the room indicated is found Molly Grant who, desperate because Hicks had spurned her, and fired the fatal shot at her recreant lover. The bullet, missing Hicks, had entered the window of Palmer's office and killed him. Wheeler is exonerated and marries Lucille after breaking up the system.

THE GAMBLER OF THE WEST (Special—Fourt Parts—Nov. 17).—The cast: W. J. Butler, Violet Reid, George Pearce, Charles Perley, Robert Drouet, John Brammall, Charles H. West, Alfred Paget, Master A. Short, Walter Lewis, Charles Gorman, A. Hollingsworth, Linda Arvidson, Gertrude Robinson, E. Stone, Clara T. Bracey.

In Wyoming, during pioneer days, Tom Grey, a prospector, and his family are westward bound. Grey is shot dead by Indians, and while his wife and daughter, Mabel, escape, little baby Grey is carried off by Red Fox, the Indian chief. In Denver, later, Mrs. Grey marries Richard Kent, a wealthy widower, with one child, Dick. Several years elapse and we find Mrs. Grey-Kent again widowed. Dick Kent, who has been a profligate, is disinherited by his father in favor of his step-sister, Mabel, Dick receiving only an allowance. Mabel, always having cherished the hope of one day finding her brother who was stolen by the Indians, sends her step-brother, Dick, to Wyoming in search of him. Dick gets into bad company, forgets his mission and borrows large sums of money from Mike Clancy, a local "bad man." Finally Dick receives a letter from Mabel, stating that she is coming on to assist in the search. Mike demands the money Dick owes him. Dick tells him he is broke and that his wealthy step-sister is due to arrive. Mike sees Mabel's picture (which Dick carries) and makes up his mind to win her. He places Mabel's picture on the "Aurora" bar and suggests a toast. "Lucky Jack" Gordon, a square gambler, objects to this proceeding and incurs the enmity of Mike. Mabel arrives, and Mike and Dick try to induce her to live at "Tenderfoot Sal's Palace of Mirth," Sal being their pal. This causes a clash between Jack, Bridget Farley and Mike's gang, as Mabel declares she will go to Mrs. Farley's home. Mike and Sal, who has her cap set for Jack, vow to be revenged. Mabel tells Jack that Dick is only her step-brother. Jack promises Mabel to help find her brother.

Jack locates Mabel's brother with the Indians and learns that he is now known as "Little Great Bear." Red Fox's daughter, "Sunset," and "Little Bear" go to the Aurora Tavern for fire-water. Unknown to each other, "Little Bear" and Mabel meet. Mike and Dick learn that "Little Bear" is Mabel's brother. They decide that with the boy out of the way Mabel will be the only one standing between Dick and the inheritance. They throw "Little Bear" over the cliff and ride away, believing him to be dead. Sunset notifies Jack, who rescues "Little Bear." Jack tells Mabel of his discovery and Mabel brings "Little Bear" to Mrs. Farley's. Mike, determined to marry Mabel, forcibly carries her to Sal's house, where they subsequently capture "Little Bear" when he attempts to rescue Mabel. Jack, Mrs. Farley and the "Aurora's bar tender retake "Little Bear" and Mabel, only to again lose "Little Bear," who is carried off by Red Fox. Mike, Dick and Sal regain "Little Bear" with the aid of firewater and money just as Jack and a large force from the camp arrive.

Jack demands "Little Bear" and the chief refuses to give him up. A battle ensues between the village force and the Indians, during which Sal gets away with "Little Bear" on horseback, pursued by Mabel. Mabel catches up to Sal and they fight with knives for "Little Bear." "Sunset" aids Mabel to escape with her brother and kills Sal in the glare of the blazing prairie grass, ignited by the gun play of the Indian fight. The Indians are vanquished, Mike and Dick killed, but Jack learns that Mabel and her brother are lost in the prairie fire. He rescues them and brings them safely to Mrs. Farley's, where he (The Gambler of the West) wins his highest stakes—Mabel's love and her hand in marriage.

THE EYES OF THE SOUL (Nov. 18).—The cast: Jose Ruben, Claire McDowell.

Joe Abbott, a crook, escapes from the detectives who are on his trail, and gets out of town on a train. In a distant village he enters the first likely-looking house and proceeds to rob it. He is interrupted by the entrance of a girl, who does not see the pistol with which he covers her. Realizing that she is blind, Abbott replaces her money in the desk drawer which he has opened with a skeleton key. She becomes aware of his presence and he is forced to explain, so he says he has come to read the gas meter. Thus he gets away, believing himself unsuspected; but the girl finds his keys in the door and realizes that he is a thief. He returns and asks her for employment, for she lives alone and needs help. Redeemed through honest labor, he is happy in his love for her when the detectives discover him and take him away. In a great emotional scene, whose power moves to tears the callous bloodhounds of the law, he bids her farewell, pretending that he is going away on business. After serving his sentence he returns and confesses to the girl his true character. But she tells him that she knew it all the while, and lays her head upon his breast.

THE LONEDALE OPERATOR (Nov. 19—Biograph re-issue No. 24).—The cast: Blanche Sweet, Francis Grandin, Wilfred Lucas, Edward Dillon.

The daughter of the station agent, betrothed to the young engineer, sees her sweetheart off when he is called to duty, and enters the station where she finds her father ill. Left alone, she receives a money shipment for the Lonedale Mining Company. Two tramps attack the station to steal the money. The girl wires for help, and her sweetheart is dispatched to her aid with right of way over all trains. In a race against time he breaks records and arrives at Lonedale just as the thieves, having forced the door, are halted by the glitter of steel in the hand of the girl. When the tramps have been captured, the girl shows her lover a little spanner which she has used as a weapon.

THE WALL BETWEEN (Nov. 15).—The cast: William E. Parsons, Velma Whitman, C. Shumway.

Arrived in town with a clean-up from his rich mine in the mountains, Walsh, a miner, falls into the avaricious hands of Jennie Mortimer, a dance hall girl, and Slim Schaeffer, her piano-player lover. Professing affection for the rough miner, Jennie leads him into a proposal of marriage and persuades him to take her to his claim. After a few days at the miner's camp, Slim arrives. On a pretense he stays. When a rich clean-up has been accumulated, Walsh is rudely awakened by overhearing the deceitful Jennie and her paramour planning to depart with the ore.

Walsh confronts Jennie with her perfidy while Slim is gloating in the tunnel of the mine. Dropping a lighted cigarette, Slim inadvertently touches off a dynamite fuse and goes further into the mine. While Jennie is struggling with Walsh to prevent him from following and shooting her paramour, they are startled by hearing an explosion. Running to the mine they find the mouth of the tunnel completely sealed by a rock slide and Slim entombed alive.

Leaving Jennie with a sack of gold Walsh departs, while she tries frantically but in vain to rescue her lover. After hours of futile effort the completely exhausted woman looks up to see a buzzard awaiting its prey. She collapses.

AN ACCIDENT POLICY (Nov. 16).—The cast: D. L. Don, Eleanor Blanchard, Carrie Reynolds, John J. Dolson, George Egan.

John Barrow works hard and every Saturday brings home his pay envelope undisturbed, because he has a "demanding wife." He soon tires of being hen-pecked, and, discovering the resting place of the family bank-roll he annexes it, determined to take at least one whirl at real life. At the corner thirst emporium, John falls for the persuasive chatter of an accident insurance agent and parts with most of the family fortune for premium on an accident policy. The shock of expense aided by the "joy water" renders John a bit unseaworthy and his daughter's sweetheart, happening by, acts as the good samaritan and leads him homeward.

Friend wife explores and discovers the accident policy. She commands and demands that John meet with an accident that the bank-roll may be returned. John tries to make good in fifty-seven different attempts, finally succeeding by sitting on a large rock which is propelled skyward with a generous charge of dynamite, John accompanying the rock on its journey. John is carried home and his anatomy is cemented together and the insurance collected.

Then the Barrow family takes a fly at aristocratical existence. The "flat" becomes "an apartment" and "company" becomes "guests" until a phoney Count, who Mrs. Barrow has decreed shall wed her daughter, gets $30,000 in real money from Father Barrow in a bunk mining scheme, and back goes the bunch to the old life, the unopened pay envelope and no more Counts or accident insurance policies.

John Clark, State Senator of a rural district, is in love with Mary, a farmer's daughter. Clark is later elected Governor of the State. He becomes enamored of Jane Guyton, daughter of his campaign manager. Jane and Clark are married and Mary is forgotten. Jane becomes deeply in debt through card playing and accepts a loan from Worden, a State Senator, who, anxious for the passing of his irrigation bill, exacts, in making the loan, a promise from Jane that she will influence the Governor's acceptance of the bill. Jane attempts to sway the Governor, who has misgivings as to her interest. He investigates and finds Worden responsible.

Mary, learning of the bill and appreciating that its passing means the ruination of her father's farm lands, goes to the Governor to plead for his veto. Jane, fearing serious result from her bargain with Worden, goes to his apartments to return the borrowed money. There she meets Mary, who at the Governor's suggestion, has come to plead with Worden for amendments in the bill. Clark is informed by his enemies that his wife is at Worden's apartment. He goes to verify his suspicion. Mary and Jane both hide in an adjoining room, and when Worden is accused by the Governor, Mary comes from hiding to shield Jane, who escapes from the rear of the house. She explains that the Senator has agreed to the proposed amendment and leads Clark to his home where Jane is found—resolved that her cards have passed from her life forever.

Happiness comes again in the Senator's family and Mary is wooed and won by Bob, the Governor's secretary.

MARGIE OF THE UNDERWORLD (Special—Two Parts—Nov. 18).—The cast: Lucille Younge, Madge Philbrick, Melvin Mayo, J. A. Morley, R. H. Gray.

In a small hotel a sudden alarm of fire finds the guests compelled to make hasty escapes. Mr. Harris sends his wife out ahead of him with their girl baby, while he loiters to gather some of their valuables. When he does not immediately follow, Mrs. Harris gives the baby to a young man, Lawson, to hold for a moment, and she rushes back. The police, coming up to disperse the crowd, will not listen to Lawson when he attempts to explain, and he is clubbed away with the baby in his possession. Angered, he determines to keep the child, and Margie is brought up in the home of a family of crooks.

Sixteen years later Margie is discovered, a shoplifter, but with the influences of the city rescue misison, begins to shape her life back to its original destiny. She is persuaded to return the proceeds of her last theft, and when she returns to the rendezvous of the gang, empty handed, George Fox champions her against the wrath of her supposed father, Lawson, and a fight results. Dr. Forsythe, passing through that section of the city, picks George up, badly cut from being knocked through a glass door in the fight, and takes him to his office to dress his wounds. Here George finds opportunity for a rich haul, and becomes reinstated in the good graces of the gang by reporting.

The job is planned. Margie, feeling it a dirty trick in repayment of the doctor's kindness, warns him. The doctor is called in to attend to Mrs. Harris, whose mind has been demented by the loss of her child, and who has developed an hallucination that Margie will return, and insists upon waiting at the gate every afternoon at sundown. While the doctor is away, his office is robbed. Returning, he is able to trace the gang through his recollection of the scene of the fight, and suspecting George because he saw the jewels that were stolen.

George assists Margie in escaping, but the remainder of the gang are caught. Margie, fleeing, passes the waiting Mrs. Harris, who immediately claims her daughter. The doctor, arriving, recognizes Margie as one of the crooks and is saddened because the shock of the disillusionment will be too much for Mrs. Harris. But the minister, a friend of the doctors, tells him of Margie's reformation, and the doctor finally leads Margie in to play her new part as the daughter of Mrs. Harris.

THE DEATH WEB (Nov. 19).—The cast: J. C. Shumway, Lucille Younge, J. G. Harper, Melvin Mayo, J. A. Morley, Sidney Hayes.

Dick Sudlow, having been expelled from college, is sent by his father, president of the Hydrox Power Company, into the field to learn the business from "ground to wires." Dick falls in love with Phoebe Davis. The company learns after a survey that it must have the Davis farm for a reservoir site and President Sudlow sends Grafton, his manager and confidential man, into the valley to buy the farm. Davis, however, will not sell. Sudlow tells Grafton that the site is worth $50,000 to the company, and the company is not particular who gets the money. This awakens the cupidity of Grafton. He makes another attempt to buy the farm of Davis, and on being unsuccessful, enters into a plot with Bud Summers, a hired hand who has been rejected by Phoebe, to ruin Davis by a series of fires. Davis's crops in storage are burned, and the old man is forced to place a mortgage on the farm which Grafton obtains through a village shyster. Davis counts on getting square with his next year's crops, but these are destroyed through incendiarism, and Davis is obliged to sell the farm to the shyster.

Grafton, as the transfer takes place, makes known that he is the buyer of the farm for the company. Davis upbraids Grafton, but Grafton tells him to deliver his arraignment to Dick whose father instigated the purchase. Davis does, and Phoebe also turns "cold" to Dick. Grafton takes the deed to the farm to Sudlow and pockets a good $35,000 through the plot. Dick follows and persuades his father to go to the valley and square the thing with Davis. Grafton has, meanwhile, hurried to a transmission station, where he has put Summers to work to induce Summers to leave the country. While there Dick and his father arrive at the station and the two plotters take refuge in the loft where the high power cable enters the station. Summers overhears Dick below tell how Grafton netted himself $35,000. Summers incensed over getting but a few hundred dollars for his work turns on Grafton. Grafton, a smaller man, tries to trip Summers and throw him against the high power cables. Summers, ignorant of the danger, seizes Grafton and drives him back into the high tension wires. Both men are killed by the contact, Summers getting the current through Grafton's body.

Dick and his father go on to the Davis farm and square things just as Davis and Phoebe are leaving. It turns out that the company wants but 50 acres of the farm and the homestead will not be touched.

HIS WIFE'S NEW LID (Nov. 20).—The cast: Billie Reeves, Carrie Reynolds, Arthur Matthews, Jessie Terry.

Jarvey is a jealous husband, who thinks his wife's every smile is meant for flirting. At his home he finds a letter he believes to be from a man. He opens it and finds a bill for $200 for "Lingeree" and "other things." He upbraids his wife and threatens to kill her credit.

Undaunted, his wife is lured by a beautiful bonnet which she buys and asks it to be charged. It is sent home C. O. D. by Melville, the messenger for the milliner, who smokes a pipe and acts otherwise like a regular man. Melville, while waiting for Mrs. Jarvey, carelessly lays his pipe on the table. Mrs. Jarvey arrives and is about to pay for the "lid" when she hears Jarvey's footsteps and realizing the kick which will be coming, she rushes to the bedroom to conceal the hat. Melville imagines it is a "get-a-way" for the bonnet and sticks close, forgetting his little pipe.

Jarvey enters, discovers the pipe and starts on a hunt for "the co-respondent," who has heard the oath of destruction and slid for safety under the bed, with Mrs. Jarvey doing her best to hide him with her skirts. Jarvey is wise, however, and with his trusty 44 begins to shoot up the room, but slippery Melville can jump around some himself and manages to disappear into the clothes closet where he arrays himself in one of Lady Jarvey's "classy garments" and steps forth to welcome the irate Jarvey, as the milliner's lady, refusing absolutely to admit that ladies in his set smoke the pipe.

In the kitchen, the ice man, suitor of her majesty, the cook, hears the noise of Jarvey's cannon and rushes to the aid of someone in distress. Jarvey meets him and immediately imagines he is the culprit, for which the husky ice man chastises him most severely and teaches him with a proper spanking to have more respect for his wife.

AN AMBASSADOR FROM THE DEAD (Nov. 22).—The cast: Melvin Mayo, L. C. Shumway, Velma Whitman, George Routh.

Amos Carter, at the age of 75 years, is still the active head of the great steel works which he owns. The general manager is his grand-nephew and only living relative, Amos Carter Rand. Carter comes to the conclusion that his concern is paying too much wages and orders the general manager to reduce. Rand opposes the plan, saying that wages are low enough. Carter goes home to his library. The sight of two lovers seen through the window in the park across the street recalls to Carter his own boyhood love affair of fifty years ago when he fought a duel over his sweetheart and thereby caused her a degree of mental agony which resulted in her death. A day or two later the old man takes the wages question into his own hands and orders posted a notice of a general reduction. He and his grand-nephew quarrel over this and come to bitter words. The general manager resigns. On reaching his library he decides to disinherit the boy and leave his estate, including the business, to charity. He takes from his safe the will in young Rand's favor and begins to write a new will leaving everything to charity.

While he is writing a mysterious stranger in funereal garb comes to the front door and rings the bell. A servant opens the door and sees no one, although the stranger enters and goes to the library. There he speaks to old Carter and shows him the identical locket Carter gave his sweetheart fifty years before. He asks Carter what he would give to spend an hour in the girl's company and Carter says he would give all he owns. The stranger tells him he shall see her but only for an hour. He then vanishes, leaving Carter a youth in the dress of half a century ago. Walking out through the French doors of his library Carter finds himself in the old surroundings and the girl is waiting for him. When the hour is nearly gone she invites him to walk with her along the lovers' path. Remembering his promise to the stranger to return in an hour, he hesitates, but he breaks his promise and goes with the girl.

Rand, after a conference with the workmen at the plant ,decides that his resignation was hasty and the situation is not so bad as he thought. He decides to see his grand-uncle and have another talk with him. He reaches the house and the servant goes to announce him. Seated at the library desk, with the new will in front of him, lacking only the signature, the servant finds the old man dead.

LIMBERGER'S VICTORY (Nov. 23).—The cast: D. L. Don, George Egan, Alice Mann, John J. Delson.

General Limberger and General Bonehead are strong and hard enemies. Limberger's daughter loves Bonehead's Lieutenant despite the "Generals" opposition. A careless sentry sees them together and makes a report with the result that the Lieutenant is captured and placed in the guard house. So Bonehead captures Limberger's daughter and tying her to a tree sends notice to Limberger that his daughter must die at sunset. A dashing young Lieutenant overhears the threat and rides off to rescue the girl. He brings her back and Limberger tacks a medal on him, taking it again just as prompt when friend Lieutenant suggests her hand in marriage.

Bonehead becomes enraged when told of the rescue and sends a message to Limberger tied to a cannon ball. It is received with great concern and angers the ferocious General Limberger, who immediately begins to wage war and foolishly leaves the loving couple behind. As lovers do, they steal away and marry, returning to the camp later to find the Limberger troops "have went." In the distance they see the clash of Limbergers vs. Boneheads and heroine like the newly wed Mrs. Lieutenant tears her white petticoat off and waves it on high. Limberger sees the white rag and immediately accepts the truce. First there is anger, then Bonehead gives the parental blessing and issues an invitation to Limberger and his army to join in at the wedding feed. The war is forgotten in the whirl of congratulations and the "eats and drinks."

been placed in the mother's jacket by the son to divert suspicion. Amelia, under the unjust suspicion of Detective Kane, is arrested for participating in the robbery, of which she had no knowledge. While she is serving her unjust sentence in prison, Helen, her daughter, marries Henry Corliss, a young author who has not yet found success. Observing her mother's urgent wish, Helen lets Henry know nothing of her mother. Henry, now a sucessful novelist, is given so much valuable assistance by his secretary, Rose, that he unconsciously develops a growing fondness for the woman and Rose encourages Henry's affection. Helen, angered at Henry's attention to Rose, counters by accepting favors from Kane, the detective, whom she has met on her trips to aid the poor. Helen does not know of Kane's part in landing her mother in jail, neither does she realize that the detective is a man of questionable moral intentions.

When Amelia's term is finished, she refuses to reveal her identity to Henry, believing it would interfere in the happiness of Helen and the future of the little girl, Doris. Amelia continues to conduct the news-stand, and even Helen does not hear from her now. One day Amelia is instrumental in saving little Doris from death in front of an auto. Both Doris and Amelia are injured. Henry, happening by in an auto, has the girl and the old lady hurriedly taken to his home, never realizing Amelia is his mother-in-law. He asks Helen to keep the old lady as a nurse for Doris. Amelia is prevailed upon to stay, but still fears to reveal her identity to Henry, but soon Amelia learns of the discord that threatens the happiness of the home. Henry discovers Helen opening a note from Kane, urging her to leave her husband, who is causing scandal by his intimacy with Rose. Henry has never seen Kane, but realizes Helen has given him encouragement. Furious, he leaves the house, intending to depart from the city with Rose and marry her when a divorce has been granted.

Amelia follows Henry, confronts him and Rose in his office and soon has both ashamed of themselves. Henry promises to return home. Amelia hurries home to find Helen packing up preparatory to leaving with Kane, who enters the house a few minutes later. Henry realizes that Kane must be the object of Helen's affection. He enters the house and comes face to face with Kane. Previous to this Kane has seen Amelia hide Helen's jewels, hoping in this way to delay Helen's departure until Henry will arrive. As Henry comes face to face with Kane and Amelia, Kane tries to save himself by announcing that as a detective he has called to arrest Amelia for jewel theft. He brings forth the supposedly stolen gems. Amelia, refusing to ruin her daughter's future by telling Henry that Helen had planned to go with Kane, admits that she placed the jewels where Kane found them. She cannot deny, either, that she has served a prison term. Just when it seems that Amelia will be led away by Kane, Helen has crept downstairs, unseen. Now thoroughly repentant, she will not tolerate her mother's attempted sacrifice, but tells Henry everything. Henry's rage now turns against Kane and the men fight until Kane is badly whipped. Amelia then convinces Henry that he has been as faulty as Helen in their discord and brings them happily together. But "the meddlesome darling" goes further. She transfers Henry's office to his own home and employs a male secretary instead of Rose.

AS THE TWIG IS BENT (Special—Three Parts—Nov. 25).—The cast: L. C. Shumway, Doris Baker, Louis FitzRoy, Eleanor Blevins, Jack Holt, Helen Eddy, Melvin Mayo, Velma Whitman.

Mrs. Booth is granted a divorce and their twin children are separated, George going to the mother and Herbert to the father. Mrs. Booth lavishes on George all of a mother's care and affection. Herbert is a true son of his father—profligate. He steals money from his father, and after it is squandered, enlists in the army for duty in the Philippines; but, dissatisfied, he deserts. He meets a Filipino girl, Tatuka, who gives him shelter and supplies him with liquor. George returns from West Point, a full-fledged officer. He loves, and is loved by, Grace Thomas, a wealthy girl. George's commanding officer, Colonel Vail, accidentally hears that Grace will come into a fortune when she marries, and wooes her ardently. But Grace refuses him. George and Vail are called to the Philippines.

George takes leave of Grace, and gives her a locket which he tells her to wear for remembrance. At headquarters in Manila, Vail intercepts the mail between George and Grace, and the young people begin to doubt each other. Finally Vail receives a letter from Grace saying that she is coming to the Philippines with her father on their yacht, as she fears that something is wrong. Vail is in dismay. And then he makes an amazing discovery. He sees Hefbert, the living image of George, being coaxed back by Tatuka to her hut. Vail thinks of a plan. He gives Tatuka money to buy liquor for Herbert, telling her that is the only way she can keep her white husband. Then he dispatches George on a secret mission, which will keep him away. When Grace arrives, and asks for George, Vail pretends to be greatly affected, and after much entreaty, leads Grace and her father to Tatuka's hut. There Grace sees Herbert, whom she believes to be George, intoxicated, and with the native girl fondling him.

Aroused by the revolting sight, she enters the hut and casts the locket at the drunken man's feet, telling him they have met for the last time. The Filipino girl takes up the locket and wears it. Vail secures Grace's promise of marriage, and leaves for America with her and Mr. Thomas. Herbert, tired of the native girl, finds her little hoard, which she has been saving, and steals it to get back to America. George returns from his mission, finds a scathing letter from Grace, in which she tells him never to write to her again. He is bewildered at the turn of events, and suspects Vail. Some time later the American troops are attacked and surrounded by natives. George volunteers to ride through the line for assistance. As he nears a Filipino village he is wounded, but is saved by the arrival of Tatuka, who imagines him to be her husband. In Tatuka's hut George sees the locket, and learns the whole story from Tatuka. The American troops are saved by the arrival of another regiment, and when George returns to the post, he tells how he has been made the victim of a plot. They tell him he can get back to America before the wedding, so George leaves.

It is the night of the wedding. In a lowly section of the city, Herbert is met by a crook who tells him of a rich haul to be made at the wedding. Herbert becomes the crook's accomplice. George arrives in the city at eight o'clock the same night. He rushes to Grace's home in an auto. The wedding ceremony has commenced when Herbert and the crook steal cautiously into a window of the Thomas home. George sees the men entering. He rushes after them and there is a struggle in the dark library. The ceremony is interrupted by the noise. Grace, her father, Vail and the guests rush into the library and turn on the lights. The two brothers stand facing each other. Vail looks on in horror. And then the whole truth is made known. Several days later George and Grace are seen in loving conversation, and George gives Herbert money to start life anew somewhere else.

MEG OF THE CLIFFS (Nov. 26).—The cast: Violet McMillan, L. C. Shumway, Melvin Mayo, J. B. Brice, Vivian Caples, Jay Morley, Adelaide Bronti.

Meg is loved by Jacques, a fisherman. Hugh Gaynor, of the U. S. Secret Service, receives word that smugglers are at work along the coast. His sister, Adelaide, is saved from drowning by Vinton Randolph, and falls in love with him. Randolph is known as a capitalist, but is really the hand directing the smuggling. His library is connected by a secret passage with the cave home of Tony, one of the smugglers.

Gaynor and two officers detect Tony and his confederates in the act of smuggling, and a fight ensues, in which Tony kills one of the officers and escapes. He hides the smuggled goods in Jacques' boat, as revenge on the latter for having protected Meg from Tony insults. The result is that Jacques is arrested, but in spite of Tony's taunts, Meg still has faith in her lover. She begs Gaynor and Adelaide to release him, but all to no avail. One day Meg seeks refuge from a sand storm, and is given shelter by old Sal, Tony's mother. Tony comes up a moment later, and old Sal hides Meg. The storm has increased, and a heavy limb of a tree strikes Tony before Sal can get to the door. The wind blows the door of the secret passage open, and Meg darts within. Old Sal, seeing how terribly wounded Tony is, rushes off for the priest.

Meanwhile, Randolph is preparing to elope with Adelaide. He goes to the secret hiding room of the smugglers for some valuables, and is locked in by Meg. She then goes to Adelaide, and triumphantly declares that her man is now locked up, too. All ends well when Tony's dying confession frees Jacques and indicates Randolph. Meg reveals where Randolph is prisoner, and Adelaide scorns him. Meg finds happiness in the arms of Jacques.

PRESSING BUSINESS (Nov. 26).—Plaid Jabbs is quite a fellow among the ladies. Arriving at the hotel at Pumpkinville he finds an invitation awaiting him from his friend, Billy Bean, to attend an afternoon tea given by Bean's sister. Jabbs is long on nerve but short on wardrobe, having only one suit of clothes to his name. It sadly needs pressing. He sends the suit to the tailor to get it pressed. Awful to relate, the tailor's shop burns down while his suit is there.

Jabbs has just learned his awful predicament when Loos Pokes, a modern Raffles, enters the rear window of the hotel and makes his way to the very room occupied by the unfortunate Jabbs. Jabbs hides at the approach of the stranger but when he notices the intruder has on just the clothes that he needs and being about the same size as himself, Jabbs pounces upon him, holds him up, relieves him of the dress suit and dashes off for the afternoon tea, leaving Pokes in his room rather negligee.

Pokes must get out; but how? He steathily skulks along the hallway and after entering various rooms much to his discomfort and that of the guests, he makes his get-a-way down the fire escape with the whole crowd at his heels. The police also join the chase. Jabbs returning from the tea meets Pokes at a watering trough. A struggle for possession of the suit takes place. Pokes gets back his suit. The police arrive and Jabbs is compelled to take refuge in the water trough much to the amusement of all assembled.

Shortly afterward the students attend a masque ball, both dressing as Dromios. While the affair is at its height, M. Durant, representing an American law firm, locates Arthur and the message he imparts to the boy causes the latter to return home. Later in the evening the attorney, mistaking Jack for his client, informs a friend that the latter has just inherited an immense fortune. This is overheard by Lucile, who at once sets her cap for Jack. Arthur returns to America. Jack turns his attention to a bust which he intends to place on exhibition. His model is Yvonne, a girl who secretly loves him. At Lucile's instigation, Jack dismisses Yvonne and substitutes the former in her place. The bust, when completed, is hailed as a masterpiece by the critics.

Then comes Lucile's discovery that it is Arthur and not Jack who has inherited the fortune. Wild with rage, she steals into Jack's studio one night and destroys the bust for which she and Yvonne had posed. The woman cleverly contrives to throw suspicion upon Yvonne. Beside himself at the discovery of the ruin, Jack drinks heavily. Upon Arthur's return to Paris, Lucile tries to ensnare him. Later, half-crazed, Jack endeavors to kill the siren. The sight of Pansy convinces Spike that he has always wanted to be a doctor. Deceived by his professional air, the girl allows herself to be conducted into the consultation room.

Bud gets a glimpse of Pansy and immediately decides that he, too, has always shown a bent for doctoring. By this time, as the result of Bud's skillful work, a leak has sprung in the pipes down in the cellar. To get his assistant out of the way, Spike throws him into the flood down below. Furious, Bud runs up to the bathroom. This is directly above the consultation room. Armed with a six-foot bit and brace, Bud bores a hole in the floor and allows the water to flood the room below. The torrent is drowning Spike and his patient when Dr. Brown, accompanied by a policeman, appears upon the scene. Spike is seized by the officer. Bud tries to make his getaway, but is captured by Pansy's irate mother. Together, the poor plumbers are hauled away to justice.

FLORENCE TURNER AS MABEL NORMAND
RELEASE OF NOVEMBER 25th ON GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

Irving Randolph pleads in vain with his younger brother, Robert, in his effort to get the boy to cease his extravagance. Petted and pampered by their mother, Robert continues in his profligate habits. The boy engages Mrs. Kelton in a violent flirtation. In spite of Kelton's warning, his wife continues to meet Robert. Later, the husband finds the two lunching together in a gay restaurant. Irving appears upon the scene in time to save Robert from Kelton's anger. The elder brother, however, thereby diverts the husband's anger to himself.

All London soon learns the story which has been distorted so as to make Irving the culprit. The young man finds himself ostracised. Even Ethel Porter, his sweetheart, turns from him in contempt. Later, Irving attends a week-end party where an unpleasant scene occurs when he meets Kelton face to face. Irving's only friend is Kent. Together with the latter and Robert, the young man tries his skill at rifle shooting. Fate directs Kelton's footsteps towards the target and the man is accidentally slain by Irving. Perceiving an opportunity to wrest from his brother the control of the Randolph estates, Robert denounces him as a deliberate murderer. Despite the promptings of his own conscience, Irving heeds Kent's advice and flees.

Months later, Australia is terrorized by a bandit, who calls himself "Stingaree," and his partner, Howie. The next adventure of these two will be released Wednesday December 1.

A SOCIETY SCHEMER (Episode No. 5 of "The Ventures of Marguerite"—Nov. 26).—The cast: Marguerite Courtot, Richard Purdon, Otto Niemeyer, Freeman Barnes, Bradley Barker.

Carlow, a fortune hunter, who seeks to marry Marguerite, meets Morton, a pickpocket. Carlow enlists his aid and the two prey upon fashionable society, to which the fortune hunter has entre. While walking with Carlow shortly afterwards, Marguerite stops at a jeweler's to have her watch repaired. The girl admires a necklace on display and her suitor orders it sent to his hotel. Carlow intimates that he intends to present the jewel to Marguerite that evening when he will ask her to be his wife.

Morton, on watch outside the store, steals the necklace from the messenger who is carrying it to the hotel. The thief turns the necklace over to Carlow in a nearby cafe. Neither of them notice Hal Worth, who loves Marguerite, surveying them from behind his newspaper. Hal snaps the two with a tiny watch camera, just as the package is passed. He also snaps pictures of them as they arrange signals for another robbery. Just before he and Marguerite leave for a ball that night, Carlow presents the necklace to the heiress. Although it is the man's request that she do not wear the jewel that evening, Marguerite slips it on. At the ball Carlow is dismayed at the sight of the necklace. Fearing lest the theft be brought home to him, Carlow signals Morton to steal it. This is done. Marguerite gives the alarm. Her escort accuses Hal of the crime. Hal, however, turns the tables upon the two crooks by displaying the snapshots, and the men are brought to justice.

THE DYNAMITE TRAIN (Episode No. 55 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Nov. 27).—The cast: Helen Gibson, Robyn Adair, Thomas Means, Frank Henderson, Clarence Burton.

The shifting of the dynamite contained in a boxcar causes the latter to be cut from the freight and set out as unsafe. While this is being done, the Jones gang waylays Emerick, a cattleman who has just sold a herd of stock. Detectives are sent after the thieves. The latter make their getaway by climbing atop the dynamite car and loosening the brakes. The boxcar speeds downhill. One of the crooks discovers the contents and, as the result, he and his pals leap to the ground. Helen, who has seen the theft of the car, takes up the pursuit in an electric speeder.

As the speeder approaches, the girl leaps from it to the runaway. Half-a-mile ahead, a freight train has come to a halt because of a hot box. One of the trainmen sees Helen atop the dynamite car and gets her signal to sidetrack the runaway. Throwing the switch over, the trainman sends the car down the spur. Helen leaps from the runaway just in time to escape death when it is derailed and blown up. Hastening back to Lone Point, Helen sees the sleuths overhaul some of the crooks and give them battle. This takes place in the dry river bed under the Ewing bridge. By this time, other yeggmen see Helen and attempt to capture her.

Followed by the crooks, Helen climbs down to the river bed from the top of the bridge. Then she goes to the assistance of the detectives. Trainmen who arrive, help the girl and the sleuths. The criminals are subdued and placed under arrest.

THE THINKING COCKATOOS (Nov. 4).—Thinking Cockatoos, adapted to the screen for the Universal program from a well-known vaudeville act, consists of a number of these picturesque white birds of the parrot family which have been carefully trained to perform acts which seem to require almost human intelligence. Madame has taught them to walk on a wire, turn a somersault, and to do athletic stunts on the parallel bars, tell numbers, and give signals which apparently imply the presence of grey matter.

INSECT CELEBRITIES (On Same Reel as Foregoing).—Insect Celebrities, which occupies the other part of this split reel, is an interesting excerpt from the Bronx Zoo collection of insects. First we see the illumination beetle, with his curious manner of turning over on his back and snapping backwards. They are harmless and give out a great deal of illumination. Mexican women carry them to social functions tied to their gowns. When the beetle comes in contact with any hard substance the lobes of its head shed forth wonderful radiance. The moving pictures show admirably the flash from these lobes. So much light comes from them that they illuminate the dial of a watch.

Then we see the Scarab, or sacred beetle of the ancient Egyptians. The film shows a bit of the domestic life of the scarabs, and an amusing incident is the manner in which the scarab turns a somersault. This interesting film also shows the way the crickets sing, by rubbing their brittle wings together. Also the manner in which they fight, and the destruction which one of these crickets can wreak upon another.

The Katy-did also comes in for his share with an exhibition of his manner of feeding on oak leaves and producing the sound which we call Katy-did, like the cricket, with his wings. The other insects which occupies the center of the stage of the walking stick, and very awkward long-legged insect who looks so much like a stick of wood that even the birds which prey upon them are constantly deceived.

CHILLS AND CHICKENS (Nov. 20).—The cast: Max Asher, Gale Henry, Lillian Peacock, Wm. Franey.

C. Chaser is a chicken chaser. While strolling by a hospital one day he sees a patient being discharged and notes the affectionate farewell given the patient by the head nurse when she comes outside to wish him well. Mr. Chaser gets the idea that he would like to be in the hospital, so he decides to let a train run over his foot, but at the last moment he pulls it out and the train flashes by. At other schemes his nerve fails him, so he resolves to throw a fit. His ruse is successful and he is carried in by the pretty head nurse. The head nurse is unable to tell anything of his malady, and calls the head doctor, who decides that Mr. Chaser has a case of "chickenitis." Finding his address on him, they send for his wife.

At the hospital the doctor tells her that Mr. Chaser is only shamming. Determining to cure hubby she disguises herself as an ugly nurse, and takes care of him. Hubby's troubles begin when his diet consists of nothing but water and a soda cracker, while the patient next to him is enjoying fried chicken. He then thinks of the good fried chicken his wife used to serve for dinner. But his nurse is obdurate and he is forced to content himself with water and soda crackers. The nurse also tries the old fashioned remedies of hot water and a mustard plaster. Upon being left alone for a few moments, Chaser beats it to the nurses' ward and forgets all about his troubles, while flirting and carrying on with the nurses.

Mrs. Chaser discovers him later with the nurses, with a blanket draped around him Chaser's real troubles then begin, and he is

DISGUISED BUT DISCOVERED (Nov. 17).—The cast: Dick Smith, Peggy Pearce, Hank Mann..

The dangers of deception were never better illustrated than when papa got married. He told his prospective bride he was childless, whereas in reality he had a very big shoot on his family tree in the shape of a full-grown daughter.

Likewise, the bride's family tree was well supplied in Hank, a twenty-five-year-old son. She also posed as childless. Therefor when papa brought his new bride home, there was a husky girl runing around the house whom father had to account for.

He succeeded in this, but had not counted on Hank. Hank was there disguised as the butler, having done this to be near the daughter whom he loved. It might have been all right, but Hank didn't know his mother was married, and when he saw a strange old gink kissing her, he naturally made inquiries.

Also mother caught her husband kissing the maid, and she was naturally peeved, not knowing it was his daughter. Things went from bad to worse, and the climax arrived when Hank had to hide under the bed with a lady. In the ensuing excitement it was hard to tell how anyone came out alive. Anyway all hands are now living a quiet life without trying to slip anything over on the others.

Hubby made such a noise in his soup bowl that wifey simply couldn't stand it and she rather frankly told him that he should use a muffler. This made husband peeved and he went over and started to talk to a strange lady on a park bench.

Unfortunately this lady had a husband who had a hair-trigger temper, and was the amateur champion slapper. He put a couple of slaps on Hubby's proboscis for good measure. This physical warning to flirts was further exemplified when husband's wife and the other wife's husband found themselves in a very embarrassing position and the champion persisted in beating up the husband when he was laboring under a delusion that he was beating up a chronic flirt.

How unexpectedly events can transpire was certainly proven when the wrong husband and the wrong wife found themselves under the glare of publicity through an unfortunate accident on the telephone wires. In fact, the whole affair was one unfortunate thing after another, and about the only individual who was not ready for Reno was a policeman. This individual was burned by hot telephone wires while attempting to rescue husband and wife.

BILL'S PLUMBER AND PLUMBER'S BILL (Nov. 16).—The cast: Billy Mason, Victor Potel, Wan Duffy, Teddy Martin, Jane Bernoudy, George Barrell.

Willie Pepper and his wife have a quarrel over Willie's insistence on taking a bath after breakfast is served. Willie, in a tantrum, breaks the key in the bath room door, locking himself in, and smashes a water connection. When the water starts to flood the room, Willie finds himself locked in. He forgets his domestic rumpus and appeals to his wife for aid. Mrs. Willie sends for Slim Hoover, the plumber, who with his assistant, Casey, arrives after many delays.

As Slim and Casey are about to rescue Willie from the water, which is now over Willie's head, the noon whistle blows, and Slim and his man quit work. Mrs. Willie and Sallie Sloppus, her slavey, finally fish Willie out through the transom with a pair of ice tongs. Slim presents a bill of real plumber proportions, and then things happen to him and his assistant.

BLOOD HERITAGE (Three Parts—Nov. 19).—The cast: Lionel Adams, Gladden James, Betty Gray.

Dr. Bruce Kane, a young blood expert and scientist, is trying to prove the theory of Professor Reichert that relationship can be established through the microscopical examination of the blood. Bruce has a younger brother, Richard, of whom he is very fond. Both young men are fond of Ethel Radford, a young social debutante, and we find both of them paying her attention. On a later day Richard receives a telegram calling him to another city to accept a position there. Bruce reminds him when he comes in that he should accept the place, for he is slowly becoming an idler. Richard takes exception to his brother's remarks, accuses him of jealousy because of Ethel's display of a preference for him.

Next day Richard arrives in New Haven in quest of the position. Here he is attacked by thugs and his skull is fractured, and he lies for weeks unknown and unconscious in a hospital. No word is heard and Bruce and Ethel mourn him for dead. They believe the man committed suicide after the quarrel. Bruce pays Ethel ardent court, and later their wedding day is announced. In the meantime Richard in the hospital has slowly been recovering his strength and reason. As soon as Richard is able to leave the institution he seeks the firm who made him the offer, finds that the proprietor is out of town and is expected home that night. Richard locates the house of the proprietor of the firm and decides to go there to seek him. When he reaches the house he is admitted by a man who has just committed a murder, The two have a struggle and Richard is stabbed, and, sinking to the floor, he is found by a servant who points him out to the police as the murderer.

Richard is arrested, and he hides his identity. The District Attorney knows that he has only a slight chance of convicting Richard unless he can secure something that will actually incriminate him. The murderer has left stains of his own blood upon a cover of the chair, and this is part of the evidence against Richard. The District Attorney, having heard of Dr. Bruce Kane's blood work, decides to have a specimen of the prisoner's blood and the chair cover sent to Bruce to see if he can find out if they are the blood of the same man.

When Bruce examines the blood of the suspected murderer he sees the blood crystals are identical with those which he has seen before in his own blood. He finds, too, that the blood on the cover is not the same as on the slide sent to him for examination. The trial is in progress and is being given against Richard. Bruce enters the District Attorney's office and asks to see the prisoner, and then identifies him as the brother he thought was dead. The news is made known to the Court. Bruce tells his story, the Court has Richard testify, and the jury acquits him of the murder under instructions from the bench. Realizing that since Richard is not dead, he has no right to the love of Ethel, Bruce calls upon her, slips the engagement ring from her finger, and releases her so that she may be free to wed his brother, Richard. As the picture ends we see Ethel reunited with her childhood sweetheart.

THE CRATERS OF FIRE (Three parts—Oct. 29).—Prof. Albert Green, working on an alloy of metals for the Italian government, is injured in an experiment. The explosion scars him on the forehead for life. Green has a brother, George, who is his exact counterpart in all but the scar. George is in love with the widowed Countess Leonie Semlis. Inasmuch as it is reported that George is ruining himself trying to give her the luxuries of her station in life, Leonie tells George that they had better break off their relations. George does not relish the idea of a break, but the Countess tells him that she is accustomed to moving only in the best society. Leonie has a brother, Charles Dewert, who is a chemist. Dewert learns of the new alloy which Prof. Green has discovered, which, when made into armor plates, will be impervious to the largest guns. Dewert realizes the great financial value of the discovery, and when he learns from Leonie that George is short of money he plans to use George as a tool to learn Prof. Green's secret.

George appeals in vain to his brother for more money but Prof. Green denies further assistance. In his anger against his brother George easily falls in with the plans of Dewert and Leonie to steal the secret of his brother's alloy. While George is tampering with the safe, Prof. Green hears the clinking of the safe tumblers, and enters the room. He is astonished to find his brother at the safe and gives chase as George flees. They rush into the laboratory, where a pool of molten metal is bubbling at white-hot heat. The brothers fight on the edge of the cauldron, but finally Prof. Green slips and he plunges to his death in the vat of molten steel. George, horror-stricken, faints on the spot. Workmen come in a few minutes later and resuscitate him. Owing to his resemblance to his brother, they do not recognize him, and ask him for further instructions regarding the handling of the metal. They find, however, that he is completely overcome and a physician, who is summoned, advises the supposed Prof. Green to take a rest.

Even the Countess and Dewert are deceived when "Prof. Green" comes to the British embassy ball. Leonie thinks that she can win "Prof. Green," as she did his brother, and invites him to a Venetian feast on a float in the Grand Canal. At the feast Leonie makes love to "Prof. Green," and finally George admits that he has killed his brother and that he is really George. Dewert threatens George that if he does not give him the metal formula he will charge him with the murder of his brother. George is angered at Dewert's threat and strikes him. In their hand-to-hand struggle Charles is thrown overboard and in his plunge seizes the decorations, which catch fire from the Japanese lanterns.

The entire float is soon ablaze and the guests take to the water in rowboats. There are not enough boats, however, and dozens are drowned in the murky waters of the canal before help arrives. George's mental state now borders on insanity. His brother's little daughter, Elsa, who so far has not suspected that he is not her father, tries to comfort him. While she is patting him on the head she suddenly discovers that he has no scar. She instantly cries out that he is not her father, and George, heartbroken at having robbed his little niece of her father, is tempted to commit suicide. In addition the adventuress Leonie threatens to expose him. Realizing his debt to the little girl, George decides to leave Rome forever, and sets out with the child for America, there to forget the past and try to make amends for a misspent life and to atone for having taken Elsa's father from her. With the fortune obtained from the invention George educates Elsa. Before his death he gives her the fortune as a marriage dowry.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURES.

COLORADO (Five Parts—Nov. 15).—The cast: Hobart Bosworth, Carl von Schiller, Mr. Bradbury, Albert MacQuarrie, Edward Brown, Anna Lehr, Louise Baxter.

Frank Austin, a soldier, one day sees Colonel Kinkaid, his superior officer, abusing a little lame newsboy, and in a passion knocks the coward down. He is court-martialed for this and given a sentence of five years. That night the newsboy aids him to escape from the guardhouse, and Austin sets out for Colorado. Thomas Doyle is a professor of languages in a college and lives happily with his wife, Mary, and Kitty, his sister. His wife's health has been failing for some time, and at last the doctor tells them the only hope for her is that she seek a drier climate. On the way Doyle, his wife and Kitty make the acquaintance of Colonel Kinkaid, who is going to Denver on business, and makes himself useful to the party. Kinkaid wires a henchman of his, Staples, a gambler and crook. By acting as Kinkaid's agent, Staples gets Doyle to invest in worthless land, leaving Doyle with a balance of only five hundred dollars.

Austin has been working a claim just above the tract bought by Doyle, and one day while he is working he is accosted by one of the natives, Old Morgan, tells him that he will never find anything there, whereupon Austin shows him some samples taken out of the claim which prove to be rich in gold. With the dry season Doyle finds everything on his land is dead and Old Morgan tells him that his land would be rich if it was irrigated, but that it is worthless as it is. Doyle is discouraged over his finances, but finds consolation in the fact that his wife is very much improved. Staples had noticed Austin working, and stealing some of the ore, takes it to Kinkaid and the two have it assayed. It proves to be very rich and they plan to work the young man out of his claim.

Kitty and her brother are out hunting one day and discover Austin wounded by a blast. They pick him up and take him to Doyle's house. They find that Kinkaid has arrived at Doyle's, and made himself very much at home. Kitty is sent for water, and after she has been gone a long time, her brother goes in search of her. He finds her in the grasp of Staples. They fight and Staples confesses that Kinkaid was back of the land deal. Kinkaid recognizes Austin and makes the ex-soldier give him a partnership in his mine.

The mine is developed, and Doyle accepts a position as foreman. Kinkaid has given Mrs. Doyle a revolver, and one day takes her for a hunt. Staples accosts Doyle at the mine. Doyle thrashes him and Staples swears revenge. Later, when Doyle and Kitty have gone down in the mine, Staples manages to stop the lift and prevent their escape during a blast. The blast goes off and a flood of water is released in the mine. They are rescued just in time by Austin. The water proves the key to wealth for Doyle as it irrigates his arid land. Staples is drowned. Doyle tells Kinkaid of the flooding of the mine and finds him in intimate conversation with his wife. He throws him out and demands an explanation from his wife. Mrs. Doyle, unable to explain, leaves home and goes to Denver.

Austin goes to work for Doyle, his mine being flooded. He and Kitty are in love with each other, but every time he goes to take her in his arms he thinks of the sentence hanging over him and stops. Both Kitty and her brother suspect that something is wrong and finally get him to explain the cause. In the city, Kinkaid seeks every oportunity to put himself in Mary's way and finally one day she draws a gun on him and forces him out of the room. Kitty, her brother, and Austin arrive at the hotel and, while the men are seeking Kinkaid, Kitty finds her sister-in-law. The women return in time to see a fight between Doyle and Kinkaid, and Mary saves her husband's life by shooting Kinkaid in the arm. Kinkaid is forced to write a letter clearing Austin and all return to the tract. Doyle and his wife are reconciled. Some time later Austin gets his pardon and there is now nothing to hinder his marriage with Kitty.

NESTOR.

A LOONEY LOVE AFFAIR (Nov. 15).—The cast: Ray Gallagher, Billie Rhodes, Harry Rattenberry, Stella Adams, Neal Burns.

Father and mother have very high aspirations for their only daughter, and father has succeeded in securing a duke as a suitor for his daughter's hand. This arrangement does not suit Billie at all. She absolutely refuses to accept the Duke when he calls, and father locks her in her room until she changes her mind.

Ray, a typical son of the idle rich, bets a friend that he will spend a week at a certain asylum. He leaves in the company of two friends. Billie has been taken to an asylum by her father, as he thinks she has lost her mind. Ray's friends bring him to the same asylum. The next day Ray runs across Billie seated on a beach. He thinks it is a pity that such a beautiful girl should be a "nut," and she thinks what a shame it is that such a nice man should be there. Finally they learn the real identity of each and why they are there.

The next day the Duke calls upon the girl and she, wishing to be rid of him forever, tells her troubles to Ray. Ray immediately plans to rid himself of his father's choice and succeeds in acting so "luney" that the Duke flees in fear of his life. Ray and Billie then determine to leave the place and get married, but the superintendent has gone on his vacation and his assistant, not knowing Ray's history, refuses to let him go. Billie has made all arrangements to leave. When Ray returns with the bad news it is almost more than she can stand at first, but they finally determine to elude the guards and sneak out. Hardly have they gotten over the wall at the back before they are discovered by the guards, and a chase takes place. Just as they are about to be captured, Ray sees the auto of his two friends and signals to them. They turn back and pick up the fleeing couple, just as the guards come up. The guards, realizing that they can never catch the auto, return in disgust, and when Ray's friend tells him that he has lost the bet he acknowledges it, but tells them that he has won something a whole lot beter, and then introduces them to Billie, telling them that she has promised to be his wife.

WANTED—A LEADING LADY (Nov. 19).—The cast: Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Betty Compson, Geo. French.

The Nestor company is about to be disrupted because of the lack of a leading lady. That night the director attends an opera performance. You can imagine his joy when he notices one of the performers is a very pretty girl and the ideal type for a leading lady. He quickly makes her acquaintance and she is engaged on the spot by him.

When the new leading woman arrives, Eddie and Lee at once fall in love with her, and rush to show her around the place. But the director, wishing to make up for lost time, orders all to make up for a new picture. Eddie, however, gains the lady's promise to allow him to bring her out each morning in his "real" car. Next morning Eddie takes the new leading lady into his car and they set out. But it is quite a distance to Universal City, and on the way his "real" car has a mishap. Lee, coming along, sees his predicament and persuades the girl to get in with him, lest she be late for the first morning. She does so, and Eddie is left bewailing his bad luck.

Lee's exuberance receives a setback when he is selected to play the villain in the new play. Eddie is given the hero part—much to his delight. They rehearse the scene which is laid about a girl's college in a fictitious town. Eddie and Lee are at outs on every occasion, and each complains about the other's methods. Lee finally gets a pistol and breaks up the set. That evening, while they are arguing as to who shall take the girl home, Gus, the smallest actor of the lot, calmly walks off with the girl, and Eddie and Lee pledge their long friendship anew, vowing that a woman will never come between them again.

Triangle Plays Find Favor in Press

That the TRIANGLE offerings are holding the swift pace they set at the beginning is amply attested by the press comments appearing week by week in New York, Chicago and Philadelphia.

As an example:—

In "Double Trouble," the top notcher at the Knickerbocker Theater this week, Douglas Fairbanks exceeds his performance in "The Lamb" by a wide margin. "Double Trouble" is somewhat in the melodramatic comedy class, and there is enough melodrama, real comedy, with pathos thrown in for good measure to please any one.—New York Mail.

"Weber and Fields" in "The Best of Enemies" are seen in a clever plot of the chap who disappears and manages to have his rival accused of his death. Even if it were not generally an excellent comedy, two scenes would make it worth while to see. To see Lew Fields as a prisoner try to ingratiate himself with a murderous-looking juror is to be tickled clear down in the midrib.—New York Evening Sun.

Bessie Barriscale is seen in a well knit drama entitled "The Golden Claw." Love and frenzied finance, a combination offering unlimited opportunities, are skillfully blended into a thrilling story in which a ruined banker is saved from suicide by his wife.— Philadelphia Public Ledger.

This is the type of dignified metropolitan comment which proves the TRIANGLE Quality to be consistently apparent, a quality which is steadily advancing week by week.

The Triangle Quality Wins Theatre Prices

When the critic of the New York Evening Post said: "It is plays such as these (Triangle) that makes possible the presentation of motion picture plays at two dollars," he spoke for the New York public.

His statement has a wider applicability, however, and TRIANGLE quality proves its right to consideration from the standpoint of values in other parts of the country.

Not alone New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Brooklyn are willing to pay regular theatre prices for dramatic and comedy material that ranks in value with the product of the spoken stage, but—

Louisville, Columbus, Cleveland, Richmond, Norfolk are all catering to the needs of their respective populations at the regular theatre scale with TRIANGLE PLAYS.

They find that the question is one of values and that alone. TRIANGLE quality is of that class that commands the regulation theatre price, and that in itself is an argument that is sound as the Treasury at Washington.

MANNA (Two Parts—Nov. 16).—The cast: Edna Maison, Ollie Golden, Louella Maxim, Harry D. Southard, Earl Page.

Nell, a young working girl, and her crippled younger sister, Dora, live in a tenement house room. Nell works at a factory nearby, leaving the little sister to her own amusement while she is away. A young tenement doctor lives in the building next door and already a romance has started between Nell and himself. The little girl, Dora, while reading the Bible, comes across the passage, "And the Lord, God, rained Manna down upon them and they did eat." The passage impresses her, and, realizing that she is a cripple and unable to do anything in the world, she originates the idea of writing little verses from the Bible and dropping them out of her window. A rich settlement worker, who plays at charity work for the glory she obtains from it, is softened by the little note and the promise of heavenly cheer and reward softens her heart. The young doctor, becoming discouraged at the hardness of the world, finds a little note. His heart is cheered by the promise of heavenly reward that he reads therein.

In a district nearby, a poor young laboring man is suddenly thrown out of employment. He becomes desperate and is about to steal when the little note falls at his feet from the tenement window above. The message reads, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want." He ponders over the message and determines to do the right thing. Upon returning home, he discovers that his hasty employer has repented his dismissal and requests his return. In the vicinity of the factory, a syndicate of procurers are at work. Nell goes daily to the little park to eat her lunch. One of the syndicate, a gaily dressed, painted woman, plans a trap for Nell. The result is, while in the park at lunch one day, she is accosted and insulted by a strange man. While defending herself, she is saved from further embarrassment by a finely dressed stranger. Nell admires the gentlemanly manner with which he treats her, and the rest of the trap is easy. They meet often in the park. One day he asks her to do some sewing for a woman acquaintance of his. Nell accepts the new position. They arrive at the elegant house and Nell is ushered upstairs to the boudoir of the woman. Nell is entrapped.

The woman, however, has passed the tenement district. She did not know that while passing under a certain tenement window that a little white piece of paper had fluttered down and nestled in the flowers of her hat. While she is removing her hat she discovers the note and reads it. The messages send a flood of emotion through her heart. She gazes at the innocent girl before her and realizes the terrible thing she is about to commit. She hears men approaching in the hallway, and realizes that unless she acts quickly, Nell will be lost. In a flash she has Nell behind her, and when the men enter the room, they face the point of a revolver. Nell returns home to little Dora, where she sobs out the whole miserable story, but Dora secretly thanks God for directing the little note to the right person. In time, the rich settlement worker learns of little Dora's condition, and her heart is touched. Through her efforts and financial help, little Dora is cured of her deformity, and is made well and happy, while the young doctor and Nell realize their love for each other.

MUSTANG.

Addie Gibble, wife of Elmer Gibble, a prosperous business man, tires of domestic life and longs to shine as a moving picture star. Mr. Gibble, of different disposition, is quite content to have her remain the star of his home. She announces her intention of joining the movies. He forbids her, but she insists, stating her intention of applying to James Montague, director of the Titan Moving Picture Company for a place. Gibble beats her to it; sees Montague first and makes certain arrangements with that gentleman. Mrs. Gibble appears and is promptly engaged by Montague to play the star part in his mining camp story. Mrs. Gibble tells her husband of her success in securing a place, he pretends to object, then gives in.

Mrs. Gibble appears at the studio with Martha, her colored maid. They are shown into a small dressing room, where both women become frightened at a cockroach, scream for help and Buck Parvin comes to their rescue. Mrs. Gibble is instructed to dress for the part of a cook in a mining camp. She appears in fluffs and ruffles and is promptly "bawled out" by Montague, who compels her to put on a dirty gingham dress. She then learns to bake pancakes over a red hot stove, much to her disgust. In the next scene, Buck Parvin spurns and hurls the ambitious Mrs. Gibble to the floor repeatedly in all her fine clothes. Mrs. Gibble does all kinds of hard kitchen work.

Mrs. Gibble is then compelled to appear in a "chase," fleeing from a band of angry miners. She runs until she drops from exhaustion to the great delight of all the onlookers. After a day's work, Buck remarks to her, "Well, ma'am, this is the life." That night in her boudoir, tired, sore and bruised, when Mr. Gibble inquires about her work, she gamely responds, "Oh, this is the life!"

THE WARNING (Two Parts—Nov. 19).—The cast: Helene Rosson, E. Forrest Taylor, Chas. Newton.

John Graham and his daughter, Bessie, take a homestead in the cattle country of Arizona. The cattlemen of this country resent the appearance of homesteaders, and send them a note ordering them at once to leave the country. A similar note is sent to Fred Merrill and his parents, also homesteaders. Fred and Bessie are lovers. Burnham, the Cattle King, seeks the hand of Bessie. He tells her that her father's safety will be assured if she will consent to marry him. Bessie refuses, and draws a pistol on Burnham.

John Graham's health fails, due to worry over the trouble with the cattlemen, who have decided to force him from the country. The cattlemen raid the Graham home. The shock kills John Graham. Next, the cattlemen raid the Merrill home. Fred kills one of the bandits. He then dashes to see if Bessie is safe. He finds Burnham forcibly embracing Bessie. Fred, at the point of his gun, drives Burnham away.

Bessie, disguised as a cattleman, learns of their plans to attack the Merrill homestead. Burnham recognizes her and employs three Mexicans to kidnap the girl. Bessie is taken over the border to a Mexican's hut, where Burnham attempts to force her to marry him. Fred discovers Bessie's whereabouts and persuades the cattlemen to aid him in a rescue. They swoop down on the Mexican's hut. Burnham is taken by surprise, but cleverly feigns innocence. A piercing shriek from an adjoining room, however, belies his words. Besssie is rescued by Merrill, while Burnham is roughly handled by his erstwhile friends.

RELIANCE.

A ROMANCE OF THE ALPS (Two Parts—Nov. 21).—The cast: Marguerite Marsh, William Hinckley, Carl Formes, Jr., Kate Toncray, Charles Gill, Alfred Paget.

Wally and Andreas, Tyrolean lovers, meet at their trysting place on a mountain peak. Andreas procures for Wally a singularly beautiful spray of edelweiss. Some days later, Captain Vollenberg, an Austrian officer, arrives at the cottage of the girl's father and is instantly smitten with Wally's beauty. He forces his attentions upon her, and insists upon climbing a dangerous precipice to get for her some of the much-sought edelweiss. She, however, on comparing the captain's gift with that of Andreas, decides that her lover's token is far finer. At the time, the captain and the Swiss maiden are standing on the mountain top at the trysting place. He becomes insistent in his love-making, and Wally is frightened. She is rescued by her lover. In the struggle which ensues, the captain falls over the cliff. Andreas, however, saves his life.

Later, General Volenberg, father of the captain orders that yearly military conscription be made in the Tyrol. Andreas is sent to headquarters. Receiving a telephatic message that Wally is in distress, he deserts his post and returns to the trysting place. Here he is dragged from his sweetheart's arms, and sentenced to dig his own grave. Wally goes to intercede with the general for her lover's life. He refuses to hear her. On the young captain entering, however, she tells how Andreas has formerly saved the general's son from death in the Alps. The captain is forced to admit that this is so, and the general issues a pardon for gratitude's sake. Wally rides to the scene of execution. She is barely in time to arrest the firing.

FALSTAFF.

FREDDIE, THE FAKE FISHERMAN (Nov. 1).—The cast: William Al. Howell, Winifred Lane, George Welch.

Freddie met "The Girl" at a summer resort and they were engaged in record time. Then they had to consider the problem, "What will father say?" Freddie was of a good family, and had plenty of money, but he knew nothing about fishing, and—father—well, father was one of those men who fished all the time, and had a poor opinion of men who did not. The suitor called after the girl had returned home, and made himself solid at once by announcing that he was the president of the Alaska Salmon Club. He knew that father had never been in Alaska, and it is easy to talk about salmon fishing to a man who knows nothing about it. At the outset, however, the suitor struck a snag. Father invited him to go fishing, and he could not refuse.

The girl watched them off in fear and trembling, and when father returned with her loved one, who was wringing wet, she was appalled. Father, however, soon reassured her.

"He is a wonderful young man," said father. "I must go to Alaska some day and learn to fish as he does. When we struck the stream, his first cast landed in a tree. There was a cat in the tree and he brought the animal down. Anybody knows that cats are the deadly enemies of fish; and in Alaska, if a fisherman sights a cat they always cast for him first to get him out of the way.

"Then the next thing he did was even more remarkable. Our butler stole the silverware, and was getting away with it. He was rowing down the stream when the Alaskan saw him, cast and got him and dragged him to shore. Except for that we would have lost our silverware. Next an automobilist tried to run me down. That brave chap punched a hole through the tire with his hook, and I had a chance to show that cheeky autoist that I know something about boxing.

"But the strangest thing of all was the way he caught a monster bluefish. It dragged him to the edge of the water, he jumped in and landed the fish by catching it in his hands. Says they often do that in Alaska."

Father looked at "The Girl" fondly.

"My dear," he said slowly, "I hope that you may learn to love this remarkable young man. It would make me very happy." And the girl, lifting her innocent eyes to his face, murmured: "Father I will try to love him, for your sake."

LULU'S LOST LOTHARIOS (Nov. 8).—The cast: Barbara Gilroy, Claude Cooper, Arthur Cunningham.

"It was my good fortune to find Suburban Homes, the celebrated detective, in a talkative mood that day. He had just dined heartily on pickeled pigs' feet and cream puffs, and was very genial," said Dr. Wopson.

"My dear Wopson," he said with a smile, "I was wondering if you would drop in. I have just completed a little case in which you might be interested. You will find the notes in my rubber boots. I call it 'Lulu's Lost Lotharios,' and although simple, it has some interestingn points.

"Lulu Leopold is the young woman's name. She lives in the country, and appealed to me because it was beginning to look as though she could never get married. She is extremely attractive, and had had many suitors, but every time a man proposed he vanished within twenty-four hours.

"I went down there, of course, and induced the young lady to conceal a small looking-glass in her front curls. That, my dear Wopson, as you undoubtedly perceive, was to make it possible for me to see her charming face and also what was going on behind me."

I murmured "marvelous!" Suburban Homes smiled, and replied "Merely elementary." Then he went on:

"To solve the matter, I naturally proposed to the young lady, and, as I expected, was kidnapped. My captor took me to an old abandoned jail, where, as I had expected, I found all the suitors. We were guarded by a giant negro, armed with an equally giant razor. Of course, I overpowered him. How do you think I did it, my dear Wopson? I started a game of 'craps.' No darkey can ever resist it. I gave him loaded dice that always threw sevens, and while he was blissfully enjoying himself, we all went away. Elementary, my dear Wopson."

Suburban looked at me kindly and resumed. "We found our enemy at Miss Lulu's house, gloating over the fact that he had disposed of me. Well, we tossed him in a blanket and sent him on his way. Then the girl had all her other suitors back. She could only marry one—a most distressing condition.

"She finally picked out me. You see my picture was in the frame marked 'My Beloved,' while all the others were in one big frame marked 'Gone, but not forgotten.' Whenever a suitor vanished she always changed the picture. I was the last one, so now she is going to marry me. By the way who do you deduce the villain was?"

I spoke up heartily and said I didn't know. Suburban beamed at me, and replied: "I thought you would be unable to solve the mystery. It was the Town Constable, of course."

THANHOUSER.

THE COMMUTED SENTENCE (Two Parts—Nov. 2).—The cast: Thomas A. Curran, Ethyle Cooke, Dorothy Benham, Samuel Niblack, Lindsay Morrison.

A famous ex-convict, freed by the Governor, called and thanked the head of the state for his clemency. The convict was a rough appearing man, but he seemed very thankful for his release and promised to lead an honest life. Well-meaning police officers, however, believing that they were acting in the best interests of the public, watched the paroled prisoner closely, and by telling of his prison record rendered it difficult for him to obtain employment. At last, starving and desperate, he crept through the open window of a handsome house and was seized by the servants as he was about to commit theft. The master of the house chanced to be the Governor's father-in-law, a kindly old man, whose heart was touched by the prisoner's plight. He saw that the convict had been forced into wrong-doing, talked to him gently gave him food and a place to sleep for the night.

Early the next morning the paroled prisoner stole away, his heart full of gratitude. Several hours later he was overtaken by a police officer and arrested, charged with murder of his elderly benefactor. He was searched and jewelry belonging to the wealthy old man was found in his possession. He was brought back to the scene of the tragedy, and the officers tried to force a confession.

"He gave me food and money," the prisoner declared. "I would have died rather than harm him"

The evidence against the man, however, was so conclusive that the detective in charge of the case, although strongly believing that the prisoner told the truth, had no option except to order the ex-convict's arrest. The Governor's wife was grief-stricken by her father's death. She firmly believed the ex-convict's guilt, and felt that her husband himself was indirectly responsible, for he had paroled the man. The prisoner was placed on trial. A verdict of guilty was soon reached and the convict sentenced to death. Only the detective and the Governor believed that there might be some doubt of his guilt. The Governor had been tempted to commute the ex-convict's sentence to life imprisonment, but he was deterred by his wife's words: "If you stop the execution of my father's slayer," she declared, "my child and I will leave you forever."

And so he deferred taking action until the night before the execution, when, spurred on by the consciousness that he was in danger of allowing a terrible wrong to be committed, he ordered the execution stopped and changed the prisoner's sentence to life imprisonment. The following morning his wife and child came to the executive mansion. The Governor pleaded with her but to no effect. Just as the woman and child turned to leave the room the door opened and the detective entered. In a few words he told how he had just succeeded in trapping the butler of the murdered man, and that the servant had confessed to killing and robbing his employer. He had cast suspicion upon the ex-convict by hiding some of the jewelry in his clothes. The woman listened in silence. She realized that she had tried to send an innocent man to death, while her husband, with keener vision had protected the prisoner. At last she lifted her eyes to his, and the Governor took his wife in his arms.

THE MISTAKE OF MAMMY LOU (Nov. 7).—The cast: Nellie Gilmore, Morgan Jones, Grace De Carlton, Wayne Arey.

On his way to visit his fiance, the young man saw her on the front steps in earnest conversation with a stranger. The stranger took the girl's hand, mounted his horse and rode away. Instead of waiting for an explanation, the girl's sweetheart angrily demanded one. Hurt by his attitude, she refused to give it. There was a lover's quarrel and the man strode angrily away. Had he remained he would have seen the young woman weeping in the arms of her old colored "mammy." The visitor was a man who had come to see her father, a lawyer, and had left a large sum of money in their safe over night.

Old Mammy Lou watched her mistress that evening. With horror, she saw her take a revolver from her desk and load it. Mammy did not know that the girl feared for the money that had been entrusted in her care—Mammy believed that her young mistress planned something rash. So the old negress took precautions, and then went to tell the fiance what she imagined was going to happen. The young man ran to the girl's house and Mammy followed as fast as she could. The suitor arrived soon after a tramp had entered, and found the girl trying to cow the intruder. But, like most women, she was as much afraid of the weapon as she was of the tramp.

The fiance was held up by the tramp. The girl pleaded with him not to risk his life for her sake. He raised his hands submissively, and she started to open the safe. The next moment Mammy Lou came in.

"Yo' fool man!" she cried, "dere ain't no catridges in dat gun! I done removed 'em so's young Missy couldn't hurt herself!" The girl's sweetheart leaped upon the intruder, and she ran to summon the police.

THE LITTLE CAPTAIN OF THE SCOUTS (Two Parts—Nov. 9).—The cast: Grace De Carlton, Charles Compton, Leland Benham, Ethel Jewett.

There could be nothing in the world finer than being a soldier, thought the small boy. But 'way off there in Rosedale where no one ever heard of wars scarcely, what was a fellow to do? Anyway, he could play with his toy soldiers, and wear a soldier cap, and try every day of his life to be just as much as possible like a soldier. Big sister told him, too, that fighting wasn't everything. A soldier should be polite and kind and always a gentleman. Then there came to the town a big chap who had graduated from West Point. He was on what he called a "furlough." He organized the Boy Scouts in Rosedale, and what fun it was.

Some of the people said that the soldier did this because he was in love with the boy's Big Sister and wanted to please her! Oh, well, he pleased all the fellows, too. But just as things were going along the best, he got up and went away suddenly. The boy's Big Sister cried, and they all said there'd been a quarrel. The day after that, the boy decided he was big enough to go to war. He went hiking out after that real soldier, and there's no telling what might have happened to him if the Boy Scouts hadn't gone hunting him.

But it was a lady in an automobile with her own two little boys who found the Soldier Boy asleep by the road. And just then along came the real soldier and saw them. He knew the lady, and wasn't he glad to see the Soldier Boy. All this time the fellows were looking for the Soldier Boy and so was his Big Sister. She happened to come along just as the real soldier was taking the Soldier Boy away from the lady. And the Boy Scout fellows saw them all and came running up. They got there just in time to hear the soldier introducing the lady to Big Sister. He said:

"This is the other woman I proposed to once, but she wouldn't have me, because I was only twelve years old."

When he said that, how they all laughed, and then the real soldier kissed Big Sister, and put her in his automobile.

She meets Charlie in the wood and they walk together. There develops a case of love at first sight, and the pair steal off to be married. Edith, a few hours later, tells her admirers that she is not Mrs. Moneybag. They promptly desert her, starting off full-pelt toward the inn. SOMETHING IN HER EYE (Nov. 8).—Trixie Gale, passing a house where bricklayers are at work, gets some of the dry mortar dust in her eye. Stopping to do a little marketing, she winks spasmodically, but without any feminine designs, at the plump and susceptible groceryman who "falls for" Miss Trixie instantly. Still winking and blinking the irritated eye, she continues homeward, quite innocently making conquests all the way. A certain count, lying in wait for American millions, forgets to inquire whether Trixie is an heiress, but, after receiving a single- ravishing wink, rushes after her, and then darts into a jeweler's shop, intending to make his declaration irresistible. Even the studious Horatio drops his books as Miss Gale flits past and starts on a run to the confectioner's.

The grocer, meanwhile, has loaded down with florist's boxes, and is staggering along the street in the direction of the Gale mansion. Trixie is expecting momentarily the arrival of her father, "Dead Line of Texas," a celebrated marksman. Each time the doorbell rings she thinks it is Papa. Presently the house is filled with suitors, all hiding from the crack-shot parent. At last Papa arrives. He removes the irritating particle from daughter's eye, dinner is partaken of, and then Trixie insists that they go out. As they are leaving the house, Papa discovers the supposed "burglars." There is a grand shooting up, and Trixie's panic-stricken admirers flee. Miss Gale explains to her parent that said young men only came to propose. Papa rallies the suitors and bids them go to—the man who wins the bout gets Trixie. But Trixie already has made up her mind. She tips off the delighted groceryman—and while the count and Horatio are sparring heroically, refereed by Papa, the sweethearts make a clean getaway.

A TANGLE IN HEARTS (Nov. 14).—The cast: John Daly Murphy, Lucille Taft, Mathilde Baring, Virginia Perry, Joe Lasher.

When the pocketbook is empty, the easiest way to keep out of trouble is to stay at home nights. Harry Jones knows it now, but only at the expense of a tangle in hearts. Broke! Poor Harry loved company, but he didn't dare join the boys at billiards. His pocketbook looked as if an elephant had stepped on it. Not wishing to spend the evening alone, he decided to be a "fireside companion" and call on Rose. Since it cost nothing extra, Harry togged himself out in evening colthes. He looked so prosperous and presentable that Rose's managing mamma determined he was the happy man on whom she would wish her daughter. Harry never knew how it happened, but at the end of the evening Rose was in his arms softly whispering "Yes." Behind the portieres Mamma had directed the entire campaign.

"Well, I'm in for it," sighed Harry on his way home. He wondered how he was going to go through with it, but he was too gentlemanly to go back to Rose and say he had made a mistake. So the next day he bought an engagement ring, getting it for "nothing down and fifty cents a week for the rest of your life." Troubles never some singly. With the engagement ring in his pocket Harry reached the office to find a beautiful stenographer had just been employed. It was a case of love at first sight; and the young lady was equally interested. Then, when Harry felt the box in his pocket containing the engagement ring for Rose, his blood ran cold.

Rose was having her own troubles. She had only accepted Harry because her mother had willed it. She she was still heart free when she met Joe in his gasoline buggy. There was a twinkle in her eye that made Joe turn his roadster into the curb. She smiled. He bowed. She spoke. He answered. And so it started. Who wouldn't and couldn't love a man with an automobile? So Rose had her mother write Harry that she loved another. In the letter the mother asked Harry to investigate Joe Bangs, since she knew nothing of the man Rose had chosen, much against her mother's wishes. Harry was glad Rose's mother liked him, and he was delighted to find himself free. Immediately he proposed to Bess, the new stenographer, and was accepted. They decide to marry at three o'clock. At that hour, Joe and Rose plan to elope.

Harry mistakes another man for Joe Bangs when he goes to investigate. As the man is spooning with Joe's stenographer, Harry has a pretty story to tell Rose's mother. The mother promptly faints, which makes Harry late for his appointment. Bess is angrily leaving the church when Joe and Rose break down in the automobile nearby. Harry is hurrying to the church and sees the couple tinkering with the machine. He tells Rose that Joe is a base deceiver, not knowing that the real Joe is under the machine. Having her doubts of Joe and thinking Harry a sure thing, Rose falls on Harry's neck.

Now Harry is in for it. Bess is marching down the street like a fury because he left her "waiting at the church," and Rose is telling him she loves him when he doesn't in the least care for her. Fortunately, at this moment, Joe crawls out from under the car. When Rose gives him a tongue lashing, Harry is puzzled. This is not the man he saw in Joe Bangs' office spooning with the stenographer. Bess arrives and thinks them all crazy. When it is explained that Harry was mistaken in the man he thought was Joe, the hearts are untangled. Joe turns to Rose and Harry turns to Bess. Wedding bells—as soon as they can get the automobile started.

BEAUTY IN DISTRESS (Nov. 14).—The cast: Harry Vokes, Dorothy Rogers, "Budd" Ross, Edwin Middleton.

Freckles were the bane of Mrs. Devere's life. She tried every conceivable remedy, even covered her face with paste, which annoyed her loving, excitable husband even more than the freckles had. When Mr. Devere was suddenly called out of town on business his little mustache fairly quivered with excitement. He showered farewell kises all over his wife's sticky face. He had hardly gotten out of the door when Mrs. Devere 'phoned the beauty doctor.

The beauty doctor was busy with a particularly ugly and talkative patient. He subdued the patient with a plaster-of-paris mask and started on his way. The beauty doctor was grimacing as he worked over Mrs. Devere with odd tools and plenty of sticking plaster when a knock was heard at the door. Devere had missed his train and returned home. Mr. Devere's suspicions were aroused when he shoved the maid aside and peeked through the key-hole. The doctor was telling her an inimitable story but the doctor mistook it for a personal conversation. So he hastily sent a bell boy out for a large revolver and thus armed he broke in the door.

Terrified, Mrs. Devere hid the beauty doctor in a trunk but a sneeze gave him away. Then followed a fencing duel, for the revolver would not explode. Both Mr. and Mrs. Devere chased the beauty doctor till he took refuge in the grounds of an insane asylum. There he was promptly seized by the guards, for the beauty doctor was an escaped patient. This paved the way for a quick reconciliation between husband and wife.

CUB.

THE DOUBLE CROSS (Nov. 12).—The cast: George Ovey, George George, Miss St. Aubour, Janet Sully.

Jack receives a letter saying his aunt is to visit him. As they have never met, he conjures up a vision of a sour visaged old maid with a battle-axe on her shoulder. He decides to escape the ordeal of her entertainment, plans a trip and also to select some one to impersonate him. The first man he encounters is Jerry, whom he finds sitting on the curb and out of a job. Jack explains to Jerry that he is going away for a time, that he shall take charge of his home, and gives him a big bunch of money to start with. Once in possession of the magnificently furnished bachelor home and Jack off Jerry supplants the half-dozen servants with three of his cronies, who make a sorry sight even in the spic and span livery. The aunt proves a comely woman of middle age; her companion is a severe looking old maid. Jerry swoons away when he sees her, believing her to be the aunt, but when identities are explained he becomes extremely interested and very attentive to the aunt.

While Jerry is gallantly escorting her over the grounds he spies Jack coming up the street, so he cuts short his hospitality in that direction and takes his guest into the house. Jack has forgotten his bank vault keys and has returned for them. He persistently rings for admission. Finally Jerry goes to the door and kicks him off the porch.

A plain clothesman and a uniformed cop come along and prepare to arrest Jack for disturbance. He explains he is trying to get into his own house and they agree to help him in order to prove his statement. Failing to get an answer to their ring, Jack and the detective climb into the house through a window and enter a room where Jerry is found making violent love to the aunt. Jack demands recognition, instead Jerry calls his new servants and on his orders Jack is thrown out. This for a time satisfies the detective that Jerry is the master of the house.

Jack returns to find Jerry playing host to the detective. Again the servants are called on to eject the intruder. As they proceed to carry out the order the cop enters. The servants recognize an old enemy and rush away. Jerry, also seeing the cop, ceases his braggadocia and flees, knocking down the others. Jerry runs blindly, evidently, for he finally tears into the police station, into an empty cell and has locked himself in before the officers arrive, when he hands them the key. At the house Jack explains away all the questionable and astonishing happenings to his good-looking aunt and they become friends.

Jerry got himself in bad with the authorities, and with three cronies landed in jail. To explain his absence he writes his sweetheart that he is holding down a government position. Disliking the job of cracking stones to which he was assigned, Jerry plans his escape. His opportunity comes when the attention of the guard is distracted. Picking up a stone he whirls it at the guard who falls with a thud into unconsciousness. Changing clothes with the senseless man he goes forward and meets his cronies, whom he liberates. Upon returning to his senses the guard raises a cry and pursuit is immediately started after the escaped convicts. Jerry spies on the wayside an automobile belonging to a motion pictuer company out on a "location" and bidding his comrades enter he takes the wheel and makes off at full speed. In the car the four discover four elaborate sets of military costumes intended for use in the picture people's scene. Donning these Jerry with his friends starts for his sweetheart's home, wiring ahead the news of their coming.

The receipt of Jerry's message causes great rejoicing and plans are immediately made for an elaborate reception. Jerry and his cronies drive up to sweetheart's home. The grounds are lavishly decorated and the interior of the house is a triumphal arch for the returning hero. Jerry is asked to tell of his experiences. This he does, sorely taxing his imagination. In the meantime the motion picture director has discovered the loss of his car. Meeting the guards, who are on a hunt for Jerry, he enters a complaint. Given the car number they have little difficulty in tracing the active Jerry.

When the reception is at its height the guards enter. The three cronies, having imbibed freely from the punch bowl, have fallen into the accustomed prison lockstep. Whatever doubt may have existed in the guard's mind as to the identity of the group is immediately dispelled by this action and they collar the three and handcuff them. Jerry, having had no time to escape, is treated in the same fashion. All prisoners, again in lockstep, are then marched off to the police auto and driven away, while the guests show great indignation towards the members of the family and leave. Jerry and his cronies are returned to the prison, put in stripes and again set to work, this time, however, with ball and chain attachments.

desertions. Food is scarce and complaints are so numerous that Stanley, coming upon a small village, decides to pitch his camp. Subsequently, when death from lack of provisions is imminent, Stanley names this resting place "Starvation Camp." The fast disappearing rations are measured out in small quantities and close guard is kept over the scant supplies. Ada, Nina and Jack, with the Old Hag as a guide, decide to keep near Stanley. The White King, being more determined than ever to regain possession of Ada and force her to become his wife, formulates a plot to lead the little party astray. He sends a trusted lieutenant to intercept them. The lieutenant declares that he has forsaken allegiance to the White King and wishes to help Ada. Promising to lead them to a place where great quantities of food is hidden, they unsuspectingly follow.

As night falls they prepare their camp and light a fire to keep the animals away. This serves as a beacon for the White King. In the middle of the night a powerful hand is placed over Ada's mouth, her cries are stifled and she is abducted without abducting Jack, Nina or any of the others. Ada is conveyed to the edge of a remote village. The White King arranges that a missionary perform the marriage ceremony. While the White King is gloating over Ada's helplessness a hue and cry arises from the village. The Raiding King has entered the village to sack it and make slaves of its inhabitants.

Being rivals in the practice of cruelty, the White King dashes away to gather his shattered forces and to offer battle. While they are away Ada escapes and rides into the jungle, where she meets Bonavita, Jack and Nina with their followers who have organized a searching party for her. They witness the fight between the two kings. The Raiding King wins the battle and the White King's escaping natives. Ada, with her companions, is captured and brought back to camp. The guiding party from Stanley's camp being too small to effect a rescue, hurries back to Stanley for enforcements.

Stanley and his entire party start on a rescue trip. Meanwhile Ada is obliged to undergo the torments of the White King and the Raiding King, both of whom curry her friendship. The Old Hermit is impatient and hurries ahead of Stanley's party. Through a ruse he effects the release of his friends and they have started to escape when an alarm is sounded. In the blackest of the night another battle follows. Stanley's party arrives on the scene and, pitching into the natives, conquer them. The slaves are released and a search instituted for Ada, Jack, Nina and their party. They have disappeared, however, as if swallowed up by the earth. Disconsolately, Stanley retraces his steps. His next move is to locate the missing party.

A POLAR ROMANCE (Two Parts—Nov. 18).—The cast: Irving Cummings, Josephine West, Mrs. Jay Hunt, Charles Witman, Fred Gamble, Clarence Baker.

Andrea Jennessen, an explorer, is in love with Nadina Rolph. Pride prevents him from asking her hand, however, until he has won fame and fortune. Bannington Wells also covets the girl and just prior to the departure of Jennessen's expedition to find the North Pole he makes a pact with Mike Kerrigan, a sailor aboard the exploration ship, to prevent Jennessen"s return alive. Jennessen sets sail. Weeks pass and the ship reaches the Arctic circle. Kerrigan, to carry out his compact with Wells, stirs the sailors to mutiny, and Jennessen is thrown overboard. Instinctively he begins to swim as he strikes water and just as he is about exhausted he manages to reach an iceberg floating in the sea on which four polar bears make their home.

The following morning Capt. Stephassen discovers the loss of the explorer and after a vain attempt to find him turns his ship homeward. Meanwhile the ice on which Jennessen has taken refuge floats with the current to an island, where the explorer builds an igloo of moss and stone, and by catching fish is able to subsist. Kerrigan reports the loss of Jennessen to Wells, who breaks the news to Nadina. She refuses to believe it, however, having a premonition that her lover is alive. Wells attempts to dissuade her in this belief, but having little success he acquiesces to her request that a rescue expedition be organized on condition that if Jennessen is not found she will become his wife. To this condition she consents and the ship sails.

After a tempestuous voyage the ship arrives at the barren island upon which Jennessen is living. Wells and Kerrigan see the igloo in the distance and huriedly call a council in which Wells plausibly suggests that the Captain and Nadina search the island in one direction while he and Kerrigan and the rest of the crew search it in the other direction. Nadina and the Captain fall into the trap and set forth in the wrong direction while Wells and Kerrigan hurry toward the hut. They find Andrea almost exhausted. They pounce upon him and a fight follows, the bears coming to the aid of the explorer just as Nadina and the Captain arrive. The bears are beaten off, Jennessen cared for and the two conspirators made prisoners. The return trip marks a happy reunion.

CENTAUR STAR FEATURES.

COULD A MAN DO MORE? (Three Parts—Nov. 24).—The cast: Jean Wolfe, Paul Willis, Roland Sharp, Allen Williams, Crane Wilbur, Carl Von Schiller, Victor Rottman, Celia Santon, C. A. Scheafnocker, Georgia Seheart, Margaret Gibson, B. M. Rice.

Upon her deathbed Mrs. Sherwood entrusts her son, Richard, to the care of the boy's older brother, Darrell. Years pass and Darrell becomes the village preacher and Richard a lawyer. Darrell is a favorite of the community; Richard is a would-be daredevil and a modern swashbuckler. Clandestinely Richard has been meeting Molly Foster. One night while at his club gambling and drinking heavily, he receives a note from Molly asking him to see her at once. At the gate of her home, Molly tells him her dread secret. Warning her to keep silence and making promises he leaves. The following Sunday, when the services at Darrell's church is over, Richard greets Faith Richardson. Faith shows an interest in Darrell, which Richard notes with disfavor. The brothers accompany Faith and her father, Colonel Richardson, to their home.

At the Foster home, Molly lies in bed with the newborn babe. Her father demands to know the name of the father of the child, but Molly refuses to answer. He gives her the option of telling her secret or leaving the home. She accepts the latter course and goes to live in a cottage on the edge of the town provided by Darrell through Faith. Later at a meeting of the "Ladies' Aid Society" the cat element decides that Molly and her baby must leave town. Just as the Society, which has gone to Molly's abode with two constables, is denouncing the girl, Darrell, who has been apprised of their decision, arrives and in a fury of indignation he berates the committee soundly and they leave the room.

Molly is taken very ill and realizing that her end is near, takes her child and makes her way to the home of Darrell and Richard. She begs Richard to give a name to her child but he throws her off as Darrell enters, to whom Molly confesses her secret. Darrell insists that Richard marry Molly at once and the ceremony is begun. But before it is finished Molly dies. Richard steals from the room. Making his way to the Richardson home he leads Faith back to the window giving a view of Darrell's study. He is seen carrying Molly in his arms to the sofa. Richard points to the scene and swears to the truth of the situation the action implies. With Molly gone Darrell adopts the baby. Later Richard and Faith are married.

Time passes. Richard grows tired of Faith and gambles heavily. He takes all of his brother's money, and heavily masked holds up Col. Richardson. He commits a number of robberies in the vicinity, and a vigilance committee is formed, headed by Col. Richardson. Hounded, Richard makes his way to the cottage wherein Molly lived. As he rushes into the darkened room he becomes conscious of the fact that he is not alone. He draws his pistol but before he can use it the figure jumps upon him and unmasks him. Richard faces his brother, whose sorrows had driven him from his study that night. Richard pleads with Darrell to save him, and remembering his oath to his mother the latter assumes the guilt when the committee arrives. An impromptu court is held and Darrell is ordered to leave town the following morning.

By morning Richard has not returned and fearing for his safety, Faith starts in search of him. Intuition leads her to Molly's cottage. In the center of the room she finds Richard—dead. A scrap of paper beside him tells the story. In the meantime Darrell has started his weary way. Realizing the great wrong done him Faith hurries to her father with Richard's dying confession. Mounting his horse Col. Richardson starts after Darrell. At a fork in the road he overtakes him and there gently breaks the news of Richard's death and shows him the message. The Colonel grasps Darrell's hand and starts to lead him home.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE.

INSPIRATION (Thanhouser—5 Parts—Nov. 18).—The cast: Audrey Munson, Thomas A. Curran, George Marlo, Bert Delaney.

A young sculptor had given up finding the model he wanted as an inspiration for his work, when some of his friends accidentally run into a girl on Washington Square. They learn, after making sure that she is not hurt, that she is in search of work, and they take her to the young sculptor's studio. Disgusted with the other models which his wealthy friends have sent him, in hopes of helping him find his ideal, the artist unwillingly consents to give the girl an opportunity. When she takes the model stand, she falls into the pose which is that of the model of his dreams.

Her fame spreads through the colony and she has many opportunities to pose. At first she does so unwillingly, for she cares only to pose for the young artist. He urges her to, however, and she does. She is the model for Daniel Chester French's statue "Evangeline," now in front of Longfellow's home in Cambridge. Next she poses for "History" for Allan Newman, which tops the state Capitol of Florida. When competitions and contracts for art work for the Panama-Pacific Exposition are announced, and work is begun by New York's artists, she again is sought after eagerly, and is the model for Adolph Weinman's "Descending Night," Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney's "Fountain of Eldorado," Daniel Chester French's "Genius of Creation" and many others.

When the statue for which she poses for the young artist is finished, she realizes that she loves him. But she thinks that he cares for some of the wealthy girls who have frequently visited his studio, so she goes away, leaving him a note. For the first time, the artist knows that he loves the model. He searches for her, but cannot find her. Then he gives up, and goes out into the city to look at her in the works of art in which her face and figure have been used as a model—to the "Firemen's Monument," the Pulitzer Memorial, the Williamsburg bridge, the Municipal Building—finally to the Maine monument at Columbus Circle.

There he really finds her, crumpled and exhausted at the base, just out of the hospital, where she has been alone and ill since she left him. And now the story ends, the two will leave together to visit the Exposition at San Francisco, before they return to settle down for life in Bohemia.

RIALTO STAR FEATURE

Colonel Seldon loved Belle, his adopted daughter, much more than he loved his worldly sister, Mrs. Preston. Belle was the ray of sunshine who was brightening his declining years. Mrs. Preston made much of him, but the old gentleman was far too wise to be unaware that her interest was more in the wealth he would leave than in his own comfort and happiness. He had a genuine affection, however, for his nephew, Montague Preston, and his greatest wish was to see Belle and Montague man and wife. Preston had more ambitious plans for her son. Yet with all his love for Belle, Col. Seldon did not make his will in her favor. It was always something he planned to do the next day. When death found him, Belle had not been protected. Reared in a life of luxury, Belle found herself in a single day swept from her proud position as mistress of Col. Seldon's household, and made to feel the humiliation that only the pride and arrogance of such a woman as Mrs. Preston could heap upon her.

Col. Seldon's sister became head of the house. She knew her son's fondness for Belle, and manifested her displeasure. She wished him to marry money. Her own daughter, Anna, she was willing to sacrifice by marrying her to Ashley Callum, a social waster. Social position could be gained thereby, but her daughter loved Phillip Morris. In seeking to thwart her son's love for Belle, Mrs. Preston found an unexpected ally in Belle herself. Both Belle and Montague had been reared in luxury. Belle saw that a union which brought only poverty, since Montague was entirely dependent upon his mother, could bring no happiness. So she decided upon revenge. Learning of Anna's love, Belle aided the girl to elope with Philip Morris.

The news of Anna's elopement rendered Mrs. Preston seriously ill. Urged by Callum, Belle agrees to steal the box of stocks and securities Mrs. Preston has locked in her bedroom. Callum has promised to marry her as soon as they are safe from pursuit. He tells the distraught girl that the fortune is really hers by rights, since her foster father had planned to leave his wealth to her. Belle obtains the box, takes it to her room, and prepares to escape with Callum. Wishing to take something as a remembrance of Col. Seldon she goes to the library for a book he had giver her, "The New Adam and Eve," by Nathaniel Hawthorne. While waiting in her room Belle falls asleep.

And then begin her experiences as the new Eve. Her astral body deserts its human envelope and wanders through the world with the astral body of Montague. They have loved in the flesh, but the conventions and limitations of civilization have prevented their union. Now as hindered spirits they see the true relations of life. Hand in hand they wander in happy companionship through a deserted city and comment on the uselessness of many things which civilization has taught us are essential. What holds Belle-Eve longest is the statute of a little child. Without knowing what influences her, her awakening maternal instinct makes her exclaim, "I wonder if we are alone in the

A GOOD PROJECTOR + A POOR SCREEN

Why buy an expensive Projection Machine and destroy the picture light that it is possible to get out of this machine by using a poor screen? A good projector is essential, but a good screen is an ABSOLUTE NECESSITY!

"MINUSA GOLD FIBRE SCREENS" are made to reflect, without glaring, the PERFECT light in which the picture was taken. They give the picture the beautiful "Tone Value" which is completely lost on poor screens.

"Minusa" screens are different from all other screens because they are "BUILT BY BRAINS." They are not kept in stock by the "bolt," but each screen is scientifically built to fit the particular theatre in which it is installed.

In spite of the wonderful "Picture Light" you get from a "Minusa," it does not cause EYE STRAIN—the one big complaint from the show-going public.

Because of the many reasons set forth above, the "Minusa" is the screen that will MAKE ITS PRESENCE FELT IN THE BOX OFFICE.

world! This lovely little form—did it ever breathe? Or is it a shadow of something real?" Not as Eve is Belle destined to know the answer. Her time in spiritland is up. Her lesson has been learned.

At dawn the first thing Belle sees is the box of securities. Transformed by her journey into the world where values have their true appraisal, Belle sees the enormity of the offense she has been saved from committing. Quickly she restores the valuable papers to their proper place. Montague also has learned his lesson. In the astral body he has found that happiness does not depend upon wealth, position or power. Waking, he determines that Belle must be his wife, no matter how much she fears poverty. To his great joy he finds her ready to listen to his suit. Yet poverty is not their lot, for Mrs. Preston never recovers from the shock occasioned by Anna's elopement. At her death they receive the fortune Col. Seldon had meant should be theirs.

HUMAN MOVEMENTS ANALYZED (Globe—Nov. 6).—The educational subject shows the action of athletes many times slower than in actual life and pictures the muscles brought into play in several of the most popular athletic competitions — running, jumping, and throwing the weights. The pictures were taken with the Pathe extra fast camera at the rate of one hundred pictures a second, and the resulting slowness of action enables one to follow easily every move made by the men. The action of running, jumping and throwing the weights is shown in actual speed and then with the over-speed camera, bringing on the screen in close foreground every move made in these sports.

Children of the Netherlands (Photocolor—On same reel as foregoing).—The children who live on this part of the earth dress differently from the children of our part of the world, and their garb seems strange to our eyes. They are shown here with their queer head-dresses and frocks. They are shown at their fun and "on parade," all dressed up in their Sunday best.

GIVING THEM FITS (Phunphilms—Nov. 1).—Luke de Fluke, a clerk in a shoe store, has a hard time to wait on any men customers when there are female buyers in the place. This, of course, hurts the business and the manager of the place remonstrates with Luke, but to no avail.

Finally, however, he runs afoul of Joe, the shoe repairer in the store. Entering his domain in the rear of the place, Luke insults him and rouses his ire. Joe, a swarthy son of Italy, runs to a neighboring explosive factory, returning with one of their latest model and choicest high powered bombs. This he hurls in the general direction of Luke, and makes a wreck of the place. Hundreds of boxes filled with the latest in vici kids, patent leathers and "trick" shoes come tumbling down from the shelves and the last thing we see of Luke are his number tens sticking out of the pile of debris.

WHIFFLES' FUTILE FLIVVER (Pathecolor—Nov. 3).—Whiffles' fingers are in a bad way and a manicure is sent to him. But his attentions are other than business-like and she leaves him in a huff, leaving her tools and engagement book in her hurry. These he takes up and "covers" her first appointment for her. The patient is a stout man who has no favor in his eyes. Announcing himself as the husband of the manicure, he attends the man's hands, and by the time he is finished said hands are swathed in bandages. He then goes to return the tools to the home of the pretty manicure and there finds that she is married and has three children.

THE MENACE OF THE MUTE (No. 2 of the "Ashton-Kirk, Investigator" series—Five parts—Nov. 5).—The story deals with the murder of one David Hume, a mysterious individual, who has stolen the plans of a new submarine belonging to the father of Allen Morris. Edith Vale, sweetheart of Morris, notes that her fiance is the victim of some obsession and through Pendleton, his close friend, enlists the aid of the great detective. Ashton-Kirk takes up the case with a vim, matching his wits against the craft and cunning of the criminal being his hobby.

Through a simple little piece of paper made by a conductor's punch, the detective is able to get on the proper scent. This enables him to find his man, who proves to be a mute, and through a note dropped by the latter while in conversation in writing with a friend he learns the perpetrator of the crime. Then, back in the home of Hume, he is secreted when the mute and Sagon enter to recover the plans which Hume had in his possession, and for which the murder was committed. They are returned to Morris, and he and Edith are able to enjoy the bliss for which they had longed.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY ,Chapter 27, "Mine Own People" (Two Parts—Nov. 1).—

Hagar, the gypsy queen, endeavors to convince Esther that she, Esther, must take her place as the rightful heir of Stanley Hall. Sick of sacrifices and deception, Hagar demands that the dark secrets of years shall be opened to the light! She demands that the whole truth be known, that the supposed Arthur Stanley, a fugitive from justice in Virginia, and known as John Powell, a millionaire in the far West, be acknowledged for who he is—her own son, a gypsy changeling, bought at birth and made the false heir to the Stanley Earldom in England and the diamond from the sky. Hagar declares a humble gypsy woman, such as she, cannot share a home with Esther Stanley of Stanley Hall, when the rightful position of the latter is acknowledged. Esther refuses her birthright and the two women decide to make one last effort to save Arthur Stanley from the sinful influences that surround him. Again as gypsy queen and gypsy princess, the two start with their gypsy caravan on the long journey across the continent from Virginia to California.

Arthur, as John Powell, sickens of his sins and longs to shake off the shackles that bind him to his evil ways. The diamond, taken by Luke to Quabba and by Quabba brought to Hagar, is returned to Arthur with his mother's prayer. In this hour of humiliation Arthur learns that Blair, whom he trusted, has robbed him treacherously. He also learns at last that Vivian, who has woven her spells around him, is a wanton, wicked woman. He determines to destroy himself. As Arthur is about to drink a toast to death, his hand is strangely stayed as the chapter ends.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 28—"On the Wings of the Morning"—Two Parts—Nov. 8).—Hagar's van has been struck by lightning and she is dying, not many miles from the mansion of her son, the supposed John Powell, millionaire. Luke Lovell lies dead with his face crushed beyond recognition and clad in John Powell clothes wearing the mad millionaire's jewelry with the latter's wallet and private papers. Also on the dead man's breast is the diamond from the sky! Escaping unseen from his mansion, as the dead man, supposed to be him, is brought into the house, Arthur Stanley—John Powell no more—flies to his hangar at dawn and taking out his aeroplane, resolves to mount the wings of the morning and destroy himself by plunging into the sea. But on the wings of the morning, hope and a high desire to live and be clean and whole again, comes over Arthur. He turns and flies inland and sees the caravan of the gypsy people, and then the great machine, tampered with by Blair, snaps, falls from the giddy height, and lands crushed, battered and broken. In the wreckage, seemingly dead, lies the son of Hagar, who was Arthur Stanley, false heir to the Stanley earldom and the diamond from the sky and who was later, John Powell, the mad millionaire. And thus Esther beholds him, cold and white and still, come back to her!

SAVED BY WIRELESS (Keystone).—The cast: Mack Swain, Chester Conklin, Andrew Anderson, Nick Cogley, Ora Carew, Harry McCoy and Walter Klintberg.

Swain and Conklin, two international secret service men of questionable reputation, have taken up headquarters in an underground refuge from which they direct their operations. They are engaged in an effort to steal a valuable code book from Prime Minister Cogley. The butler in Cogley's home is also in league with Swain and Conklin and he keeps headquarters in constant touch with developments. Swain forges a letter which Conklin presents to the Prime Minister who believes him to be a representative from a friendly country. In the home of the Prime Minister, Conklin becomes smitten with the Prime Minister's daughter and immediately forgets his mission, devoting his time to paying attention to the girl. The butler notifies Swain and he forces Conklin to leave her and return to the den while the butler, who has stolen the code book, gives it to Swain and is sent to plant an infernal machine aboard a yacht which brings the girl's sweetheart, Harry, to port.

Harry goes to Cogley to ask him for the girl's hand and is ejected from the room by the cranky father. Conklin, in trying to make good with Swain, sneaks back into the house and steals what he believes to be the code book and triumphantly brings it to Swain who, upon examining it, finds the Prime Minister's diary. Swain, who has received the real code book from the butler, wrecks his vengeance on Conklin and tells him that the girl on the yacht will be blown up at a certain hour. Conklin proceeds to get into communication with the boat by wireless in order to warn them of his discovery, but is discovered by Swain and bound and gagged.

Swain then gets into a racing automobile and makes a dash to the lighthouse to darken the light and let the yacht run on the rocks. A traffic officer pursues them and many thrilling incidents occur before the lighthouse is reached. Conklin is discovered and freed by the secretary, and immediately charters an aeroplane and hastens to the lighthouse. Cogley returns to his his desk, misses the code book and seeing Harry's hat on the table infers that he is the one who took it. Cogley warns the police of the theft and all start toward the boat. Conklin lets a rope down from the aeroplane and drops into the lighthouse where Swain has extinguished the light. Swain discovers him and a chase ensues which winds up with Conklin grabbing a rope on the aeroplane, but as he leaves the top of the lighthouse Swain also catches on the rope, and the two battle in midair. Conklin finally knocks Swain off the rope and he drops into the boat which has been deserted by all on board when the bomb is discovered.

The boat is blown up while Swain is on board. Conklin, seeing the girl marooned on the rocks, orders the aeroplane to the rescue. Conklin drops from the rope into the water and rescues the girl, bringing her up to shore where he finds her father and her sweetheart, Harry. Expected to be rewarded for saving her life, he asks Cogley for her hand. The girl refuses to have him and returns to her sweetheart while Conklin weeps out his troubles on the shoulder of the forgiving Prime Minister.

MATRIMONY.—The cast: Julia Dean, Howard Hickman, Thelma Salter, Louise Glaum, Elizabeth Burbridge.

Diana Rossmore, a young society woman, finds that her husband, Weston, is growing indifferent to her. The realization that she may soon lose her husband comes to her at a reception taking place about four years after their marriage. Diana sees Weston in the company of a divorcee of the vampire type. After a night of worry following the reception, Diana comes to a resolution. She determines to make herself like the other woman in outward seeming at least but not in wickedness. The next reception she dresses daringly and charmingly and finds herself the cynosure of male attention. Rossmore, who has hitherto ignored his wife, is now inclined to be jealous. He notes what a beauty she has become and how his men friends all court her.

From that time on Diana is a changed woman. Instead of the dutiful little wife running to kiss her husband good-bye, it is the husband who is compelled to do the pursuing. When he invites her to dinner or the theatre she always pleads another engagement, which makes him begin to think that he is losing his wife. He upbraids her for openly flirting with other men. Her answer invariably is: "I have made no objections to your friends or manner of living. Why shouldn't you be as reasonable?" Their little girl, Viola, is now four years old. The child must have a party to celebrate her birthday. Rossmore suggests to Diana that they make it just a little home party by themselves, but Diana alleges that she must go out to an engagement. The little girl is disappointed. Antoinette, Diana's younger sister, tries to console the child. She fails utterly. Then Rossmore makes another appeal. Still Diana is relentless.

The young wife dresses for the dinner and then goes to bid the baby good night. Then she realizes that her husband has been re-won. and is now hers for the asking. She returns to her room, takes off her dinner-dance costume, attires herself in a pretty little becoming dress, and joins the birthday party where Weston and the child are at once clasped in her arms.

PARAMOUNT.

STILL WATERS (Famous Players—Nov. 4). —The cast: Marguerite Clark, Robert Broderick Robert Vaughn, Arthur Evers, Ottola Nesmith, Phillip Tonge, Robert Conville, Harry La Pearl.

When old man Martin's only daughter eloped with a circus performer, it was a bitter blow to him. When she returned a year later, after being deserted, he refused to forgive her, but he did take away from her her baby. Fearing that the child would meet the same fate as her mother, he seeks seclusion on a canal boat and gives her every educational advantage.

A vivacious and ambitious girl, Nesta frets at the restraint and finally slips away to a neighboring orchard where she meets Dr. Ramsay, the young owner. They fall in love. But Mrs. Ramsay has other ambitions for her son.

The circus, the first that Nesta has ever seen, comes to the neighboring town. She attracts the attention of the circus folks and substitutes for Pierrette when the woman taking that character falls ill. A fainting scene arranged by another girl makes her unjustly suspicious of the loyalty of Ramsay. Angered by her grandfather's strictness and her lover's apparent defection, she runs away with the circus.

She finds, however, that the only person she can trust in the troupe is the sick woman for whom she substituted. The ringmaster marks her for his own and only by flight does she escape his vicious designs. Fleeing down the towpath to the canal boat with the ringmaster in pursuit. Nesta arrives at the cabin safely, but finds it empty.

The old man, shocked at the girl's flight has become critically ill and has been removed to Dr. Ramsay's place. The doctor, learning the reason for the illness, has gone searching for Nesta. Missing her at the circus he finds her at the canal boat just in time to rescue her from the ringmaster. The sick woman proves to be her mother and the doctor her true lover.

MADAME BUTTERFLY (Famous Players—Nov. 8).—The cast: Mary Pickford Marshal Neilan, Olive West, Jane Hall, Lawrence Wood, Caroline Harris, M. W. Rale, N. T. Carleton, David Burton, Frank Bekum, Caesere Gravina,

Cho-Cho-San, a maiden of the Flowery Kingdom, has been wed to Lieut. Pinkerton, an American naval officer. Two months after the wedding Pinkerton sails away, promising his wife—"Madame Butterfly," as he calls her—to return when "the robins nest again." To the officer the marriage has been but a love affair of the moment to be forgotten with his departure. But to Madame Butterfly it was a real and lasting compact. In her loving, trusting heart she had no doubt that he would return. So in the little house at the foot of the hill where their joyous honeymoon had been spent, she waited for him to come back to her.

A baby was born and the mother thought with happy anticipation of the time when her husband would see his child. Two years pass and still the little wife is waiting, waiting for "the robins to nest again." She is deaf to the proposals of the wealthy Yamadori, an Americanized Japanese, who would marry her though the people about her—even her own parents—look upon her as an outcast. So when the American consul comes to her to tell her that Lieut. Pinkerton, whose ship is due to arrive soon, has taken an American wife—the sweetheart of his youth—the ingenuous faith of Madame Butterfly so touches him that he cannot perform his task. But Cho-Cho-San learns that the ship is due and joyfully makes the home ready for its lord and master. Night comes and the lamps are lit. The servant and the baby fall asleep, but Madame Butterfly continues her vigil, while the lights, like her hopes, die out and only one remains when morning comes.

Then she goes to her bedroom and Pinkerton and the consul enter. As Madame Butterfly returns to the room with the baby, the lieutenant is overcome with pity and withdraws unobserved. The consul then tells her the sad truth and gives her money given to him for her by her husband. The girl sinks grief-stricken to the floor. Pinkerton's American wife enters and tries to comfort her, but Madame Butterfly gives her the lieutenant's money, bidding her return later. Then, drawing the curtains, she prepares for suicide. She has taken the sword of her father from the wall and is about to plunge it into her breast when her baby toddles over to her. Lest the child should see, she blindfolds its eyes and returns behind the curtain. Then Madame Butterfly staggers forth, a cloth about her bleeding throat. She has clasped the child to her breast as Pinkerton enters and embraces the dying girl whose face is illuminated with infinite happiness.

He is plunged into great grief and despair. All night he sits brooding over his loss. Through his distorted imagination he sees the ominous raven enter his chamber and croak gloomy forebodings. The spirit of his wife also appears and finally he himself dies, and is wafted to heights supernal, where he is united with his "Lenore."

Photodrama From a New Angle!

The Photodrama
—Its Place Among the Fine Arts

By William Morgan Hannon, B.L.,LL.B.

This book gives a practical and theoretical view of the photodrama, enabling the reader to see this great art as a whole.

What Mr. Epes Winthrop Sargent, the great authority on the photoplay, says of Mr. Hannon's book:

"It is, I believe, the pioneer work in the second stage of the literature of photoplay. Most persons who have sought to write from this angle have been sadly handicapped by their intense ignorance of their subject. It has been a pleasure to read one who speaks with authority."

What the New York "Sun" says:

"A eulogy of the aesthetic qualities of moving pictures has been written by William Morgan Hannon, who is in the business, in 'The Photodrama—Its Place Among The Fine Arts.' The author has full command of the connoisseur's vocabulary."

What the Jacksonville Fla. "Times-Union" says:

"The writer has taken time to critically review the photoplay as a factor in the present day amusement life, and discusses its claims from an artistic standpoint. Briefly summarizing the essentials of a photodrama, the writer asserts there are efforts worthy of success and others that do not deserve more than the passing attention given. It is a very interesting treatise on the 'movies' in the present day acknowledged as the most stupendous, as well as astonishing method of entertainment and diversion of the day. The little book is exquisitely designed and printed on handmade paper with initial letters in colors."

These Feet are Worth a Million Dollars

Royalty, society, wealth, have gazed at them in admiration; newspapers and magazines have printed pages and volumes about them; keen, far-visioned business men have put a picture of them on their products and gained for them immediate popularity.

They are the feet of the most famous dancers in the world—the originators of the One-Step, Tango, Maxixe; owners of the Castle House; the stars of New York's greatest musical comedies—the most discussed couple in all America.

Mr. & Mrs. Vernon Castle

Since they became famous bids have gone high to bring them into motion pictures. We have paid their price. And these million dollar feet can wend their steps into your box office and put over for you as big a show as you have yet known.

Although the outstanding memory of "The Whirl of Life" is in those wonderful dancing scenes in ballroom, on stage and in richly lighted royal cabarets—this feature is as powerful a drama as has come before you this year. It is written around the almost unbelievable lives of these two young people.

The WHIRL of LIFE

Story by Vernon Castle. Adapted for Screen by Catharine Carr. Produced by Oliver D. Bailey.

Buyers of territories, base your choice on the judgment of these hard-headed buyers:—

A. Caille & Co., Majestic Theatre, Detroit, Mich., bought the States of Michigan and Ohio; Authors Film Co., Inc., Empire Theatre Building, New York, bought Greater New York State, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, while the Celebrated Film Corporation of Chicago purchased Illinois and Wisconsin. Warren Short, Equitable Building, New York, has just purchased Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, North and South Carolina. It is worth a telegram, a telephone call or a personal call.

Mr. and Mrs.
VERNON CASTLE

have torn the veil from their private life and have given to you what newspaper and magazine publishers have been begging them to tell without success for years.

This great picture abounds in surprise, villainy, pathos, humor, excitement, such as would rouse the envy of a Jules Verne.

Now, while Mr. and Mrs. Castle themselves are playing to $2 houses, bring them in this great six-reel motion picture, that never lags a moment, into your house. If this picture is not a go, nothing ever will be; for it has all the qualities that make for a motion picture success—big stars, a powerful play, perfect direction, good photography and the right sort of advertising.

The charming Mrs. Castle is seen in a myriad of costumes made for her by the most celebrated modistes of Paris and New York. Mrs. Castle has been known as the fashion leader for the last several years and in this production she brings forth many fashion surprises.

The WHIRL of LIFE

At the Globe Theatre, N. Y., it went over like a whirlwind with $2 paid for every seat. The critics on the N. Y. papers went wild declaring the story and the picture one of the sensations of the year.

Foreign rights and a few state rights still open. Wire your request for details and contract.

WAR ROMANCE

"The Crimson Wing"

in 6 acts. By H. C. Chatfield-Taylor

This is a powerful drama of romance in the field of action. It depicts the stirring scenes of warfare, but carries throughout a deep sentiment of love that thrills every heart. While the scenes take place on the present war grounds of Europe, the play is strictly neutral in sentiment. It is thrilling, fascinating, intense.

The Story of a Little Girl With a Heartache

"Go away, little Ragamuffin!"

With hands thrust deep in ragged pockets, his face blazing resentment, the boy turned from the hard-faced woman.

But a pair of blue eyes followed him wistfully.

Day after day a golden haired girl looked longingly after the boy she might not play with.

Years passed and her heart ached with a great yearning.

One day the Golden Path her mother had sought for her opened. For a rich man had noticed her beauty.

The little girl faced the glaring lights of the city and they blinded her eyes. She was pitifully alone and her footsteps wavered when the man offered her all the beautiful things that wealth could buy.

But the "little Ragamuffin" had watched and waited. He knew the perils of the Golden Path and he placed his arm about her protectingly. Then he whispered that he loved her, and she was happy at last.

This fascinating story is portrayed in Essanay's five-act photodrama, "A Daughter of the City," written by H. S. Sheldon and directed by E. H. Calvert. It is a powerful drama, pointing out a great present day evil.

Marguerite Clayton is the little "Daughter of the City" and E. H. Calvert represents the vampire of society.

AN APPEAL FOR FAIR PLAY

Because of letters of protest received from numerous exhibitors who secured from so-called film exchanges the conglomerations entitled Charles Chaplin in "The Mix-Up," "Ambition" and "The Review," Mr. Chaplin again wishes to warn the public in general, and the exhibitors in particular, that neither he nor the Essanay company is responsible for these patched-up films.

The films in question are not complete Chaplin pictures. They are merely a rehash of some of the earlier efforts in which Mr. Chaplin did appear. Fragmentary bits have been strung together—without regard to sequence or story.

Mr. Chaplin asks for fair play.

A great injustice is done to Mr. Chaplin, who undoubtedly is the central figure about which these films revolve. Charles Chaplin—as the reputable exchanges know—is producing exclusively for ESSANAY complete pictures that merit the keen popularity they receive everywhere.

ESSANAY asks fair play. Not alone for Mr. Chaplin—who undoubtedly is greatly injured—but for the great public which is anxiously awaiting every new ESSANAY-CHAPLIN release.

If you are an exhibitor, certainly you do not want to delude your patrons. Only in fair play can you derive profits. Just remember that you can only fool the people once.

Facts and Comments

ONE of the superstitions we would like to put to test is the oft-repeated one about the coming extinction of the "little exhibitor." The writer of this column had special opportunities within the last few weeks to get in touch with conditions as they actually exist and he found "the little exhibitor" very much alive. The cluster of splendidly lighted theaters on the busy corners and thoroughfares are not infrequently kept by "the little exhibitor" who has survived the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune while bigger men around him were battling against fierce odds and often went under. Then there are "the neighborhood theaters." Let us make no mistake about their vitality and their tremendous influence. Most of the neighborhood theaters are kept by "the little exhibitor." I have great respect for these men, many of whom are masters of their craft.

* * *

OUR friends of the daily press have taken the motion picture to their editorial bosom, but the embrace is at times quite awkward and embarrassing to our noble art. One paper speaks of a distinguished tragedian "posing" for motion pictures. There is nothing more fatal to a motion picture actor than "posing." Another friendly critic remarks thusly: "The play being a motion picture affair was of course not without its flaws," or words to that effect. If he is right, the screen is afflicted with the handicap of original sin. That, "of course," sounds so dreadfully dogmatic.

* * *

THE Sunday question is being again agitated all over the country. There are more motion picture theaters open on Sunday at this time than ever before. This could not have happened if the motion picture had not been on its good behavior. A most significant fact is the support given to Sunday pictures by ministers. Of course, they insist on proper pictures in keeping with the character of the day. The Sunday program ought to have distinct educational features. Any exhibitors interested in the subject will do well to send for our publication, "The Sunday Law and the Motion Picture." We will send the pamphlet free of charge to any one who will take the trouble to write for it.

* * *

THE exhibitor who remarks that "we must keep censorship until a better substitute can be found" does not make himself very clear. What do you mean by "substitute"? We want no censorship and no substitute. Public opinion and the laws now on the statute books is all we need for a twentieth century regulation of the motion picture.

* * *

WE hear the complaint about "padding" in features from so many exhibitors that we feel in duty bound to warn the producers against this odious practice. The public wrath is sure to come. There may be a revival of the single reel such as we now little dream of. If it does come as a result of overcrowding the market with padded stuff we can see shelves full of "glorious masterpieces" doing nothing. There will be scant sympathy for the "padders."

* * *

A VALUED friend and correspondent of The Moving Picture World suggests a title editor for every worth while film company. There are nominal title editors now, but they seem to be a little bit remiss now and then. It surely is no herculean task to proofread two or three hundred feet of titles or even five times as much. A typographical error in a newspaper is a venial sin compared with a shocking and disfiguring mistake in film titles.

* * *

READERS of The Moving Picture World have freely used the anti-censorship literature which we offered and are still offering to send to any exhibitor who thinks he has use for it. The result is curious and interesting. In the newspaper clippings which we receive from all parts of the country we notice the very phraseology of The Moving Picture World. The expression "Freedom of the Screen" seems to have appealed to editors of newspapers. In this movement for the liberation of the industry from an intolerable yoke and a heavy financial burden, The Moving Picture World has blazed a trail which every advocate of the freedom of the screen is bound to follow.

Right the War Tax

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE special war tax imposed by Congress upon motion picture theaters will expire on the 31st day of next month. This may sound like cheerful news, but it is quite the contrary. We must not forget that Congress will meet for its short session on the first Monday of December. One of the first and perhaps the only thing Congress will do is to revise the war tax schedules. The intention is according to our best information to revise these schedules upward rather than downward.

Last year the tax was defended on the ground that the European war caused a great falling off in import duties; this year the claim will be that we have to provide for money not only to offset the loss of revenue through a decrease in imports, but to meet the expenses of a policy of national "preparedness."

Let us admit that from time immemorial all amusements have been subject to taxation by the state. The motion picture theaters have been and are now taxed by the city, the state and the nation. It has been definitely proved right here in this city that the special war tax drove scores of exhibitors out of business. No doubt the same result followed in other portions of the country. In case of the smaller theaters the tax was altogether excessive and confiscatory. It was scarcely less of a hardship on all the motion picture theaters.

We think that the theater and the motion picture house are, or ought to be, two entirely distinct and different propositions. We take the statesman's point of view in this matter. The one feature which differentiates the motion picture house from the legitimate theater is the distinct educational value of the screen. The motion picture has fully as much educative force and influence as the press, or the school, or the pulpit, or the library. There are narrow men and narrower women who see but the occasional lurid feature or the loud poster. They forget the vast amount of good the screen is doing every hour of the day. It is not only the strictly educational picture which enlightens and refines the millions who go to the motion picture houses day after day. Every visualized work of fiction, every filmed version of the drama, every animated weekly, indeed every portrayal of life has an educative influence. We do not for a moment deny that the legitimate stage has a similar influence, but it is not half as widespread, no, not one-tenth nor one-hundredth part as widespread. Besides, the legitimate theater charges on an average ten times as much for admission as the motion picture house. The motion picture supplies all the people, the readers of the penny press no less than the readers of the high-priced magazines.

To tax any medium of expression with such marvelous powers as those possessed by the motion picture is against the first principles of statesmanship. Whatever has educational value ought to be encouraged and promoted by the state. This is not a mere theory. It is and has been the settled policy of American statesmanship ever since the Dutch and the Puritan days. To a democracy the educational influences in the state are like the breath of life. Popular government has not and can not have any foundation other than public intelligence. A medium which imparts knowledge and information along with entertainment is clearly entitled to the fostering care of American statesmanship. If any taxes are imposed the necessity ought be paramount and the amount as light as possible.

The government of Italy has recognized this principle in its practical treatment of motion picture films. The government of Italy is about as poor as our own government is rich. It is compelled to tax pretty nearly everything in sight. Motion picture films are taxed in Italy if they deal with purely dramatic themes, but they are exempt from taxation if they are educational in character. A motion picture theater which shows at least one or two educational films on its daily program ought to be exempt from special war taxation. If we tax educational films we might just as well tax the newspapers and the books and the lectures in the universities. The motion picture theater is the university of the plain people. It is beyond all manner of doubt the most important factor in promoting adult education. We have the word of one of the oldest educators of the day for the assertion that adult education is the foremost need of our country today.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD would like to see the organized exhibitors take up this matter of fighting the war tax. As it now stands, and as it may stand hereafter, the tax will be levied on the exhibitor. We understand that the producers will be ably represented in Washington and that a determined effort will be made to either abolish the tax altogether or to secure a substantial reduction. The exhibitors being most directly concerned ought to be represented in Washington, at least at this particular time and for this particular purpose. It would be well for all the exhibitors, whether organized or not, to make themselves heard. The screen's political power has been recently demonstrated in this state. The men who attend the coming session of Congress all have political ambitions. Most of them, it is fair to presume, are honestly trying to discharge their duties to their constituents. Now, then, let every exhibitor write to the Congressman of his district and urge his protest against the special war tax on motion picture theaters. Congressmen are responsive to a strong and genuine public demand.

The motion picture interests under the leadership of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD succeeded in defeating the Crafts censorship bill. Taxation is every bit as objectionable as censorship. Unless a determined effort is made by all the branches of the industry there is grave danger of an increase in the special war tax on motion picture theaters.

There is no time to be lost. Congress will meet within the next three weeks. The work of Congress will naturally have to be done quickly, as it must adjourn by March 4.

Our advice is: Get together without delay and do something.

WE commend the perusal of the views of Mr. George Kleine, printed in another part of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. What entitles these views to special consideration is the fact that they come from one of the pioneers of the industry and a close and observant student of affairs and conditions. It is most pleasing and gratifying to note that the exhibitors on their part are most anxious to co-operate with the producer. Nothing more beneficial to the development of the industry along the right lines could be imagined than such a continued era of good feeling between the two most important branches.

Thou Shalt Not*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

NOT to mention those reviewers of photoplays who are still in the "I like this" or "I don't like that" imperfect stage of development, who imagine that mere opinion, such as any member of an audience could deliver, becomes criticism when it is printed, and not to mention those who have become soured by envious failure or sweetened by flattering attentions, there are critics whose "Thou Shalt Not" may never decide the success or failure of a photodrama, whose influence is nevertheless deeply felt, who unconsciously acquire a fault-finding habit that interferes with their discovery and nourishment of true genius. True genius is highly sensitive and keenly self-conscious, a strange combination of egotism and modesty, resulting from a superior knowledge of the world and of self. It requires a critic of superior appreciation and broad sympathies to foster all that is fine in creative effort while holding in restraint any tendency which might be fatal to original achievement.

It is not unusual for a novelist to receive opposing criticisms from a clipping bureau, one stating that the author's exquisite style barely compensates for the loosely-built plot, the other declaring that the well-constructed plot barely saves the badly-written story from oblivion. Such bare assertion, unsupported by analysis is of no value to the writer and obviously worthless to the reader. So far as the author of a photodrama is concerned, it would appear to be a matter of interest to determine whether or not he IS the author, or whether he is trying to sell old lamps for new. When it is considered how much audiences have endured from stale repetition, originality might easily cover a multitude of sins.

It is an easy matter to recognize the light that still burns in some good old lamps. When stories of proven worth, the Camilles, the Cinderellas, the Carmens, are transformed for the screen the average critical mind lounges in an orchestra chair during a well-established run and has only to occupy itself with minor details, mostly those of type and treatment, but a much higher order of discrimination is required to formulate appreciation and creative criticism in reviewing pure examples of the New Art, stories written for screen presentation alone. The constant repetition of past years has placed the average audience in the position of one knowing beforehand how the screen story is to turn out, destroying curiosity as to the outcome, eliminating the important element of suspense and dulling interest in the art itself.

There is a reaction starting, one becoming manifest in a tremendous demand for original stories especially suited to picturing on the screen. So great is this demand that there are bound to be some poor examples among the early supply, but the same criticism applied to adaptations in the past can not be so freely used, if originality is to be encouraged. Some of our best critics have graduated from those thoroughly familiar with weak spots in the stage play and are well armed with dogmas on what is undramatic, some of them could write a fairly good history of the stage, but all-too-few of them have more than a general idea of the difficulties still obstructing the production of an original highly-finished, eminently-satisfactory five-reel feature for the screen. To be entirely just, they should either study the practical side of production or shake off much of their working philosophy.

Merely by way of illustration, consider the good old theatric adage "a good sermon but a bad play." It is dangerous to preach on the stage—it is even dangerous in a novel—but how easily that saying becomes confounded with the idea that it is a fault for a play to have any depth of meaning not easily penetrated by shallow minds. If such were the case, then "Faust" should have been a failure. If such were the case, then Shaw, Granville Barker, Rostand, Maeterlinck, Hauptman and all great modern playwrights, quite as well as Tolstoi, Ibsen and Goethe, might have written in vain. When a capable theatrical critic takes up a similar line of work in this new field, it might be a good idea for him to start with an open mind rather than to bring along with him a series of "Thou-Shalt Nots" from the older art.

There were writers contemporary with Shakespeare who thought him a bungler at his trade. Even in those days there were theories as to the exact line of procedure a creative author should follow. We have only reached a true value of many great authors, those who created the examples for others to follow, after a lapse of many years. In this New Art, where rules and regulations are most fortunately lacking, where the scope is that of human life past, present and future, the highest service any true critic can perform is to discover talent through intelligent appreciation of it AND OF THE LACK OF IT. Keep in mind that the people who go to the picture shows are neither shallow nor too fastidious. These little entertainments have become a part of our daily life, and they are supported that they may feed the human heart and the human mind.

If there is to be a "Thou Shalt Not," let it apply to stories having in them nothing of contemporary value. This is the greatest history-making epoch the world has ever known. Old and new principles are clashing as never before. The facts of life are spread out before us, and, even though they be dull in themselves, the essence to be brought out of them may sparkle with meaning. Any critic who casts his eyes over the whole field of moving pictures can not fail to see in them a coming cultural force. They are growing into our social life, into our educational life, stirring new hopes and new aspirations in millions of minds dulled by hardship and incessant labor. All that the novel can tell in halting language; all that the stage can depict by artificial contrivance; all that the genius of painters can invent; all that Nature in her varied moods can portray is within the scope of the screen, itself the shrine of our fellow beings the world over.

Each period of history has been lighted up by a few bright minds, but the great mass has ever been groping in darkness, participating but slightly in what we proudly nominate as "progress." Now, at last, culture need not be an exclusive possession of leisure. A new and powerful medium is placed in our hands through which the visions of the humble may be given illumination, where every beauty that delights the eye, where every thought that charms the mind, can find a universality of expression. Now, at last, may the greatest ideas and the grandest ideals be sent to all people, to all nations, bringing people themselves and their representative nations into finer relation and better understanding of one another.

George Kleine Talks

Finds a Radical Change in Attitude of Producer Toward Exhibitor—Exhibitors, He Thinks, Prefer Film Stars to Stage Stars—Picture Fans No Respectors of Stage Reputations—The Results of the Great Increase in Cost of Production—Films Should Be Condensed, Not Padded.

By W. Stephen Bush.

"HALF Hours with Famous Men." I would want to devote the first chapter in any such series to George Kleine; not so much because his name is a household word in film circles on both sides of the water, but rather because his discourse is always singularly illuminating and instructive. The day will surely come when the big publications of the country are going to treat the motion picture seriously and intelligently. They will then need a fund of information and a man who knows how to impart it quickly and completely. My hope is that they will go to George Kleine. He has been one of the makers of motion picture history, he is in the very forefront of the industry at this moment; no man is more familiar with its traditions, no man better qualified to speak of its future. He sees every aspect of the present situation and I am very certain that he could address with equal facility and success a general audience and an audience consisting entirely of exhibitors. There are very few men of whom this can be said with perfect truth

George Kleine.

A Man of Tireless Energy and Lofty Ambition.

Mr. Kleine has the mastery of the subject and the mastery of the language. The result is that the interviewer's task becomes the mere clerical function of recording. I will serve my readers best by reproducing just what Mr. Kleine said. All he said and the way he said it gave me an impression of great grasp and lavish powers of reserve. Mr. Kleine, whose activities can never quite keep pace with his ambition, is now engaged in the producing field. He has achieved distinction in other fields of the new art; his handling of the best films of Europe has made him a giant in the importing branch; his services to the cause of the Educational film will never be adequately described or appreciated. There is no doubt that in these recent days the art of producing motion pictures of superior merit has deeply interested him. A mind of such scholarly attainments and an eye with such artistic perception was bound to yield to the fascination sooner or later.

When not long before the outbreak of the European war we heard of Mr. Kleine's project of making pictures in Italy using American themes and American players, we were enabled to catch a glimpse both of his enterprise and his good practical sense. The war has suspended the execution of this plan, which promised so much for a new birth of quality. Such a plan is not likely to be given up. To wed the art and atmosphere of Italy to American taste and American ideas and plays was a most felicitous and quite a unique conception, and its author will not be able to forget it. The Italians have paid their tribute to Mr. Kleine in many ways. An exquisite statuette of Don Quixote in a corner back of Mr. Kleine's desk proves that they know how to please him. The statuette represents the immortal knight in the act of turning the pages of one of the old tomes on chivalry. Written, or engraved rather, upon the bronze is the word "Pronto," which in English means ready. "Pronto" is the last alarm to players and cameramen in the studios of Italy. There were other evidences of a cultivated taste and of a traveler's cherished trophies scattered through the room where Mr. Kleine received me, confessing at once that he had but twenty-five minutes to spare. To a man like Mr. Kleine I had no suggestion to offer as to the most likely topic for a good talk for the benefit of the readers of The Moving Picture World.

"Comments on conditions," said he, "generally divide themselves into the prophetic or the historic. I do not claim honors either as a prophet or as an historian." Thereupon Mr. Kleine paused and hesitated just for a minute.

Presently he chose two themes which will I think insure him universal attention.

Timely Themes Ably Discussed.

"One question," he said, "which confronts us at this time is the case of Stage Stars vs. Film Stars. Personally I think that the public want film stars in preference to stage stars. Well known stage stars are not known everywhere. There are places having good motion picture theaters where the people have not heard and learned so much about stage stars. There is one aspect of the present situation which deserves attention—the manufacturer is getting closer to the exhibitor. For a long period it was otherwise. Indeed, from the beginning to a year or so ago the manufacturer held himself aloof from the exhibitor. The manufacturer was wont to evolve his productions out of his own inner consciousness, influenced more or less by cashiers' reports and superficial observation. The manufacturer had a habit, too, of indulging in criticisms of the methods of the exhibitor. He was apt to be intolerant of the opinions of the exhibitor. Manufacturers assumed an air of superiority in discussing the exhibitor. Producers and exchangemen treated the exhibitor in many cases with positive disrespect.

A Closer Relationship Between Producer and Exhibitor.

"There is no doubt whatever that this attitude of the producer toward the exhibitor has undergone a radical change. There is much more sympathy between the two, there is a much better mutual understanding and a closer personal intercourse. I think I am safe in saying that almost all manufacturers are very anxious to give the exhibitor what his audiences want to have. The exhibitor being most directly interested and being the medium between the producers and the public, manufacturers now feel that he is the one to be consulted. I have been in personal correspondence with several hundreds of exhibitors and I find that their views and their information have been very illuminating and beneficial. What we all want is to make the best films whether they are eight thousand or one thousand feet long.

"The tendency of the times is to improve the product, which means a continued increase in expense to the manufacturers. This increased cost not only embraces higher salaries, but also an increase in the expense of studio equipment, staging and selling force and in fact in all departments of the business. When it comes to the production of features I find that besides the surface expenses there are items of cost frequently forgotten by the public and by the exhibitor. There is, for instance, the cost of examining manuscripts submitted and the maintenance of fifteen or more branch offices for effective distribution. All of these offices, of course, are conducted by well-paid managers, whose staffs include traveling solicitors, etc. Such expenses must be prorated within a given period. No series of dates in New York or Chicago can begin to compensate for the investment.

Manufacturing More Hazardous Than Ever.

"The income from at least two thousand smaller cities and towns is necessary to cover the gross cost in producing. Manufacturers, therefore, to an increasing extent must in those towns get into personal touch with the exhibitor, must aid him in diagnosing the public taste and do everything in their power to help the exhibitor. It would indeed be foolish for the manufacturer to assume an attitude of indifference to the exhibitor or to force upon him what he cannot use. When mistakes are made they are not the results of indifference, but simply unavoidable errors of judgment. By the way, the acumen of the exhibitor has been a revelation to me. I assure you I have received brilliant letters from men running theaters in towns of 2,000 inhabitants showing a great grasp of the business. My correspondence convinces me that a great majority of exhibitors show a thorough understanding of all the vital points connected with the industry.

Stage Stars vs. Film Stars.

"This brings me back to the problem of Stage Stars vs. Film Stars. Almost without exception the exhibitor favors well known film stars as against stage stars, at least of the lesser magnitude. Manufacturers are and have been prone to overlook the fact that a stage name well known on Broadway may be known in far lesser degree in the smaller towns and cities in which most of our motion picture theaters are located. You see the film artist, who has appeared in numerous screen productions for a period of years, receives great value through the feeling of personal interest which has developed on the part of the motion picture audiences. In my opinion this personal feeling serves to disarm critics, whereas the stage performer recently converted to motion pictures lacks this personal appeal and frequent contact and is, therefore, at times severely and even harshly criticised. I have myself been disappointed on occasion when some conspicuous stage performer, who happened to appear in one of our features, met with a cold and critical reception. It is a fact that 'picture fans' are no respectors of stage reputations. We may exclude a few of our largest New York and Chicago theaters where certain stars are well known and popular.

Producers Welcome Suggestions from the Exhibitor.

"I want to assure exhibitors that we are glad to receive criticisms and suggestions from them at all times. All letters from exhibitors are carefully read and we try to give them every possible consideration. The manufacturers do not want to neglect any thing which will convince the exhibitors of their friendly and co-operative attitude. I have issued special visitors' cards to all my branch managers to be given to exhibitors in their districts. These cards are honored here at any time and whenever such an exhibitor comes to New York we want him to come up here and see what we are doing. If he has any points he wishes to give us we will be only too glad to listen to him."

I remarked here that, having just interviewed about three score of exhibitors on a tour through New York State, I found a disposition on the part of the exhibitor to co-operate with the producer, and to be tolerant with mere errors of judgment. One thing, however, I told Mr. Kleine the exhibitors are all protesting against and that was the padding of features.

Mr. Kleine expressed himself as strongly committed against all padding practices.

Deplores Padding of Films.

"To hold automatically to a five-reel length may be a temptation to padding. We certainly want to avoid it in our features. We want to give our exhibitors stories with plenty of meat in them, with strong action, with conflict of emotions, etc. We want our subjects to be strong enough to build say seven reels upon them and then we want to reduce them to five before sending the feature out. Let me give you some examples. 'DuBarry' originally was thirteen reels without titles, and we reduced it to 6,500 feet with titles. In "The Money Master" we had ten reels, which we cut down to five. The point is this: When we don't get 100 per cent. in our features it is not the result of careless handling or neglect, but simply an error of judgment or some other cause. If exhibitors heard the discussions among manufacturers, their heart-to-heart talks, and realized their earnest attempts to produce the best results they would be inclined to be tolerant and patient. What I personally would ask of the exhibitor is an honest expression of opinion as distinct from captious criticism or mere fault-finding. I want helpful and constructive criticism, not destructive, that is always useless and depressing. We like to hear from the exhibitor what he thinks of our stories of our artists and of our work generally. Much is due to the experience derived in past years. We all have learned a good deal or have had a chance to."

Philadelphia Exhibitors' Ball

Preparations Now Being Made for the Third Annual Dancefest.

PREPARATIONS are being made for the third annual moving picture ball which will be held at the Turngemeinde Hall, Broad street and Columbia avenue, on December 8, under the auspices of the Philadelphia Exhibitors' League. Thousands of circulars announcing the event have been distributed among the trade, and attractive posters have been hung in many public places. Enthusiasm is running high and, according to indications, this occasion should prove to be the largest success ever encountered by any local organization in the way of entertainment. The price of admission has been regulated so as to be within the reach of everyone, $1 admitting both lady and gentleman.

A committee, consisting of Jay Emanuel, chairman; Dave Sabolosky, of the Globe; William Goldenbery, of the Victoria; J. Hopkins, of the Somerset; Marcus Benn, of the Benn; C. L. Bradfield, of the Family; Charles Segall, of the Apollo, and George Beihoff, manager of the local branch of the World Film Corporation, has been chosen to handle the situation and to take every step within reason that would tend to make the ball a success. Judging from early reports, the committee is certainly living up to the trust conferred upon it and has even gone a step further and exceeded the most fond expectations.

John Clark, of the Metro exchange, announces that he will bring Francis X. Bushman along with him to lead the grand march, and it is an assured fact that many lovers of this notable film star will be on hand to become closer acquainted with their idol. The decorations will be of a most wonderful nature, and music for the occasion will be furnished by one of the leading orchestras in this section of the country. Now then, all you moving picture fans, get in line and join the crowd going to the exhibitors' ball.

STEARN'S REPLY TO HERRINGTON.

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 13th, 1915.

To the Editor of the Moving Picture World, New York:

Dear Sir—Regarding Mr. Herrington's statement in your issue of Nov. 13th, with reference to the convention held in Cleveland on Oct. 19th, desire to state that Mr. Herrington does not confine himself to the facts. Mr. Herrington had absolutely no authority according to our constitution and by-laws, to expel a State branch until ninety days after sending notice. See Article 3, Section 3.

The first demand that was made on Mr. Wilson for the per capita tax was on Sept. 16th, and the convention was called on Oct. 19th. The earliest date that Ohio Branch No. 1 could have been expelled was on Dec. 16th, and until that time the regularly elected officers were the only ones in authority to call a convention. Personally I knew nothing of Mr. Herrington's plans until I read of the call for the convention in the trade papers. If Mr. Herrington was sincere in wanting to build up the league, why didn't he consult with the officers of Ohio Branch No. 1 before taking action.

Mr. Herrington can do all the reorganizing he wants to, but I know that there were seventy exhibitors at the Columbus convention who were not at the Cleveland convention, and who never will consent to be a party to such tactics. The convention held at Columbus was attended by exhibitors only, no contributions were asked or accepted from any outside source. Can Mr. Herrington say as much for the convention held at Cleveland? Yours very truly,

MAX STEARN, President,
Ohio Branch No. 1, M. P. E. L. of A.

THE ASSOCIATED SIGNS UP ANOTHER STAR.

The Associated has signed up Sammy Goldberg, formerly of one of the theatrical weeklies to play general utility on their office team. Sammy, who is very ambitious to become a journalist, is a cub reporter evenings on the Globe and is working under the personal supervision of Irving J. Barsky, the director of publicity for the Associated, who has received his journalistic education in the college of hard knocks.

The General Film Company Reorganized

J. A. Berst Is Elected President and F. J. Marion Vice-President to Succeed J. J. Kennedy and C. H. Wilson, Who Resigned—Standing Order Plan Goes By the Board and Manufacturers May Advertise Liberally—Profit-Sharing Plan Contemplated for Branch Managers.

AT THE regular meeting of the directors of the General Film Company in New York City, November 8 and 9, the company was reorganized. All the directors were present, excepting George K. Spoor, who had been called to the Pacific Coast on business. William N. Selig and William Wright, who were present at the time of the opening of the Monday meeting, were invited to remain.

J. A. Berst.

When the meeting was called to order, Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Wilson stated to the board that the fact that they were directors and officers of the Motion Picture Patents Company would narrow their action as officers of the General Film Company and, therefore, requested the board to relieve them of their duties as officers of that company. After the request was made the meeting was adjourned, without action, until Tuesday evening, November 9.

After reconvening on Tuesday, the resignations of Mr. Kennedy and Mr. .Wilson as officers of the General Film Company were thoroughly discussed, after which their resignations were accepted with expressions of sincere regret.

The board then proceeded to elect officers for the vacancies of president and vice-president, and J. A. Berst was elected unanimously to succeed J. J. Kennedy and F. J. Marion to succeeed C. H. Wilson.

Mr. Berst then announced that he would accept the office with the understanding that William N. Selig would release him from the offices of vice-president and general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company. This Mr. Selig at first refused to do, but being approached by the directors en masse and urgently requested to consent, he finally yielded.

The offices of treasurer, assistant treasurer and secretary remain as formerly in the care of A. E. Smith, Paul Melies and F. R. Clarke, respectively.

Mr. Berst took charge of his office immediately, and Percy L. Waters, general manager of the company, and Louis Reichert, assistant general manager, resigned.

President Berst has announced that he will not appoint a general manager, but instead will appoint at least two, and possibly three or four, district managers. The first of these appointments has already been made, that for the Middle West, F. C. Aiken—an old-time and able adherent of the General Film Company—being selected for the position.

Mr. Berst states that an announcement of the new policies of the General Film Company will be made next week.

Effect of Reorganization Far-Reaching.

According to Frank J. Marion, the newly elected vice-president of the General Film Company, the effect of the reorganization will be far-reaching. "In the first place," explained Mr. Marion, "it was our purpose to anticipate in as far as was possible the wishes of the government regarding to compliance with the laws regulating trade organizations. While we cannot know what the final judgment of the court will be there are some features which seem to us to come within the scope of the decision of Judge Dickinson, of the United States District Court. For example, in electing Mr. Berst to the office of president, we have selected a man who is in no way connected with any manufacturing company. By the appointment of Mr. Aiken as assistant to Mr. Berst, the interests of the preferred stockholders are adequately represented. Since Mr. Aiken is a large stockholder and, in all probability, would be selected as such representative by the preferred stockholders if they were to make a selection. Other features of the reorganization plan are calculated to anticipate as nearly as possible the wishes of the government.

Independent of Manufacturers.

"Another radical departure is the abolishment of the old "standing order" plan. Hereafter productions of the several manufacturers will be submitted to the General Film Company and handled on a percentage basis. The company will not be required to buy a foot of film and what is offered will be handled on merit. In this connection a tentative schedule has been prepared upon the experience of the branch managers as to the character of product that has the greatest demand, and while this schedule is not fixed, it will, in a great measure govern the output of the several companies.

1st Week								2d Week
December 20th								December 27th
M	T	W	T	F	S	Total		M	T	W	T	F	S	Total
1	2	3				6	Biograph	1		3				4
	1	1		3		5	Edison		1	1		3		5
	2	1			3	6	Essanay		2	1			3	6
	1	2		1	1	5	Kalem		1	2		1	1	5
			1			1	Kleine		3		1			4
			3		1	4	Lubin				3		1	4
			1	1		2	Melies				1	1		2
3+1			1		1	6	Selig	3+1			1		1	6
1		1			3	5	Vitagraph	1		1			3	5
6	6	8	6	5	9	40	TOTAL	6	7	8	6	5	9	41

(This schedule repeats for the third and fourth weeks and so on. 3 + 1 indicates a topical reel added to the Monday release.)

"The schedule is based on experience and represents the class of pictures that have had the greatest vogue among exhibitors. It comprehends a weekly program of 42 reels, which is about 25 per cent. less than the quantity formerly released by the manufacturers connected with the General Film Company—about 70 reels per week.

"It appears upon analysis that this apparent curtailment of product while cutting down the number of reels, is not calculated to decrease the amount of footage. The effect will be to cut out much dead wood, or subjects that were not producing the best results, and enable our exchange managers to concentrate their efforts on the character of subjects that are in demand. This will have the effect of putting each company on its mettle, for only such productions as are good will secure business. Each company will specialize, to some extent, in the class or style of pictures they are most successful in producing, and eliminate the unprofitable product.

Better Outlook for Branch Managers.

"Another advantage of the new plan will be to offer some encouragement for branch managers," said Mr. Marion. "This will probably take the form of a profit-sharing plan and will make the manager a partner in the business. He will also be more independent than heretofore and will not be under obligation to push the pictures of any particular company, but to get the best results for his office. Pictures will be given him on consignment as the market for any particular production seems to demand and he will handle of the term," concluded Mr. Marion.
them to the best advantage, regardless of who produces them.

Liberal Use of Advertising.

"In the matter of advertising," Mr. Marion continued, "the bars are down. Any manufacturer may supply the branch managers with as much advertising matter as they see fit; there will be no limit. It stands to reason that a manufacturer will not use more than the picture can stand; and he need not use any if so disposed, but he is free to do so if he wants to.

"It will be seen that these changes in the policy of the General Film Company make that concern independent of the manufacturers and a true agency in the fullest sense

Some Kalem Comedies

A Bunch of Clever Laugh Makers for Early Release—Bud Duncan Playing Alone.

EVER since the first of the popular "Ham" comedies was released, Kalem comedies have possessed a style peculiarly their own. Each has contained a real plot and while burlesque in nature, entirely devoid of anything which might be deemed offensive by even the most sensitive "fans."

Among the comedies which Kalem Company is to issue during the latter part of November and the first two weeks in December, are four which possess unusual merit. Although Lloyd V. Hamilton is still on the sick list and hence was unable to take part in these productions, no comedies which have borne the Kalem trade mark have been more replete with genuine humor.

Scene from "Oh, Doctor!" (Kalem).

The first is "Oh, Doctor!" a burlesque released Tuesday, November 23d, which features Ethel Teare and Bud Duncan. It tells of how a couple of plumbers, called to repair some leaky pipes in a physician's house, masquerade as physicians when fair Pansy, a patient, enters. The fact that the real doctor is away at the time, enables the mechanics to carry on their deception. The medico's return, however, exposes the plumbers and results in some exceedingly funny situations.

Scene from "Only a Country Girl" (Kalem).

"Only a Country Girl," to be issued on November 30th, also features Miss Teare and diminutive Bud. In it a rivalry is waged between two shiftless swains for Ethel's hand. The rivals forget all about their love when an opportunity to steal a bankroll belonging to Ethel's father presents itself. In the end they lose both girl and money.

In "Minnie the Tiger," photoplay patrons and exhibitors will find one of the most original comedies of the year. This laugh-bringer, the first of the new comedies produced under the direction of William Beaudine, is to be released Tuesday, December 7th. A foreign nobleman, who poses as a mighty hunter, is Bud's rival for Ethel's affections. The nobleman almost wins out when a friendly tiger—the like of which has never before been seen on earth—proves the foreigner to be a coward and thus reunites Bud and the girl he loves.

"Almost a King" is one of the most magnificently staged comedies ever issued by Kalem company. Bud Duncan and Ethel Teare once more show their laugh-creating abilities, the former as a hobo who finds his pal elevated to a kingship, while Miss Teare enacts the role of the ruler's favorite dancer. A jealous queen and some unruly subjects who desire to see his majesty shuffle off this mortal coil, help the fun along. This subject is scheduled for release Tuesday, December 14th.

Little Zoe Bech

WHEN the Biograph Company of players left for the coast where pictures will be produced during the winter months, the party included one of the most fascinating children that ever moved in front of a camera. Her name is Zoe Bech. She is five years old, has had two years' photoplay experience and in due time is going to be a full-fledged leading lady. Zoe insists upon that even now. Her future career is all settled and she is just waiting to grow up to meet it.

Some day Zoe will be able to turn to the front pages in her scrap book of press clippings and give evidence that at the age of five she was interviewed like any other actress, and that like her sisters in the profession she spoke modestly of past accomplishments and hopefully of the future. She will recall that on her fifth birthday she told a World man how she began her career two years earlier at the Selig studio, under the direction of Oscar Eagle, and how Mr. Eagle made acting seem like the pleasantest sort of play.

Zoe Bech.

After appearing in a number of Selig pictures, Zoe went with the Biograph company directed by Edward Morrissey. She has been with Biograph ever since and the list of photoplays in which she has played important roles is somewhat imposing. It includes "The Inevitable," "Her Soul Revealed," "The Divided Locket," "A Much Needed Lesson," "Bobby's Bargain," "The Cancelled Mortgage," "The Candidate's Past," "Fate's Healing Hand," "Love's Melody," "A Letter to Daddy," "The Little Runaways," "The Law of Love," "The Ace of Diamonds," "Dora," "And by These Deeds," "Harvest," and "The Passing Storm,"

MOTION PICTURES IN COLOMBIA.

Medellin's 60,000 population has, in the past, supported three motion picture theaters, the Circo Espana, the Circo Apollo, and the Circo Olympia. The last named is the only theater showing high-grade photoplays, it having a contract for Italian films. However, owing to the war, this theater has now suspended its entertainments, and the other two are giving mixed programs, combining vaudeville with pictures, three times a week and charging 10 to 25 cents admission.

American films have not so far proved a success. As the "floating population" is very small, programs are changed constantly; only the most successful films can be shown more than once. The Spanish language is used exclusively for explanations.

A local company controls the supply of electric current and has a fixed charge for theater lighting. The current is alternating, but direct current can be had if required.

"Who Is Guilty?"

Newspaper Men Take Trip with LeVino and Parsons to Yonkers and See a Scene from "The Grist of the Mill" in the Grinding—Is Part of "Who Is Guilty?"

By Hanford C. Judson.

THE cut below is made from a photograph which by reason of the faces in it shines. Those in the center are newspaper men. We might add, if we fancied doing it, that around and by way of setting off this group of high-paid help, are Director Howell Hansell's artists, among them Emmy Wehlen, the talented Arrow leading woman, and Hector Dion, on her left hand, and also that the fay-like wisp of a girl is Bernice Sibeck, a noted dancer who has a prominent part in the picture, which, as you can see, is set in a cabaret.

Scene from "Who Is Guilty?" (Arrow).

The whole was made up just to entertain the newspaper men. Arrow Brand Le Vino and Pathe Parsons got it up for that purpose and when it was ready they corraled the bunch and whisked them off to Yonkers in a speedy trolley car-dodger. A stop was made at the Frankfort Inn where after the cramping journey the wild eyed ones were permitted to stretch forth their hands upon delectable viands. Then all repaired to the inner workshop of the craft where amid the blinking candlepowers, 'impression-making figures are led into the captivity of a film version for the sake of what's in the pockets—we mean the souls, what's in the souls of men.

In the studio, criss-crossed by the serpentine electric cables and partly choked with the lumber of pictures passed and yet to be, was what might have been taken for a restaurant by an eye like a camera's that could see only inside of certain chalk lines marked on the floor. But first as in order due, the gentlemen of the press were presented to charming Emmy Wehlen—she is that in truth, and made us all welcome, while by her conversatoin she showed that she was not of those whose sole object is to get a day's work done. It would seem that a real leading woman has to make her reading and much of her recreation also a part of her career, counting her profession worthy of a single hearted devotion. Afterwards we saw her act under the direction of Howell Hansell and when the scene was finished the director brashly let the camera look out on the grouped faces of the pencil pushing vagromo. What went on inside the camera during this experience is shown by what we print herewith. We can sympathize with the poor machine, but realize that it doesn't really help matters.

Among those of Director Hansell's players who are taking part in "Who Is Guilty" are the following:

Emmy Wehlen and Howard Estabrook, co-stars in "Who is Guilty?" produced for Pathe by Arrow Film Corporation; Howard Hansel, Arrow director-in-chief; A. F. Mayo, Hansel's assistant; Rene Guissart, camera man. The newspaper men were: F. C. Beecroft, Harvey Thew, T. C. Kennedy, Geo. Garvin, John Semler, P. A. Parsons, Pathe Exchange, Inc., Albert S. LeVino, Arrow Film Corporation, and the representative of the Moving Picture World.

Scenes taken represent a big cabaret for the second episode of "Who's Guilty?" entitled "Grist of the Mill." There were twenty-eight girls and an even number of men extras for the cabaret scene.

Miss Clarissa Selwynne, a famous English actress, who was prominent in the recent all-star production of "Diana of Dobsons," at the Kingsway Theater in London, and who last was seen on the American stage in "My Lady's Dress," with Mary Boland, plays Miss Wehlen's mother in both reels of the two-reel episode, "Grist of the Mill." She also appeared at the famous Garrick Theater in London as leading woman with Lena Ashwell and Arthur Bouchier.

The attention to detail paid by Director Hansel to his productions was seen in the table service in the cabaret. A fashionable New York caterer supplied the tables, linen, glassware, expensive china, etc. Instead of the usual movie table sets, things were as they would be in a fashionable New York restaurant. The whole set was used for just two scenes, one 30 and the other 34 feet long. Yet the set, with incidentals, etc., cost $700.

Charged $2.50 for Straight Pictures

In Town of 950 Population Exhibitor Baker on Opening Night Put Something Over on Brothers of the Big Cities.

HERE is a picture of the Strand theater of Britton, S. D. It is sent to the Moving Picture World by C. C. Baker, its owner. Mr. Baker incidentally remarks, in renewing his subscription for the coming year, that he has taken the World since its beginning, and adds: "I would not be without it. I have given up all other film publications, as the World covers the entire fieid."

Mr. Baker takes a just pride in his new house. At its opening recently there were present several factors unusual in the motion picture industry. Britton has a population of 950. Offsetting this small number of inhabitants for a theater town, however, is the fact that Britton is situated in "just the right spot for business." The proprietor for his opening night put on a program of straight pictures—and charged an admission of $2.50. His receipts were $480. Plainly, as Mr. Baker reports, "the people responded nicely."

The Strand is up-to-date in every particular. There is a good balcony. Many fans provide excellent ventilation. The walls are adorned with hand colored photos of the players, purchased from Kraus. The chairs are from the Steel Furniture Company. The screen is Mirroroide. The Twin City Scenic Company installed the scenery. In a booth 8 by 12 feet in dimensions, and built to conform to any fire ordinance, are two Motiograph machines.

Strand Theater, Britton, S. D.

Mr. Baker is using General Film Company service from the Minneapolis branch, managed by H. H. Buxbaum, who, as the Strand's owner remarks, "certainly looks after the interests of the exhibitors."

Kingery Corn Poppers Popular

Company Manufacturing Machines Reports That Many Theaters Have Found Them Also Profitable.

MANY motion picture theaters of medium size, as well as those of smaller dimensions, have had success following the installation of Kingery Corn Poppers and Peanut Roasters, manufactured by the Kingery Manufacturing Company of 421 Pearl avenue, Cincinnati. Not only has there been a profit, but also, according to reports of the company, a pleased clientele. These machines, which are neatly and solidly constructed, are placed in the lobbies of houses where there is no interference with ingress or egress. The quality of the product of the poppers and roasters is said to be unusually high.

Some November Vitagraphs

Several Good Features Promised for Thanksgiving Week—Sidney Drew in Comedy.

TWO exceptional pictures produced by the Western Vitagraph Company at Los Angeles, Cal., a Sonny Jim story and a Sidney Drew comedy comprise the single part pictures announced by the Vitagraph Company for their weekly program beginning Monday, November 22, a program that also includes a Broadway Star Feature and a two-part comedy feature.

From out of the West comes the Monday release, entitled "Love and Law," a comedy written by William Duncan, produced by Rollin S. Sturgeon and enacted by Mr. Duncan, George Stanley and Ann Drew.

Scene from "Love and Law" (Vitagraph).

One of the strongest dramas of the month, "Saints and Sinners," is announced as the release for Tuesday. It was written by Ouida Bergere and produced by Van Dyke Brooke with a cast including Maurice Costello, Leah Baird, Adele de Garde, Garry McGarry and Mr. Brooke. Mr. Costello, in the character of a bookworm, who cannot understand the social needs of his more vivacious wife, is seen at his best, while Miss Baird as his wife plays an emotional lead that is artistically perfect.

A Thanksgiving story, "Sonny Jim and the Family Party," by Elaine Sterne, in which Bobby Connelly is featured, is the announcement for Wednesday. The story was produced by Tefft Johnson, who selected a cast to support the little Vitagraph star that included Mabel Kelly, Karin Norman, Joe Halpin and Frances Connelly.

Scene from "Sonny Jim and the Family Party" (Vitagraph).

The Thanksgiving Day release will be "Ghosts and Fly Paper," a story, as its title implies, that has to do with ghosts, but, as they turn out to be flesh and blood spirits, what looks to be a tragedy develops into a delightful comedy, the Western Vitagraph Company, for the second time during the week, being responsible for a screen story that is unusually attractive. Anne Schaefer, Marguerite Reid, George Kunkel, Alfred Vosburg and Otto Lederer are responsible for its enactment.

Friday, the regular "Drew Day" release will be "All for the Love of a Girl," by Lulu Case Russell, in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are featured. The chairman of the publicity committee of the Woman Suffrage party (Mrs. Drew) and Mayor Hawkins (Mr. Drew) fall in love with each other and the Mayor is converted to the cause. During a speech he collapses and is taken to a hospital. Here the comedy is accentuated by a dream in which the Mayor sees himself attired in the latest feminine fashion of the year 1590 and is being walloped all over the place by huge manlike women, dressed in exaggerated Suffragette style.

An all-star cast features the release for Saturday, a two-part comedy-drama, entitled "A 'Model' Wife." Lillian Walker, Antonio Moreno, Louise Beaudet, L. Rogers Lytton and Lillian Burns enacted the story under the direction of Wilfrid North and succeeded in getting the last bit of comedy out of a manuscript that was overflowing with laughable material.

Ocean Film Completes "Life Without Soul"

AFTER having been engaged for a period of five solid weeks, without one day's let-up, Joseph W. Smiley, the head director of the Ocean Film Corporation, lately organized, completed the initial release of that company, "Life Without Soul," adapted by Jesse J. Goldburg, the vice-president and general manager of the company, from the classic, "Frankenstein," written by Mrs. Shelley.

The photoplay abounds in startling incidents and possesses just sufficient sensational scenes to whet the appetites of those desiring hazardous exploits.

The story is an unusual one, dealing with the experiences of a young scientist, who discovers a life-giving fluid and attempts to create a human being superior, mentally and physically, to his fellowmen.

A delightful love theme pervades the photoplay, and the scenic effects can best be judged by the statement that the company traveled to Jacksonville and St. Augustine, Fla., Savannah and Dahloniga, Ga., Arizona and northern New York, where the exterior scenes are largely laid.

Lucy Cotton.

The Ocean Film Corporation will proceed to immediately produce two five-part features a month, for a period of three months, after which it is expected that the organization will be so complete as to permit of the producing and releasing of one five-part feature a week.

Miss Lucy Cotton, who assumes the ingenue role in "Life Without Soul," the initial release of the Ocean Film Corporation, was chosen by Harrison Fisher, the artist, as the true type of southern beauty.

EMMY WEHLEN ONLY LOANED TO ARROW.

In order to correct an error regarding the status of Miss Emmy Wehlen as a Metro star, the Metro Pictures Corporation announces that Miss Wehlen is under a long-time contract to appear in Metro pictures produced by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. She has been granted permission to appear in a serial now being made by the Arrow Film Corporation for Pathe, and at the conclusion of her work in this serial she will appear in Metro pictures until the completion of her contract. This announcement is made because of a report that Miss Wehlen had completed her contract for Metro pictures.

I. S. PLAUT TO RETIRE.

In the very near future, I. S. Plaut, who has been operating for some time under the name of the I. S. P. Co., will retire from the film business. In closing out his affairs Mr. Plaut will dispose of a number of features that have made envious records, among these are "The Sacrifice of Pauline," "The Cellar of Death," "Was He a Coward?" and numerous others.

Mutual to Have Nine Comedies Weekly

These Will Include Six Varieties of the Lighter Sort of Screen Entertainment.

WITH the introduction of "Vogue" Films to the Mutual Program in December, there will be six distinct brands of straight comedy and nine comedy releases weekly which will go to the public through the Mutual Film Corporation.

"Vogue" films are being produced in Los Angeles, under the direction of Charles H. France. In the cast will be Priscilla Dean, Russ Powell and Lillian Brown Leighton. These comedies are to be "slap stick with a reason."

There are four directors of comedies busily at work at the Thanhouser studios at New Rochelle, since two funny pictures are released by that company under the brand name of "Falstaff" every week in the Mutual's program. Monday and Thursday are the days on which they appear.

Then there are the "Cub" comedies, in which George Ovey is the head liner, and which are a regular part of the Friday's output in the Mutual Program. Ovey is supported by George George. Also in the company are Louis Fitz Roy, Gordon MacGregor and Janet Sully.

Cissy Fitzgerald, the English comedienne, who appeared recently in two Casino Star Comedies in the Mutual Program, "A Corner in Cats," and "Zablitsky's Waterloo" has been reengaged for four additional comedies with the Gaumont Company, which are being especially written for her. Miss Fitzgerald will commence work next week.

The "Novelty" comedies are released regularly Mondays and Wednesdays. The "Novelty" release of November 24 is entitled "Taming a Grouch," and was written and produced by Edward McWade. In the leading role is William Sloan, whose appearance in such productions as "The Governor's Son," "1492," "Little Christopher," "The Girl from Paris" and the "French Maid," has established him as an actor of ability.

In addition to these, there are the American "Beauty" releases on Tuesdays and Saturdays. Of a different type of comedy is the "Buck Parvin in the Movies" series, produced from the stories by Charles E. Van Loan, which were published in the Saturday Evening Post. Under the title of "Mustang" brand, these pictures appear every fourth week. In them, Arthur Acord, the famous cowboy actor, plays the lead.

Another comedy, of still a different character is the weekly Gaumont animated cartoon "Keeping up with the Joneses," drawn by Harry Palmer, which occupies one-half of the Gaumont scenic "See America First."

RAVER SELLS BRITISH RIGHTS.

Harry R. Raver, president of the Raver Film Corporation, this week affixed his signature to the first long-time contract for the forthcoming Raver-Thomas feature film productions when the International Cinematograph Corporation, Ltd., of London, through its representative, Walter C. Betts, now in the United States, secured the Raver output for the United Kingdom.

Three weeks ago Mr. Betts, on learning that the Raver organization had begun the manufacture of "The Other Girl," the first of twenty-nine different plays from the pen of Augustus Thomas, approached Mr. Raver for an opportunity of fully inspecting this firm's facilities for producing, securing talent, its business policy, as well as substantiality and responsibility.

Mr. Betts, in commenting upon the contract, expressed his assurance that Raver productions would be shown only in the better class motion picture theaters and converted legitimate houses in his territory in perfect conformity with the manner of presentation of the same pictures in the United States. Incidentally, nearly fifty applications from different sections of this country are now on file for the various territories. The distribution will be accorded exacting care, high-class men only being considered.

BRAY VS. PALMER WITHDRAWN.

When the suit brought by John R. Bray against Harry Palmer, in which infringement of a process of making animated cartoons was alleged, was called by Judge Thomas of the United States District Court in New York on November 9, Mr. Bray withdrew his complaint. Mr. Palmer is at present doing cartoons for Gaumont, while Mr. Bray's productions appear among the Pathe productions. Bray claimed to be the inventor of the process of adapting cartoons to motion pictures. Upon his withdrawal of the complaint, Judge Thomas assessed the costs against him. It is believed that this will end the controversy.

KANSAS CENSORS INCAPABLE.

"There was a need for censorship of motion pictures and vaudeville acts, for the lewd and vulgar was creeping into the performances," remarks the editor of the Pittsburg (Kansas) Sun. "The National Board of Censorship, composed of fifty-one broad-minded men and women, should be sufficient, however, to guarantee clean pictures, and local censors have shown themselves capable of cleansing the vaudeville. But the Kansas board, which is composed of a preacher, a school teacher and an old maid, has shown itself entirely incapable of judging the good from the bad. Their boneheads have become the jest of the press and public in the state. They have passed a photoplay where a nude woman cavorts through a thousand feet or more of film, and bar such masterpieces as 'Carmen.' Could Geraldine Farrar, a big, clean, fine woman, and one of the world's greatest grand opera stars, afford to risk her reputation with a film that was not presentable? The mayor of Boston and other prominent men sat by her side when she viewed the first presentation of her work, and Bostonians, who are famed, for their intellectuality and Puritanism, made the event a holiday."

FROHMAN ON "MADAME BUTTERFLY."

Commenting on the statement of David Belasco to the effect that the motion picture adaptation of John Luther Long's "Madame Butterfly" produced by the Famous Players Film Co. has no connection with Mr. Belasco's dramatic version of the familiar story, Daniel Frohman, managing director of the film company, said:

"It would indeed be regrettable and unjust to both Mr. Belasco and Mr. Long if the supposition arose that Mr. Belasco's play formed the basis of the screen adaptation, nor has it been the intention of the Famous Players in any way to create that impression.

"Long's original story, to which we obtained the rights over a year ago, contains sufficient dramatic-pictorial action to fill all the requirements of the photoplay. The "Butterfly," which Mary Pickford enacts on the screen, will be an adaptation of Long's story, just as the Belasco play and the Puccini opera were adaptations of the story. Mr. Belasco himself is not more eager than I to correct any erroneous impression concerning the source of the motion picture version of the subject."

VIM COMEDY COMPANY IN FLORIDA.

This happy aggregation "underneath the sheltering palms" are the funmakers that are going to put Vim in the General Film program. This picture was taken upon the arrival of the Vim players at Jacksonville, Florida, outside of the Lubin studio. The Vim players will share the studio with Lubin during this winter.

Original Plays for Equitable

Arthur H. Spiegel Tells How He Interested the Foremost Dramatists in America in Writing Directly for the Screen.

IT REMAINED for Arthur H. Spiegel, the thirty-year-old president of the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation, to carry through an idea that more experienced men in the production of photoplays have applauded. For a long while now it has been pretty generally conceded that the supply of stage plays suitable for presentation on the screen was running short, and in casting about for a solution of the difficulty manufacturers have recognized the advantage of interesting playwrights of the first rank in writing original scenarios for motion pictures. They admitted that the employment of famous writers—the big dramatists of the country—probably would be worth every cent it cost, but seemingly they did not see fit to follow the belief to its logical conclusion. As president of a large mail order concern in Chicago, Mr. Spiegel is a business man accustomed to seconding thought by action. He is not afraid of innovations if they promise an improvement, and he is a firm believer in taking the lead and allowing others to follow. That is why the Equitable Corporation is about ready to announce a remarkable list of scenario writers. If the stories in Equitable pictures do not come up to scratch, it will be because the most successful dramatists in the country are unable to master the technique of the screen.

The Equitable is a new company, as companies go, and Mr. Spiegel is a new man in the photoplay business. He entered the ranks of producers without prejudices and unhampered by the worship of precedent. His first determination was to learn just what was needed in the making of the finest photoplays and after that to supply the needs, irrespective of what had been done by his predecessors. Men with whom he discussed the situation agreed with him on two points—that the greatest weakness in most photoplays is the story and that few stage plays offer adequate material for the screen. The pros and cons of turning stage successes into pictures were considered from all angles. As a business proposition the advertising value of a name was taken into account. Mr. Spiegel recognized that a number of companies had established their reputations on photoplay versions of works first seen on the stage; but he also recognized a growing dissatisfaction with results obtained from this source. Before making a radical change, however, he wanted to be certain that his conclusions were correct.

It happened that a number of plays—dramas, comedies and melodramas—of all descriptions were available for production by Equitable. Mr. Spiegel asked that all of them be carefully read by the scenario staff with a view to preparing detailed reports, noting the good and bad points of each, from the angle of the producer of photoplays. In almost every case it was found that the plays would have to be radically altered before a director could be given a workable script and that not infrequently the elimination of dialogue left a bare and almost valueless plot. This, of course, was only confirmation of what the great majority of manufacturers have conceded in private, if not in public.

The next step was to secure writers able to provide better material than that offered in the manuscripts of old plays. And now we will let Mr. Spiegel tell his own story as he told it to the interviewer: "I wanted something original, something that gets away from the everlasting triangle with the endless repetition of situations so like each other that it is difficult to tell one picture from another. It is easy to say, 'I want something original,' and it is yet another thing to find it. I knew that I must interest authors who had proved their capacity, or experiment with free lance writers, and this, of course, was out of the question. The average so-called original five-reel scenario is impossible, as everyone who has handled scripts realizes. If we were going to discard adaptations, our success depended upon securing men big enough to write something better.

"During the past two weeks I have talked with at least two dozen authors of the top rank, and the response has been far beyond my expectations. Almost without exception, they were not only interested in pictures but anxious to write for the screen themselves, if the inducement was sufficient. Eugene Walter was especially enthusiastic. He expressed himself as being anxious to master the technical requirements of photoplays, and with that end in view is going to study pictures in the making. He will discuss his stories with the director in order to learn just what can and what cannot be done in pictures; and other authors with whom we are on the verge of closing contracts have shown a similar wish for co-operation. In every instance where a contract is signed we will have an option on all of the original work for the screen done by the writer. It is probable that some of their stories will be used by the World Film and Paragon producers.

"Among those with whom we are negotiating, in addition to Mr. Walter, are Channing Pollock, Rennold Wolf, Willard Mack, Rachael Crothers, James Montgomery, Mary Roberts Reinhart and Edwin Milton Royle. I believe that able directors are the first necessity for a producing company, and we have them; that writers with ideas are the second, and now we have them, too; the third requirement being a competent cast. No matter what we pay a star, a director is expected to find suitable types for every role. We do not ask one player to carry the picture."

In closing his account of Equitable plans, Mr. Spiegel spoke of the great care being expended on settings in both of the company's studios that every scene might have an appropriate background.

Craufurd Kent

BORN in Shepherd's Bush, England, not many years ago, Craufurd Kent began at a most tender age to look longingly at the stage as a future for himself. During his early schooling he displayed a wondrous ability in his studies of music and as early as twelve years he had made his debut on the concert stage as one of the leading boy sopranos of England. His schooling was completed at Godolphin College at Hammersmith, England, where for three years he was master at the piano, a position dignified and known for its import.

Craufurd Kent.

Following the completion of his college term, Mr. Kent began a concert tour of England, singing in both concert and oratorio at nearly all of the leading auditoriums of the country, and also Scotland, Ireland and France. After two years, the lure of vaudeville attracted him, and for more than two years he appeared in the halls of England in a singing act, doing the arias of grand opera. His first appearance in musical comedy was with a number of the Gilbert & Sullivan revivals, following this with an appearance of "The Geisha Girl."

Little less than four years ago Mr. Kent was persuaded to come to America to accept the tenor role in "Adele." This engagement he followed with an appearance in "The Pink Lady" and "Miss Gibbs," returning with each production to his native land and back to America again finally to accept an offer to appear in motion pictures. His first appearance before the camera was made but a few months ago, but an instantaneous success has been accorded him. He will be remembered for his appearances in "The Deep Purple," "Nedra," "Greater Love Hath No Man," "Little Miss Brown," "The Pretenders" and others.

His first appearance with the Lubin Company is in the role of Garrick in Anthony P. Kelly's story, "The Rift in the Lute," which is being produced by Director Joseph Kaufman.

JOHN JARROTT WITH KLEINE.

Among a number of well-known members of the theatrical profession in New York City added to the working forces at the George Kleine studios last week was John Jarrott, long and familiarly known to the theatergoing public of two continents. Jarrott has a long list of successes to his credit, among which are the star parts in the "Follies Bergere" and his own production of "Come On" which enjoyed a long and remarkably prosperous run quite recently at the Empire theater. Mr. Jarrott, with his famous dancing partner, Joan Sawyer, was the dancing hit of continental capitals as well as the feature attraction of every vaudeville bill on which their names appeared.

Well-Known Film Man on "Ancona"

Ugo De Serra, Cines' Representative, Was on His Way Here with Valuable Negatives—No News of His Fate.

AMONG the passengers of the ill-fated "Ancona" was Mr. Ugo De Serra, a representative of the Cines Film Company of Rome. It is not known whether he was saved or lost. The Italian government maintains the strictest censorship and nothing could be learned at the offices of the company which owned the torpedoed ship.

Mr. Serra came here early in October to look over conditions here and study the American film market. He was called back to Rome by cable just about a month ago. The Cines Company has several valuable negatives which they want to sell in this market. Mr. Serra was recalled to get the negatives and bring them to this country. Among these negatives there were two deemed especially fine and valuable, a "Life of Christ" in seven reels, and a filmed version of "Carmen" with Marguerite Sylva in the leading role.

Repeated inquiries at the office of the steamship company developed the fact that the home office has so far ignored all cables from this side asking for a passengers' list. One of the officials of the company, speaking to a representative of the Moving Picture World, said they might receive the list at any moment and they might not get it for another week.

"Chief" Laura Oakley

LAURA OAKLEY, chief of police at Universal City, is one of those whose mere presence gives anyone a formidable impression of the majesty of the law. She has everything that a good chief of police ought to have—size, wigs, false mustaches, paint, tin-badge and a revolver, to say nothing of a club, not a stuffed one, either.

Laura Oakley.

As chief of police of Universal city, Laura Oakley has the distinction of being the first suffragette to be recognized for such a high office, and the manner in which she executes the duties of the office is a credit to her, as well as to the entire suffrage movement. But there are really not many occasions for her to exercise the duties of the office, because Universal city is quite the most peaceful city in the world. When not busily occupied with the police duties of the city, she acts for pictures.

"Being chief of police, I suppose I receive more letters from 'aspirants' than most actresses," said Miss Oakley. "They seem to pick on me for advice, sending me pictures of themselves. I reply to each in as sincere a manner as possible, but it taxes one's mental power to find sane replies for some of the insane questions. And then so many think that a photoplay actress has a soft snap. Can you imagine it?"

FRED DOBSON MAKES RECORD.

Taking over 50,000 feet of film in his last five productions for Pallas Pictures and not a single retake is the latest record hung up by Cameraman Fred Dobson. Not that such work is unusual among the clever operators in the profession, but it calls attention anew to the veteran record Fred Dobson has made for himself.

Starting eighteen years ago with Lumiere's pictures in Canada, Fred Dobson joined the Biograph in 1898 and in the ensuing nine years was electrician and operator, carpenter, scenic artist and photographer. It was the period when Biograph productions were dominant, and through his association with Griffith and the other graduates of this remarkable training school which has contributed so much to the present development of the business Dobson now enjoys a unique prestige.

Artist Selects Raver Star for Model

FRANCES THOMPSON, the pulchritudinously dashing brunette who interprets the role of Myrtle Morrison, the "Dancing Venus" in the forthcoming Augustus Thomas production of "The Other Girl" has had a signal and lasting compliment paid to her uncommon beauty. She has been selected as model by one of this country's leading magazine frontispiece artists, Carl Van Buskirk, whose specialization in front cover faces of freshly colored vivacious types has made him both fame and fortune.

Frances Thompson.

It happened this way: Mr. Van Buskirk and Percy Winter, Director of Productions for the Raver Company, have known each other for many years. One evening last week the artist paid Mr. Winter a visit at the latter's hotel. The director extended an invitation to the artist to witness the filming of some scenes of the production at the Staten Island Studio. On Friday last the noted portrait painter availed himself of Mr. Winter's offer and while observing the action, discovered the wealth of beauty in face and form possessed by Miss Thompson. He suggested an introduction which the director arranged. The comely brunette recognized her opportunity and consented to pose for the artist in his Manhattan studio. This work will keep her busy for some time after she is through with her role in the Thomas play.

Frances Thompson is a decided American type, luxuriant with the sunshine of youth, Southern color (she originally hails from Dallas, Tex.), plumpness of form and symmetry of face that should promote her to the topmost ranks of her chosen profession in prompt fashion. Her hair is a rich brown tinged with a suggestion of red, and hangs over a foot below her waist line when allowed to flow. Her eyes are a vivacious dark brown set off by two dimpled cheeks and an even row of pearly teeth. Mounting this all is a keen and intelligent expression.

The little Raver star's experience is unique in that it is the opposite manner of procedure of most pretty models, who usually pose for the artist first and then break into pictures.

Mr. Van Buskirk is to be complimented for the selection of this type for his talented brush.

A. J. HUDSON, ASSISTANT TO HODKINSON.

Alfred J. Hudson, for the last two years president's secretary of the Thompson-Starrett Company, 51 Wall street, New York City, has joined the Paramount Pictures Corporation in the capacity of assistant to W. W. Hodkinson. Mr. Hudson was born in New York City, studied law at the New York Law School and practised for seven years. At one time he was with Delancey Nicoll. Mr. Hudson brings to his new position a great deal of business experience. While he knows nothing of motion pictures except that he likes to see them, it is expected that his advice in the many problems which confront the heads of such an organization as the Paramount will be valuable.

NEW PRODUCERS IN THE FIELD.

The Aurora Films Plays Corporation has recently been organized to produce feature films with well-known players in the cast. Their first production will feature little Matty Roubert in a five-part photoplay to be called "The Waif." The Victor studio has been leased for a long term, to make the interiors; half of their first picture is already complete.

The officers of the Aurora Films Plays Corporation are: Charles Mundt, president and treasurer; William L. Roubert, vice-president and general manager.

"The Red Circle," a Strong Serial

Horkheimer Brothers Have Already Completed One-Half of the Fourteen Episodes.

By George Blaisdell.

AT THE offices of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, 1600 Broadway, last Saturday, H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of the company, showed on his screen six of the fourteen episodes which will constitute a new serial. "The Red Circle," the general title of the production was written by Will M. Ritchey, scenario head of the Balboa Company, from the basic idea of Mr. Horkheimer. The latter intimated that the completed script represented the thought and application of the two for nine months. That this has not been in vain is evident from the showing made by the first six episodes, each of which is in two reels.

"The Red Circle" is written with the thoroughness characteristic of the work of Mr. Ritchey. First of all, there is a consistent plot—there are present not only possibilities, but probabilities. The story runs smoothly. The exciting incidents are every-day incidents, of the sort of which the man in the street is familiar. No attempt is made to depend on the spectacular, on the unusual.

The story, as we may judge it from the episodes shown, is based on the power of heredity, of the taint of criminality that runs through a family. One of the leads is a young woman, born of this family, but reared in the best of environment. In her the taint takes a benevolent twist. While her acts are outside of the law, at the same time in a large way they are on the side of the public as against the few. This is illustrated, if we may be permitted to touch on the action, by her stealing and destroying a package of notes held by a conscienceless loan shark or later in destroying a device for man-killing on a huge scale. The significance of the title is in the livid red circle which appears on the back of the hand of the young woman at different times. It develops in the course of the story that it is when the young woman is thinking of crime, even of a benevolent degree, that the red scar comes to the surface.

The other featured character is that of a detective who is engaged to arrest the person who has committed the depredations. There is a time when he is inclined to suspect the young woman, with whom he is very friendly, but she skillfully lulls his fears and throws the chase in another direction.

Ruth Roland and Frank Mayo portray these two parts. Miss Roland is too well known to patrons of picture theaters to need any word of introduction here. It is unnecessary to say that into her work in "The Red Circle" she puts her best effort, and that is saying much. Mr. Mayo is not so well known on the screen, but it is a safe hazard he will be when the series is finished. He is a grandson of that sterling American actor of the same name who was known to all theatergoers a quarter of a century ago. The young man is an actor worthy of his name. He has a pleasing appearance; he possesses magnetism.

There are other strong players in the cast. Daniel Gilfether is Circle Jim, who proves to be the father of Sylvia Travis. By the way, how the daughter in infancy is separated from her father is material for an interesting episode. Mr. Gilfether does splendid work in the opening chapters. Corinne Grant is Sylvia's nurse. Miss Grant also contributes much to the acting strength of the series. Other players are Mollie McConnell, who portrays Mrs. Travis; Edward Peters, who is the supposed son of Circle Jim; Makato Inokuchi, the butler, and Gordon Sackville, the chief of police.

Mr. Horkheimer said it has not yet been determined through what medium "The Red Circle" will be released, although he expects to be able to make a definite announcement in a few days.

VIRGINIA PEARSON APPEARS IN PERSON.

Virginia Pearson, the beautiful Vitagraph star, who makes her initial appearance under this banner in "The Turn of the Road," received the hearty congratulations of her friends who came to the New York theater on Wednesday evening, November 10, to witness the metropolitan debut of this production.

On conclusion of the final scene of "The Turn of the Road," the New York theater audience, which packed the house to the doors, enthusiastically applauded the film. On presenting Miss Pearson to the audience, the popularity of this chaming lady was effectively demonstrated by the prolonged reception accorded her.

Maude Healy Optimistic

Kleine Player Likes Pictures and Believes They Help Stage Acting.

MISS MAUDE FEALY, who has just completed her first production under the George Kleine management, "Bondwomen," has some interesting things to say concerning the effect of motion pictures in bringing about a revival of one-act plays and rejuvenation of the palmy stock days. Says Miss Fealy, "They will come again just as the fashions change.

"Moving pictures sharpen the curiosity of the public to see the actor in person. I am very fond of my work in the pictures. It means a permanent abode, and after years of traveling that means a great deal of comfort. Work in the pictures also means a great deal of time spent in the open air and regular hours, which spells health, and then the pictures dispense with a terrific strain of memorizing lengthy parts for stock work. Besides, the pictures are a great educator for the actors as well as the public, as much research is necessary in producing accurately various historical plays, and the actor has the opportunity of giving the public in one year the number of productions that on the stage would take ten years. In other words, the three weeks spent in rehearsing a play in a stage production before its initial performance, in pictures is spent in producing the picture (provided it is a feature of four reels), and at the end of the three weeks we know it will reach thousands of the public. We in the picture world start on a fresh production to reach thousands of more, and so on throughout the year. Whereas for the theater, we would be still presenting the one play to a much smaller community for the entire season, provided it proved a success, and if not, more time would be wasted in preparing a new play for the public of the theater.

"I think pictures will bring back the one-act plays. They teach us brevity—good pictures, I mean; but when they are padded and drawn out they, like speaking plays, fail. Pictures teach us to condense matters and tell more in fewer words. But just at present the public is showing by its fondness for pictures that 'speech is silver and silence is golden,' and so we must rest our voices—but only for a time—and then favorites will have to be heard as well as seen, and thus bring the real drama back to its own.

"As for the revival of the palmy stock days, I think they will come again; just as the fashions change, so changes the public's taste. We have a run on costume plays—the plays of Shakespeare—which hold their own for a time, then die out, to be revived successfully later for a few years, only to die out again. The play dealing with western life is successful, which means a deluge of plays dealing with the same locality. Plays dealing with crooks and those with the eternal trio have their fling, and a successful one means a production of many along the same line, which gives the public what it wants when it wants it. So, as 'every dog has his day and every cat her night,' so does every variety of play get its showing.

"Change, perpetual change, is the keynote of the theatrical world, the same as it is with life."

"Bondwomen" will be released through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service, December 15.

DOES NOT ADVOCATE THE NUDE.

Editor Moving Picture World, New York City:

Dear Sir—There has appeared in several of the trade papers an interview with me, which interview has been wrongly captioned, insomuch as it conveys the impression that I advocate the nude in moving pictures. The original caption of this interview as submitted by our Publicity Department was "'Inspiration,' a Study in Thanhouser Ideals," and any change that tends to create the impression that I advocate the nude in moving pictures is wrong and should be corrected.

I wish to state that I do not advocate the nude in moving pictures. I am absolutely opposed to the nude in moving pictures unless it is employed to serve a definite and unquestioned purpose of artistic and educational value; unless it is employed in a picture which can properly be exhibited before any audience with perfect propriety.

The fact that our five reel Mutual Masterpicture "Inspiration" was viewed and passed on by the National Board of Censorship without a single alteration will indicate that it is an example of the kind I stand sponsor for, and that must speak for itself. Yours very truly,

EDWIN THANHOUSER.

R. G. Peltier of Mt. Clemens, Mich.

Interesting History of a Successful Exhibitor Who Overcame Many Difficulties in His Upward Climb.

WHILE in the beautiful little health resort of Mount Clemens, Mich., I called on R. G. Peltier, manager and part owner of the Bijou, the "theater beautiful," with a seating capacity of 1,000 and representing an outlay of $75,000. Before making myself known to this genial manager and wide-awake showman, I had seen several of the presentations given, and was so pleased by the excellence of the programs and the conduct of the theater, that I determined to add to the pleasure by meeting the man who was responsible for it all.

R. G. Peltier.

The accompanying cut will reveal to the reader that Mr. Peltier is no ordinary moving picture theater manager. He is live from his finger tips to his toes, and has a business thoroughness that would have gained him success in any other line of endeavor suited to his talents. He is never willing to wait to see what others will do, but acts on his own initiative, and while he is willing to listen to the advice of others, he always considers it carefully from his own viewpoint before taking action. The following brief history of his rise from small beginnings to his present position will show that he has had an up-hill fight, but his face reveals that he has lost none of his vim or optimism.

Away back in 1906 Mr. Peltier was part owner of a small penny arcade in Mt. Clemens, famous for its medicinal baths throughout this country and Canada. In his own vernacular: "Six months afterward I was a tramp, having lost my home and $3,000 besides. I went to my partner, George John, telling him that I could bear the strain no longer, and asked him to buy me out. Mr. John refused to buy, stating that the business would be of little use to him without me, and so, instead of buying me out, he sold out to me. The deal was effected by my placing another mortgage on my mother's home."

Shortly after this Mr. Peltier went to Detroit and rented the two-reel Edison picture, "The Life of Napoleon," from Arthur Caille, then the manager of the Casino theater in that city, who got his service from the Pittsburgh Calcium Light & Film Co. This was the starting point of his success, and, as he had always staked his reputation on the future of the moving picture business, he was more than ever resolved to make good. He made $75 on the week with the Edison picture, which, ever since, he has called his "savior." He has never had a losing week since.

From that time until the present Mr. Peltier has successively increased the capacity of his house from 90 to 125, to 200 and to 450, and then to its present capacity of 1,000.

The Bijou of today was especially built for moving pictures, and a good view of the screen is to be had from any seat in the house, without distortion to the pictures. There are 590 commodious seats on the ground floor, while the balcony seats 362, and there are 48 box seats besides. The present Bijou was opened Feb. 12, 1913. Mr. Peltier used General Film Company's service at the time, and boasts of the fact that he is the oldest patron of that service in Michigan. He took his service for eight years from Al. J. Gilligham, manager of the General Film Company's office in Detroit, and Mr. Gilligham, whom I saw afterwards in Detroit, stated that Mr. Peltier had always been a most desirable customer.

At that time Mr. Peltier charged five cents admission for one reel and one illustrated song, but as time went on he increased his program to two reels and a song for 10 cents. At present the prices for regular programs are 10 and 15 cents, while on Fridays, 15, 20, and 25 cents are charged for a special "Blue Ribbon" program, for which all seats in the house are reserved. The regular programs at 10 and 15 cents are comprised of six reels, which include the product of the Paramount, Metro, Equitable, Gold Rooster, Fox and the General Film Company's regular program. In the special "Blue Ribbon" program he uses leading features of the companies mentioned and also of V-L-S-E., Inc., George Kleine and K. & E.

Mr. Peltier lays much stress on his advertising, which he conducts in an up-to-date manner. He has a four-page weekly house bulletin, quarto size, a fine showing of posters and stands in front of the house and in prominent locations, and also uses 10 to 20 inches in the daily paper.

I saw for myself that Mr. Peltier is always anxious to accompany his big features with appropriate music; but, of course, in a town of this size, he is rather handicapped for musical talent. He is about to install a large pipe organ, which, in addition to a piano, will furnish him about the best accompaniment for his audiences. At present he uses an orchestra of three or four pieces.

Mr. Peltier told me that he is his own censor. Happily, there is no city censorship, as the good people of Mt. Clemens rely thoroughly on Mr. Peltier's judgment. Mr. Peltier is so rigorously careful in this respect that he has often paid for the rental of a picture before viewing it, and after seeing it would not show it in his house, believing that it might offend his patrons and destroy the confidence in his policy.
